TO'NNAGE. n. f. [from ton.] A custom or impost due for merchandise brought or carried in tons from or to other nations, after a certain rate in every ton. Covel.
Tonnage and poundage upon merchandizes were collected, refused to be settled by act of parliament. Clarendon.

TO'NSIL. n. f. [tonsille, Fr. tonsilla, Lat.]
Tonsils or almonds are two round glands placed on the sides of the basis of the tongue, under the common membrane of the fauces, with which they are covered; each of them hath a large oval sinus, which opens into the fauces, and in it there are a great number of lesser ones, which discharge themselves, through the great sinus, of a mucous and slippery matter, into the fauces, larynx, and oesophagus, for the moistening and lubricating these parts. Quincy.

TO'NSURE. n. f. [tonsura, Fr. tonsura, Lat.] The act of clipping the hair; the state of being thorn.
The vestals, after having received the tonsure, suffered their hair to come again, being here full grown, and gathered under the veil. Addison.

TOO. adv. [to, Saxon.]
1. Over and above; overmuch; more than enough. It is used to augment the signification of an adjective or adverb to a vicious degree.
Groundless prejudices and weaknesses of conscience, instead of tenderness, mislead too many others, too many, otherwise good men. Sprat's Sermons.
It is too much to build a doctrine of so mighty consequence upon so obscure a place of scripture. Locke.
These ridiculous stories abide with us too long, and too far influence the weaker part of mankind. Watts.

2. It

TOO

2. It is sometimes doubled to encrease its emphasis; but this reduplication always seems harsh, and is therefore laid aside. Oh, that this too solid flesh would melt. Shakespeare. Sometimes it would be full, and then Oh! too soon decrease again; Eclips'd sometimes, that 'twou'd so fall, There would appear no hope at all. Suckling.
3. Likewise; also. See what a scourge is laid upon your hate; And I, for winking at your discords too, Have lost a brace of kinsmen. Shakespeare. Romeo and Juliet. Let on my cup no wars be found, Left those incite to quarrels too, Which wine itself enough can do. Oldham. The arriving to such a disposition of mind as shall make a man take pleasure in other men's sins, is evident from the text and from experience too. South's Sermons. It is better than letting our trade fall for want of current pledges, and better too than borrowing money of our neighbours. Locke. Let those eyes that view The daring crime, behold the vengeance too. Pope. Took, the preterite, and sometimes the participle passive of take. Thy foldiers All levied in my name, have in my name Took their discharge. Shakespeare. King Lear. He is God in his friendship as well as in his nature, and therefore we sinful creatures are not took upon advantages, nor consumed in our provocations. South's Sermons. Suddenly the thunder-clap Took us unprepared. Dryden. The same device enclosed the ashes of men or boys, maids or matrons; for when the thought took, though at first it received its rise from such a particular occasion, the ignorance of the sculptors applied it promiscuously. Addison. This took up some of his hours every day. Spectator. The riders would leap them over my hand; and one of the emperor's huntsmen, upon a large courser, took my foot, shoe and all. Swift. Leaving Polybus, I took my way To Cyrrha's temple. Pope's Statius.
- TOOL. n. f. [tol, tool, Saxon.] 1. Any instrument of manual operation. In mulberries the sap is towards the bark only, into which if you cut a little it will come forth; but if you pierce it deeper with a tool it will be dry. Bacon. Arm'd with such gard'ning tools as art, yet rude, Guileless of fire had form'd. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix. The ancients had some secret to harden the edges of their tools. Addison.
2. A hiring; a wretch who acts at the command of another. He'd choose To talk with wits in dirty shoes; And scorn the tools with flars and garters, So often seen carefing Chaires. Swift.
- TO TOOT. v. n. [Of this word, in this sense, I know not the derivation: perhaps tozan, Saxon, contracted from topezan, to know or examine.] To pry; to peep; to search narrowly and filly. It is still used in the provinces, otherwise obsolete. I cast to go a shooting, Long wand'ring up and down the land, With bow and bolts on either hand, For birds and bushes tooting. Spenser's Past.
- TOOTH. n. f. plural teeth. [toð, Saxon; tand, Dutch.] The teeth are the hardest and smoothest bones of the body; they are formed in the cavities of the jaws, and about the seventh or eighth month after birth they begin to pierce the edge of the jaw, tear the periostrum and gums, which being very sensible create a violent pain: the dentes incisivi, or fore teeth of the upper jaw, appear first, and then those of the lower jaw, because they are the thinnest and the sharpest; after them come out the canini or eye teeth, and last of all the molars or grinders, because they are thickest and bluntest: about the seventh year of age they are thrust out by new teeth which then begin to sprout, and if these teeth be lost they never grow again; but some have been observed to shed their teeth twice: about the one-and-twentieth year the two last of the molars spring up, and they are called dentes sapientiae. Quincy. Avaunt, you curs! Be thy mouth or black or white, Teeth that poison if it bite. Shakespeare. King Lear. Defert delivers with characters of brass A fortified defence against the teeth of time, And razure of oblivion. Shakespeare. The teeth alone among the bones continue to grow in length during a man's whole life, as appears by the unlighty length of one tooth when its opposite happens to be pulled out. Ray on the Creation.

TOO

2. Taste; palate. These are not dishes for thy dainty teeth; What, hast thou got an ulcer in thy mouth? Why stand'st thou picking? Dryden.
3. A tine, prong, or blade, of any multifid instrument. The priests servant came while the flesh was in seething, with a flesh hook of three teeth. 1 Sam. ii. 13. I made an instrument in fashion of a comb, whose teeth, being in number sixteen, were about an inch and an half broad, and the intervals of the teeth about two inches wide. Newton's Opticks.
4. The prominent part of wheels, by which they catch upon correspondent parts of other bodies. The edge whereon the teeth are is always made thicker than the back, because the back follows the edge. Mason. In clocks, though the screws and teeth be never so smooth, yet if they be not oiled will hardly move, though you dog them with never so much weight; but apply a little oil they whirl about very swiftly with the teeth part of the force. Ray.
5. TOOTH and nail. With one's utmost violence; with every means of attack or defence. A lion and bear were at teeth and nail which should carry off a fawn. LeStrange's Fables.
6. To the TEETH. In open opposition. It warms the very sickness in my heart, That I shall live and tell him to his teeth, Thus diddest thou. Shakespeare's Hamlet. The action lies In his true nature, and we ourselves compell'd, Ev'n to the teeth and forehead of our faults, To give in evidence. Shakespeare. The way to our horses lies back again by the houle, and then we shall meet 'em full in the teeth. Dryden.
7. To cast in the TEETH. To insult by open exprobration. A wife body's part it were not to put out his fire, because his fond and foolish neighbour, from whom he borrowed wherewith to kindle it, might cast him therewith in the teeth, saying, were it not for me thou wouldst freeze, and not be able to heat thyself. Hooker, b. iv.
8. In spite of the teeth. Notwithstanding threats exprest by frowning teeth; notwithstanding any power of injury or defence. The guiltness of my mind drove the grossness of the folly into a received belief, in despite of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were fables. Shakespeare. The only way is not to grumble at the lot they must bear in spite of their teeth. LeStrange.
- TO TOOTH. v. a. [from tooth.] 1. To furnish with teeth; to indent. Then faws were tooth'd, and sounding axes made. Dryden. The point hooked down like that of an eagle; and both the edges toothed, as in the Indian crow. Grew's Museum. Get a pair of tongs like a smith's tongs, stronger and toothed at the end. Mortimer's Husbandry.
2. To lock in each other. It is common to tooth in the stretching course two inches with the stretcher only. Mason's Mech. Exercis.
- TOOTHACH. n. f. [tooth and ach.] Pain in the teeth. There never yet was the philosopher That could endure the toothach patiently, However at their ease they talk'd like gods. Shakespeare. He that sleeps feels not the toothach. Shakespeare. Cymbeline. I have the toothach. —What, sigh for the toothach! Which is but an humour or a worm. Shakespeare. One was grown desperate with the toothach. Temple.
- TOOTHDRAWER. n. f. [tooth and draw.] One whose business is to extract painful teeth. Nature with Scots, as toothdrawers, hath dealt, Who use to string their teeth upon their belt. Claveland. When the teeth are to be dislocated, a toothdrawer is consulted. Wifeman's Surgery.
- TOOTHED. adj. [from tooth.] Having teeth.
- TOOTHLESS. adj. [from tooth.] Wanting teeth; deprived of teeth. Deep-dinted wrinkles on her cheek she draws, Sunk are her eyes, and toothless are her jaws. Dryden. They are fed with flesh minced small, having not only a sharp head and snout, but a narrow and toothless snout. Ray.
- TOOTHPICK. n. f. [tooth and pick.] An instrument by which the teeth are cleaned from any thing sticking between them. I will fetch you a toothpicker from the farthest inch of Asia. Shakespeare. Much ado about nothing. He and his toothpick at my worship's meals. Shakespeare. Preserve my woods, wherof, if this course hold, there will hardly be found in some places enough to make a toothpick. Houel's England's Tears. Lentick excels; if toothpicks of the lentick be wanting, of a quill then make a toothpick. Sandys. Lentick

 Art thou come to torment us before the time? Mat. viii.
 2. To tease; to vex with importunity.
 3. To put into great agitation. [tormente, Fr. a great storm.]
 They soaring on main wing torment the air. Milton.
TORMENTED. adj. [tórmenter, French.]
 1. Any thing that gives pain.
 They brought unto him all sick people that were taken with divers diseases and torments, and he healed them. Mat.
 2. Pain; misery; anguish.
 3. Penal anguish; torture.
 No prisoners there, inforc'd by torments, cry;
 But fearless by their old tormentors lie. Sandys's Paraph.
 Not sharp revenge, not hell itself can find
 A hercer torment than a guilty mind,
 Which day and night doth dreadfully accuse,
 Condemns the wretch, and fill the charge renews. Dryd.
TORMENTOR. n. f. [from torment.]
 1. One who torments; one who gives pain.
 He called to me for succour, desiring me at least to kill him, to deliver him from those tormentors. Sidney, b. ii.
 Let his tormentor conscience find him out.
 The commandments of God being conformable to the dictates of right reason, man's judgment condemns him when he violates any of them; and so the finner becomes his own tormentor. South's Sermons.
 2. One who inflicts penal tortures.
 No prisoners there, inforc'd by torments, cry,
 But fearless by their old tormentors lie. Sandys on Job.
 Hadst thou full pow'r to kill,
 Or measure out his torments by thy will;
 Yet, what could'st thou, tormentor, hope to gain,
 Thy loss continues unrepaired by pain. Dryden's Juv.
 The ancient martyrs passed through such new inventions and varieties of pain as tired their tormentors. Addison.
TÓRMENTIL. n. f. [tormentilla, Fr. tormentilla, Lat.] Septfoil. A plant.
 The root has been used for tanning of leather, and accounted the best affringent in the whole vegetable kingdom. Miller.
 Refresh the spirits externally by some epithemata of balm, bugloss, with the powder of the roots of tormentil. Wifeman.
TORN. part. pass. of tear.
 Ye shall not eat any flesh that is torn of beasts. Exod. xxii.
TORNA'DO. n. f. [tornado, Spanish.] A hurricane; a whirlwind.
 Nimble convulsions strike the eye,
 And bold tornado's bluster in the sky. Garth.
TORPEDO. n. f. [Lat.] A fish which while alive, if touched even with a long stick, benumbs the hand that so touches it, but when dead is eaten safely.
TORPENT. adj. [torpens, Latin.] Benumbed; struck motionless; not active; incapable of motion.
 A comprehensive expedient to assist the frail and torpent memory through so multifarious an employment.  Evelyn.
TÓRPID. adj. [torpidus, Latin.] Numb; motionless; sluggish; not active.
 Without heat all things would be torpid and without motion. Ray on the Creation.
 The fun awakes the torpid sap. Thomson's Spring.
TÓRPIDNESS. n. f. [from torpid.] The state of being torpid.
 Though the object about which it is exercised be poor, little, and low, yet a man hath this advantage by the exercise of this faculty about it, that it keeps it from rest and torpidness, it enlargeth and habituates it for a due improvement even about nobler objects. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
TÓRPTUDE. n. f. [from torpid.] State of being motionless; numbness; sluggishness.
 Some, in their most perfect state, subsist in a kind of torpitude or sleeping state. Derham.
TÓRPOR. n. f. [Latin.] Dulness; numbness; inability to move; dulness of sensation.
 Motion discusses the torpor of solid bodies, which, beside their motion of gravity, have in them a natural appetite not to move at all. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 763.
TORREFACTION. n. f. [torrefaction, Fr. torrefacio, Latin.] The act of drying by the fire.
 When torrefied sulphur makes bodies black, why does torrefaction make sulphur itself black. Boyle on Colours.
 If it have not a sufficient insolation it looketh pale; if it be sunned too long it suffereth torrefaction. Brown.
TO TÓRRIFY. v. a. [torrifier, Fr. torrefacio, Lat.] To dry by the fire.
 In the sulphur of bodies torrified consist the principles of inflammability. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 The Africans are more peculiarly scorched and torrified from the sun by addition of dryness from the soil. Brown.
 Divers learned men assign, for the cause of blackness, the sooty steam of adust, or torrified sulphur. Boyle on Colours.
 Torrefied sulphur makes bodies black; I desire to know why torrefaction makes sulphur itself black? Boyle.
 Another clifter is compoed of two hemina of white wine, half a hemina of honey, Egyptian nitre torrefied a quadrant. Arbutnot on Coins.

TÓRRENT. n. f. [torrent, Fr. torrens, Lat.]
 1. A sudden stream raised by summer showers.
 The near in blood,
 Forsake me like the torrent of a flood: Sandys on Job.
 Will no kind flood, no friendly rain,
 Disguise the marshal's plain disgrace;
 No torrents swell the low Mohayne,
 The world will say he durst not pass. Prior.
 2. A violent and rapid stream; tumultuous current.
 Not far from Caucasus are certain steep falling torrents, which wash down many grains of gold, as in many other parts of the world; and the people there inhabiting use to set many fleeces of wool in these descents of waters, in which the grains of gold remain, and the water passeth through, which Strabo witnesseth to be true. Raleigh.
 The memory of those who, out of duty and conscience, opposed that torrent which did overwhelm them, should not lose the recompence due to their virtue. Clarendon.
 When thrivell'd herbs on with'ring stems decay,
 The wary ploughman, on the mountain's brow,
 Undams his wat'ry stores, huge torrents flow,
 Temp'ring the thirsty fever of the field. Dryden's Georg.
 Erasmus, that great injur'd name,
 Stem'd the wild torrent of a barb'rous age. Pope.
TÓRRENT. adj. [torrens, Lat.] Rolling in a rapid stream.
 Fierce Phlegeton,
 Whose waves of torrent fire inflame with rage. Milton.
TÓRRID. adj. [torride, Fr. torridus, Lat.]
 1. Parched; dried with heat.
 Galen's commentators mention a twofold dryness; the one concomitated with a heat, which they call a torrid tabes; the other with a coldness, when the parts are consumed through extinction of their native heat. Harvey on Consump.
 2. Burning; violently hot.
 This with torrid heat,
 And vapours as the Libyan air adust,
 Began to parch that temperate clime. Milton's Par. Lost.
 3. It is particularly applied to the regions or zone between the tropicks.
 Columbus first
 Found a temp'rate in a torrid zone;
 The feverish air fann'd by a cooling breeze. Dryden.
 Those who amidst the torrid regions live,
 May they not gales unknown to us receive?
 See daily show'rs rejoice the thirsty earth,
 And blebs the flow'ry buds succeeding birth. Prior.
TÓRSEL. n. f. [torse, Fr.] Any thing in a twisted form.
 When you lay any timber on brickwork, as torsels for mantle trees to lie on, or lintols over windows, lay them in loam. Moxon's Mech. Exercises.
TÓRSION. n. f. [torso, Lat.] The act of turning or twisting.
TÓRT. n. f. [tort, Fr. tortum, low Latin.] Mischief; injury; calamity. Obsolete.
 Then gain triumphant trumpets found on high,
 That sent to heaven the echoed report
 Of their new joy, and happy victory
 Against him that had been long oppress'd with tort,
 And fast imprisoned in sieged fort. Fa. Qu. b. i.
 He dreadful bad them come to court,
 For no wild beasts should do them any tort. Spenser.
 Your disobedience and ill managing
 Of actions, lost for want of due support,
 Refer I justly to a further spring,
 Spring of sedition, strife, oppression, tort. Fairfax, b. i.
TÓRTLE. n. f. [torilis, Lat.] Twisted; wreathed.
TÓRTION. n. f. [from tortus, Latin.] Torment; pain. Not in use.
 All purgers have a raw spirit or wind, which is the principal cause of tortion in the stomach and belly. Bacon.
TÓRTIOUS. adj. [from tort.] Injurious; doing wrong. Spens.
TÓRTIVE. adj. [from tortus, Lat.] Twisted; wreathed.
 Knots by the conflux of meeting sap,
 Infect the found pine, and divert his grain
 Tortive and errant from his course of growth. Shakespeare.
TÓRTOISE. n. f. [tortue, French.]
 1. An animal covered with a hard shell: there are tortoises both of land and water.
 In his needy shop a tortoise hung,
 An alligator stult. Shakespeare.
 A living tortoise being turned upon its back, not being able to make use of its paws for the returning of itself, because they could only bend towards the belly, it could help itself only by its neck and head; sometimes one side, sometimes another, by pushing against the ground, to rock itself as in a cradle, to find out where the inequality of the ground might permit it to roll its shell. Ray on the Creation.
 2. A form into which the ancient soldiers used to throw their troops, by bending down and holding their bucklers above their heads so that no darts could hurt them.
 Their

Their targets in a toruise cast, the foes
Secure advancing, to the turrets rose. Dryden's Æn.
TORTUOSITY. n. f. [from tortuosus.] Wreath; flexure.
These the midwife contriveth unto a knot close unto the body of the infant, from whence ensueth that tortuosity, or complicated nodosity, called the navel. Brown's Vulgar Err.
TORTUOUS. adj. [tortuosus, Fr. from tortuosus, tortus, Lat.]
1. Twisted; wreathed; winding.
So vary'd he, and of his tortuous train
Curl'd many a wanton wreath. Milton.
Aqueous vapours, like a dry wind, pass through so long and tortuous a pipe of lead. Boyle.
2. Mischievous. [Thus I explain it, on supposition that it is derived from tort, wrong; but it may mean crooked: as we say, crooked ways for bad practices, crooked being regularly enough opposite to right. This in some copies is tortious, and therefore from tort.]
Ne ought he car'd whom he endamaged
By tortuous wrong, or whom bereav'd of right. Fa. Qu.
TORTURE. n. f. [tortura, Fr. tortura, Lat.]
1. Torments judiciously inflicted; pain by which guilt is punished, or confession extorted.
Hecate
Then led me trembling through those dire abodes,
And taught the tortures of the avenging gods. Dryden.
2. Pain; anguish; pang.
Better be with the dead,
Than on the torture of the mind to lie
In restless ecstasy. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Ghastly spasm or racking torture. Milton.
TO TORTURE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To punish with tortures.
Hipparchus my enfranchis'd bondman,
He may at pleasure whip, or hang, or torture. Shakespeare.
The scourge inexorable and the torturing hour. Milton.
2. To vex; to excruciate; to torment.
Still must I cherish the dear, sad remembrance
At once to torture, and to please my soul. Addison's Cato.
3. To keep on the stretch.
The bow tortureth the string continually, and thereby holdeth it in a continual trepidation. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
TORTURER. n. f. [from tortura.] He who tortures; tormenter.
I play the torturer by small and small,
To lengthen out the worst that must be spoken. Shakespeare.
When king Edward the second was amongst his torturers, the more to disgrace his face, they flaved him, and washed him with cold water; the king said, well, yet I will have warm water, and so shed abundance of tears. Bacon's Apoph.
Turning our tortures into horrid arms
Against the torturer. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ii.
TORTVITY. n. f. [tortvitas, Lat.] Sourness; severity of countenance.
TORTVUS. adj. [tortvus, Lat.] Sour of aspect; stern; severe of countenance.
That tortvus four look produced by anger, and that gay and pleasing countenance accompanying love. Derham.
TORY. n. f. [A cant term, derived, I suppose, from an Irish word signifying a savage.] One who adheres to the ancient constitution of the state, and the apostolical hierarchy of the church of England, opposed to a whig.
The knight is more a tory in the country than the town, because it more advances his interest. Addison.
To confound his hated coin, all parties and religions join whigs, tories. Swift.
TO TOSSE. v. n. [Of the same original with teize.] To comb wool.
TO TOSS. v. a. [tassen, Dutch; tasser, French, to accumulate; Minsew. Ossew, to dance; Merie Casaubon. Tofen, German, to make a noise; Skinner: perhaps from us, a word used by those who would have any thing thrown to them.]
1. To throw with the hand, as a ball at play.
With this she seem'd to play, and as in sport,
Toss'd to her love in presence of the court. Dryden.
A shepherd diverted himself with tossing up eggs and catching them again. Addison.
2. To throw with violence.
Back do I toss these treasons to thy head. Shakespeare.
Vulcano's discharge forth with the fire not only metallick and mineral matter but huge stones, tossing them up to a very great height in the air. Woodward's Nat. Hist. p. iv.
3. To lift with a sudden and violent motion.
Behold how they toss their torches on high,
How they point to the Persian abodes. Dryden.
I call'd to stop him, but in vain:
He toss'd his arm aloft, and proudly told me,
He would not stay. Addison's Cato.
So talk too idle buzzing things;
Toss up their heads, and stretch their wings. Prior.
4. To agitate; to put into violent motion.
The getting of treasures by a lying tongue is a vanity tossed to and fro. Prov. xxi. 6.

TOT

Things will have their first or second agitation; if they be not tossed upon the arguments of counsel, they will be tossed upon the waves of fortune, and be full of inconstancy, doing and undoing. Bacon's Essays.
Cows, hoods, and habits, with their wearers toss'd.
And flutter'd into rags. Milton.
I have made several voyages upon the sea, often been tossed in storms. Addison's Spect. N. 489.
5. To make restless; to disquiet.
She did love the knight of the red cross,
For whose dear sake so many troubles her did toss. F. Qu.
Calm region once,
And full of peace, now toss'd and turbulent. Milton.
6. To keep in play; to tumble over.
That scholar should come to a better knowledge in the Latin tongue than most do, that spend four years in tossing all the rules of grammar in common schools. Milton.
TO TOSS. v. n.
1. To fling; to winch; to be in violent commotion.
Dire was the tossing! deep the groans! despair
Tended the sick, buiest from couch to couch. Milton.
Galen tells us of a woman patient of his whom he found very weak in bed, continually tossing and tumbling from one side to another, and totally deprived of her rest. Harvey.
To toss and fling, and to be restless, only frets and enrages our pain. Tillotson.
And thou, my fire, not defin'd by thy birth,
To turn to dust and mix with common earth,
How wilt thou toss and rave, and long to die,
And quit thy claim to immortality. Addison's Ovid.
2. To be tossed.
Your mind is tossing on the sea,
There where your argosies
Do overpeer the petty traffickers. Shakespeare.
3. To Toss up. To throw a coin into the air, and wager on what side it shall fall.
I'd try if any pleasure could be found,
In tossing up for twenty thousand pound. Brampton.
Toss. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The act of tossing.
The discus that is to be seen in the hand of the celebrated Castor at Don Livio's is perfectly round; nor has it any thing like a fling fastened to it, to add force to the toss. Add.
2. An affected manner of raising the head.
His various modes from various fathers follow;
One taught the toss, and one the new French wallow;
His sword-knot this, his cravat that design'd. Dryden.
There is hardly a polite sentence in the following dialogues which doth not require some suitable toss of the head. Swift.
TO TOSSEL. n. f. See TASSLE.
Tie at each lower corner a handful of hops with a piece of packthread to make a tassel, by which you may conveniently lift the bag when full. Mortimer's Husbandry.
TO TOSSE. n. f. [from toss.] One who throws; one who flings and writhes.
TO TSSPOT. n. f. [toss and pot.] A toper and drunkard.
TOST. preterite and part. pass. of toss.
In a troubled sea of passion toss'd. Milton.
TO TAL. adj. [tatus, Lat. total, Fr.]
1. Whole; complete; full.
They set and rise;
Left total darkness should by night regain
Her old possession, and extinguish life. Milton.
If all the pains that, for thy Britain's sake,
My past has took, or future life may take,
Be grateful to my queen; permit my pray'r,
And with this gift reward my total care. Prior.
2. Whole; not divided.
Either to undergo Myself the total crime; or to accuse
My other-self, the partner of my life. Milton's Par. Lost.
TOTALITY. n. f. [totalité, Fr.] Complete sum; whole quantity.
TO TALLY. adv. [from total.] Wholly; fully; completely.
The sound interpreters expound this image of God, of natural reason; which, if it be totally or mostly defaced, the right of government doth cease. Bacon's holy War.
Charity doth not end with this world, but goes along with us into the next, where it will be perfected: but faith and hope shall then totally fail; the one being changed into light, the other into enjoyment. Atterbury's Sermons.
TO TOTHER. v. n. [tateren, to stagger, Dutch.] To shake so as to threaten a fall.
What news, in this our tossing state?
—It is a reeling world indeed, my lord;
And I believe will never stand upright. Shakespeare.
As a bowing wall shall ye be, and as a tottering fence. Psalm.
The foes already have possess'd the wall,
Troy nods from high, and totters to her fall. Dryden.
TO TATTERY.

TOU

TO TATTERY. adj. [from tetter.] Shaking; unsteady; dizzy.
TO TRY. v. a. [Neither of those words is used.]
Siker thy head very tattie is. Spenser's Past.
So on thy corbe shoulder it leans amiss.
TO TOUCH. v. a. [toucher, Fr. teufen, Dutch.]
1. To reach with any thing, so as that there be no space between the thing reached and the thing brought to it.
He so light was at legerdmain,
That what he touch'd came not to light again. Spenser.
Ye shall not eat nor touch it lest ye die. Gen. iii. 3.
He brake the withs as a thread of tow 'is broken when it toucheth the fire. Judg. xvi. 9.
2. To come to; to attain.
He that is begotten of God keepeth himself, and that wicked one toucheth him not. 1 John v. 18.
On herds devoted to the god of day;
The god vindictive doom'd them never more,
Ah men unblest'd! to touch that natal shore. Pope's Ody.
3. To try as gold with a stone.
When I have suit,
Wherein I mean to touch your love indeed,
It shall be full of poize and difficulty,
And fearful to be granted. Shakespeare's Othello.
4. To affect; to relate to.
In ancient times was publickly read first the scripture, as, namely, something out of the books of the prophets of God;
of some things out of the apostles writings; and, lastly, out of the holy evangelists some things which touch'd the person of our lord Jesus Christ. Hooker, b. v.
The quarrel toucheth none but us alone;
Betwixt ourselves let us decide it then. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
What of sweet
Hath touch'd my sense, flat seems to this. Milton.
5. To move; to strike mentally; to melt.
I was sensibly touch'd with that kind impression. Congreve.
The tender fire was touch'd with what he said,
And hung the blaze of glories from his head,
And bid the youth advance. Addison's Ovid.
6. To delineate or mark out.
Nature affords at least a glimm'ring light:
The lines, though touch'd but faintly, are drawn right. Pope.
7. To censure; to animadvert upon.
Doctor Parker, in his sermon before them, touch'd them for their living too near; that they went near to touch him for his life. Hayward.
8. To infect; to seize slightly.
Pestilent diseases are bred in the Summer; otherwise those touch'd are in most danger in the Winter. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
9. To bite; to wear; to have an effect on.
Its face must be very flat and smooth, and so hard, that a file will not touch it, as smiths say, when a file will not eat, or race it. Moxon's Mech. Exercise.
10. To strike a musical instrument.
They touch'd their golden harps, and prais'd. Milton.
One dip the pencil, and one touch the lyre. Pope.
11. To influence by impulse; to impel forcibly.
No decree of mine,
To touch with lightest moment of impulse
His free will. Milton.
12. To treat of perfunctorily.
This thy last reasoning words touch'd only. Milton.
13. To TOUCH up. To repair, or improve by slight strokes, or little emendations.
What he saw was only her natural countenance touch'd up with the usual improvements of an aged coquette. Addison.
TO TOUCH. v. n.
1. To be in a state of junction so that no space is between them.
2. To fasten on; to take effect on.
Strong waters pierce metals, and will touch upon gold that will not touch upon silver. Bacon.
3. To TOUCH at. To come to without stay.
The next day we touch'd at Sidon. Acts xxvii. 3.
Oh fail not to touch at Peru;
With gold there our vessel we'll store.
Civil law and history are studies which a gentleman should not barely touch at, but constantly dwell upon. Locke.
A fishmonger lately touch'd at Hammermith. Spectator.
4. To TOUCH on. To mention slightly.
The shewing by what steps knowledge comes into our minds, it may suffice to have only touch'd on. Locke.
It is an use no-body has dwelt upon; if the antiquaries have touch'd upon it they immediately quitted it. Addison.
5. To TOUCH on or upon. To go for a very short time.
He touch'd upon the Moluccoes. Abbot's Des. of the World.
Which monsters, left the Trojan's pious host Should bear, or touch upon th' enchanted coast.
Propitious Neptune steer'd their course by night. Dryden.
I made a little voyage round the lake, and touch'd on the several towns that lie on its coasts. Addison on Italy.

TOU

6. To TOUCH on or upon. To mention slightly.
It is impossible to make observations in art or science which have not been touch'd upon by others. Addison's Spectator.
TOUCH. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Reach of any thing so that there is no space between the things reaching and reached.
2. The sense of feeling.
O dear son Edgar,
Might I but live to see thee in my touch,
I'd say, I had eyes again. Shakespeare, King Lear.
The spirit of wine, or chemical oils, which are so hot in operation, are to the first touch cold. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
By touch the first pure qualities we learn,
Which quicken all things, hot, cold, moist and dry;
By touch, hard, soft, rough, smooth, we do discern;
By touch, sweet pleasure, and sharp pain we try. Davies.
The spiders touch how exquisitely fine!
Feels at each thread, and lives along the line. Pope.
The fifth sense is touch, a sense over the whole body. Locke.
3. The act of touching.
The touch of the cold water made a pretty kind of shrugging come over her body, like the twinkling of the fairest among the fixed stars. Sidney, b. ii.
The time was once when thou unurg'd wou'd'st vow,
That never touch was welcome to thy hand
Unless I touch'd. Shakespeare.
With one virtuous touch
Th' archchemick fun produces precious things. Milton.
4. Examination as by a stone.
To-morrow, good fir Michell, is a day
Wherein the fortune of ten thousand men Must bide the touch. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
Ah Buckingham, now do I ply the touch,
To try if thou be current gold indeed. Shakespeare.
Albeit some of these articles were merely devised, yet the duke being of base gold, and fearing the touch, subscribed that he did acknowledge his offences. Hayward.
5. Test; that by which any thing is examined.
The law-makers rather respected their own benefit than equity, the true touch of all laws. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
6. Proof; tried qualities.
Come my sweet wife, my dearest mother, and
My friends of noble touch! when I am forth, Bid me farewell, and smile. Shakespeare.
7. [Touche, Fr.] Single act of a pencil upon the picture.
Artificial strife
Lives in those touches, livelier than life. Shakespeare.
It will be the more difficult for him to conceive when he has only a relation given him, without the nice touches which make the graces of the picture. Dryden.
Never give the least touch with your pencil, till you have well examined your design. Dryden.
8. Feature; lineament.
Thus Rosalind of many parts
By heav'nly synod was devis'd;
Of many faces, eyes and hearts,
To have the touches dearest priz'd. Shakespeare, As you like it.
A son was copy'd from his voice so much,
The very same in ev'ry little touch. Dryden.
9. Act of the hand upon a musical instrument.
Here let the sounds of mulick
Creep in our ears; soft filiness and the night Become the touches of sweet harmony. Shakespeare.
10. Power of exciting the affections.
Not alone
The death of Fulvia, with more urgent touches,
Do strongly speak t' us. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.
Nor wanted power to mitigate and swage,
With solemn touches, troubled thoughts. Milton.
11. Something of passion or affection.
He which without our nature could not on earth suffer for the world, doth now also, by means thereof, both make intercession to God for sinners, and exercise dominion over all men, with a true, natural, and a sensible touch of mercy. Hooker.
He loves us not:
He wants the natural touch. Shakespeare.
12. Particular relation; sensible relation.
Speech of touch towards others should be sparingly used; for discourse ought to be as a field, without coming home to any man. Bacon's Essays.
13. [Touche, Fr.] A stroke.
Our kings no sooner fall out, but their mints make war upon one another; one meets sometimes with very nice touches of raillery. Addison on ancient Medals.
Another smart touch of the author we meet with in the fifth page, where, without any preparation, he breaks out all on a sudden into a vein of poetry. Addison.
Though its error may be such,
As Knags and Burges cannot hit
It yet may feel the nicer touch
Of Wicherley's or Congreve's wit. Prior.

TOU

- He gave the little wealth he had
To build a house for fools and mad;
To shew by one fatyrick touch,
No nation wanted it so much.
I never bare any touch of conscience with greater regret.
King Charles.
Soon mov'd with touch of blame, thus Eve,
What words have pass'd thy lips, Adam, severe. Milton.
15. Exact performance of agreement.
Touch kept is commended, yet credit to keepe
Is pay and dispatch him, yer ever ye sleepe. Tusser.
Quoth Hudibras, thou offer'st much,
But art not able to keep touch. Hudibras, p. i.
I keep touch both with my promise to Philopolis, and with my own usual frugality in these kind of collations. More.
He was not to expect that so perfidious a creature should keep touch with him. L'Estrange.
16. A small quantity intermingled.
Madam, I have a touch of your condition,
That cannot brook the accent of reproof. Shakespeare.
This coming still nearer to an aspiration, a touch of it may perhaps be an ingredient in the rough guttural pronunciation of the Welsh and Irish. Holder's Elements of Speech.
17. A hint; slight notice given.
The king your master knows their disposition very well;
a small touch will put him in mind of them. Bacon.
18. A cant word for a slight essay.
Print my preface in such a form as, in the bookfellers phrase, will make a sixpenny touch. Swift.
TOUCHABLE. adj. [from touch.] Tangible; that may be touched.
TOUCH-HOLE. n. f. [touch and hole.] The hole through which the fire is conveyed to the powder in the gun.
In a piece of ordnance, if you speak in the touch-hole, and another lay his ear to the mouth of the piece, the sound is far better heard than in the open air. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
TOUCHINESS. n. f. [from touching.] Peevishness; irascibility.
My friends relented it as a motion not guided with such discretion as the touchings of those times required. K. Charles.
TOUCHING. prep. [This word is originally a participle of touch.] With respect, regard, or relation to.
Touching things which belong to discipline, the church hath authority to make canons and decrees, even as we read in the apostles times it did. Hooker, b. iii.
Touching our person, seek we no revenge;
But we our kingdom's safety must to tender,
Whole ruin you three fought, that to her laws
We do deliver you. Shakespeare's Henry V.
The heavens and the earth remained in the same state in which they were created, as touching their substance, though there was afterwards added multiplicity of perfection in respect of beauty. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
Touching the debt, he took himself to be acquitted thereof.
Hayward.
Socrates chose rather to die than renounce or conceal his judgment touching the unity of the Godhead. South.
TOUCHING. adj. [from touch.] Pathetic; affecting; moving.
TOUCHINGLY. adv. [from touch.] With feeling emotion; in a pathetic manner.
This last fable shows how touchingly the poet argues in love affairs. Garth.
TOUCHMENT. n. f. An herb.
TOUCHSTONE. n. f. [touch and stone; pierre de touche, Fr.]
1. Stone by which metals are examined.
Chilon would say, that gold was tried with the touchstone, and men with gold. Bacon's Apophth.
If he intends to deal clearly, why does he make the touchstone faulty, and the standard uncertain. Collier.
2. Any test or criterion.
Is not this their rule of such sufficiency, that we should use it as a touchstone to try the orders of the church? Hooker.
The work, the touchstone of the nature, is;
And by their operations things are known. Davies.
Money serves for the touchstone of common honesty. L'Estr.
Time is the surest judge of truth: I am not vain enough to think I have left no faults in this, which that touchstone will not discover. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
TOUCHWOOD. n. f. [touch and wood.] Rotten wood used to catch the fire struck from the flint.
A race of resolute stout trees they are, so abounding with metal and heat, that they quickly take fire, and become touchwood. Houel's Vocal Forest.
To make white powder, the powder of rotten willows is best; spunk, or touchwood prepared might make it rustier. Br.
TOUCHY. adj. [from touch.] Peevish; irascible; touchy;
apt to take fire. A low word.
You are upon a touchy point, and therefore treat so nice a subject with proportionable caution. Collier on Pride.
You are so touchy, and take things so hotly, I am sure there must be some mistake in this. Arbutnot's Hist. of J. Bull.

TOW

- TOUGH. adj. [toh, Saxon.]
1. Yielding without fracture; not brittle.
Of bodies some are fragile, and some are tough, and not fragile. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
2. Stiff; not easily flexible.
The bow he drew,
And almost join'd the horns of the tough eugh. Dryden.
Fate with nature's law would strive,
To shew plain-dealing once an age may thrive;
And when so tough a frame she could not bend,
Exceeded her commission to befriend. Dryden.
3. Not easily injured or broken.
O fides you are too tough!
Will you yet hold?
A body made of brass the crone demands
For her lov'd nursing, strung with nerves of wire, Tough to the last, and with no toil to tire. Dryden.
4. Viscous; clammy; ropy.
TOUGHEN. v. n. [from tough.] To grow tough.
Hops off the kiln lay three weeks to cool, give and toughen, else they will break to powder. Mortimer's Hist.
TOUGHNESS. n. f. [from tough.]
1. Not brittleness; flexibility.
To make an induration with toughness, and less fragility, decoct bodies in water for three days; but they must be such into which the water will not enter. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
A well-temper'd sword is bent at will,
But keeps the native toughness of the steel. Dryden.
2. Viscosity; tenacity; clamminess; glutinousness.
In the first stage the viscosity or toughness of the fluids should be taken off by diluents. Arbutnot on Diet.
3. Firmness against injury.
I confess me knit to thy deserving with cables of perdurable toughness. Shakespeare, Othello.
TOUPEE. n. f. [Fr.] A curl; an artificial lock of hair.
Remember second-hand toupees and repaired ruffles. Swift.
TOUR. n. f. [tour, French.]
1. Ramble; roving journey.
I made the tour of all the king's palaces. Addison.
Were it permitted, he'd make the tour of the whole system of the sun. Arbutnot and Pope's Mart. Scrib.
2. Turn; revolution. In both these senses it is rather French than English.
First Ptolemy his scheme celestial wrought,
And of machines a wild provision brought;
Orbs centrick and eccentric he prepares,
Cycles and epicycles, solid spheres
In order plac'd, and with bright globes inlaid,
To solve the tours by heavenly bodies made. Blackmore.
3. In Milton it is probably tour; soar; elevation.
The bird of Jove stoop'd from his airy tour,
Two birds of gayest plume before him drove. Milton.
TOURNAMENT. n. f. [tournamentum, low Lat.]
TOURNEY. n. f.
1. Tilt; joust; military sport; mock encounter.
They might under the pretence
Of tilts and tournaments,
Provide them horse and armour for defence. Daniel.
For jousts, tourneys, and barriers, the glories of them are the chariots, wherein challengers make their entry. Bacon.
Whence came all those jousts, tiltings, and tournaments, so much in use in these parts. Temple's Mised.
He liv'd with all the pomp he could devise,
At tilts and tournaments obtain'd the prize,
But found no favour in his lady's eyes. Dryden.
The spouses of Hippolita the queen,
What tilts and tourneys at the feast were seen. Dryden.
2. Milton uses it simply for encounter; shock of battle.
With cruel tournament the squadrons join!
Where cattle pastur'd late, now scatter'd lies
With carcasses, and arms, th' infangui'd field. Milton.
TOURNEY. v. n. [from the noun.] To tilt in the lists.
An elfin born of noble state,
Well could he tourney, and in lists debate. P. Qu. b. ii.
TOURNIQUET. n. f. [French.] A bandage used in amputations, straitened or relaxed by the turn of a handle.
If the orifice does not readily appear, loosen the tourniquet, and the effusion of blood will direct you to it. Sharp.
TOUZE. v. a. [probably of the same original with touze, teize, toze.] To pull; to tear; to haul; to drag; whence touser or touzer, the name of a maffist.
As a bear whom angry curs have touz'd,
Having off shak'd them and escap'd their hands,
Becomes more fell, and all that him withstands
Treads down and overthrows. Spenser.
Take him hence; to th' rack with him: we'll touze you Joint by joint, but we will know his purpose. Shakespeare.
To touze such things as flutter
To honest Bounce is bread and butter. Swift.
TOW. n. f. [top, Saxon.] Flax or hemp beaten and combed into a filamentous substance. Tow.

TOW

- Tow twisted round the handle of an instrument makes it easier to be held. Sharp.
To Tow. v. a. [teon, teohan, Saxon, to lead; toghen, old Dutch.] To draw by a rope, particularly through the water.
Thou knew'st too well
My heart was to thy rudder ty'd by th' string,
And thou should'st tow me after. Shak. Ant. and Cleopatra.
The seamen towed, and I shoved, till we arrived. Swift.
TOWARDS. prep. [topays, Saxon.]
TOWARDS. adv.
1. In a direction to.
He set his face towards the wilderness. Num. xxiv. 1.
The currents drive,
Towards the retreating sea, their furious tide. Milton.
Near to: as, the danger now comes towards him.
2. With respect to; touching; regarding.
We brought them to as great peace between themselves, as love towards us for having made the peace. Sidney, b. ii.
Repeat you not,
As that the sin hath brought you to this shame,
Which sorrow's always towards ourselves, not heav'n?
Shakespeare, Measure for Measure.
His heart relented towards her.
By our law, no good is to be left undone towards all, not the good of the tongue, the hand, the heart. South's Sermons.
4. With tendency to.
This was the first alarm England received towards any trouble, after it had enjoyed for so many years the most uninterrupted prosperity. Clarendon, b. ii.
5. Nearly; little less than.
I am towards nine years older since I left you. Swift.
TOWARDS. adv. [It is doubtful whether in this use the word TOWARDS. } be adverb or adjective.] Near; at hand; in a state of preparation.
What might be toward that this sweaty haste
Doth make the night joint labourer with the day. Shakespeare.
TOWARDS. adj. Ready to do or learn; not forward.
TOWARDNESS. n. f. [from towards.] Docility; compliance; readiness to do or to learn.
The beauty and towardness of these children moved her brethren to envy. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
TOWARDLY. adj. [from towards.] Ready to do or learn; docile; compliant with duty.
Some young towards noblemen or gentlemen were usually sent as assistants or attendants. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
TOWARDNESS. n. f. [from towards.] Docility.
Parents will not throw away the towardness of a child, and the expense of education upon a profession, the labour of which is encreased, and the rewards are vanisied. South.
TO'WEL. n. f. [twaill, French; touaglio, Italian.] A cloth on which the hands are wiped.
His arm must be kept up with a napkin or towel. Wiseman.
Th' attendants water for their hands supply,
And having wash'd, with silken towels dry. Dryden's En.
TO'WER. n. f. [top, Saxon; tour, Fr. torre, Italian; turris, Latin.]
1. A high building; a building raised above the main edifice.
Let us build us a city and a tower, whose top may reach unto heaven. Gen. xi. 4.
2. A fortress; a citadel.
Lay trains of amorous intrigues
In towers, and curls, and periwigs. Hudibras, p. iii.
4. High flight; elevation.
To TO'WER. v. n. To soar; to fly or rise high.
On th' other side an high rock tow'rd still. Spenser.
No marvel
My lord protector's hawks do tower so well. Shakespeare.
Circular base of rising folds that tower'd Fold above fold a furling maze. Milton.
Tow'ring his height, and ample was his breast. Dryden.
The crooked plough, the share, the tow'ring height
Of waggons, and the cart's unweildy weight;
These all must be prepar'd. Dryden's Georg.
All those sublime thoughts which tower above the clouds, and reach as high as heaven itself, take their rise, not one jot beyond those ideas which sense or reflection have offered for the contemplation of the mind. Locke.
TO'WER-MUSTARD. n. f. [turritis, Lat.] A plant.
The flower of the tower-mustard consists of four leaves, expanding in form of a cross, out of whose empalement rises the point, which afterward becomes a long, smooth pod, growing for the most part upright, and opening into two parts, in each of which are many smooth seeds. Miller.
TO'WERED. adj. [from tower.] Adorned or defended by towers.
Might the wife Latona be,
Or the tow'rd Cybele. Milton's Arcades.
TO'WERY. adj. [from tower.] Adorned or guarded with towers.
Here naked rocks, and empty wastes were seen,
There tow'ry cities and the forests green. Pope.

toun.]
1. Any walled collection of houses.
She let them down by a cord; for her house was upon the town wall. Jof. ii. 15.
2. Any collection of houses larger than a village.
Speak the speech trippingly on the tongue; but if you mouth it, as many of our players do, I had as lieve the town crier had spoke the lines. Shakespeare, Hamlet.
Into whatsoever city or town ye enter, enquire who in it is worthy, and there abide? Mat. x. 11.
Before him towns and rural works between. Milton.
My friend this insult sees,
And flies from towns to woods. Broome.
3. In England, any number of houses to which belongs a regular market, and which is not a city or see of a bishop.
4. The court end of London.
A virgin whom her mother's care
Drags from the town to wholesome country air. Pope.
5. The people who live in the capital.
He all at once let down,
Stuns with his giddy larum half the town. Pope.
6. It is used by the inhabitants of every town or city: as we

TOY. n. f. [toyen, toghen, to dress with many ornaments,
Dutch.]
1. A petty commodity; a trifle; a thing of no value.
Might I make acceptable unto her that toy which I had found, following an acquaintance of mine at the plough. Sidney.
They exchange for knives, glasses and such toys, great abundance of gold and pearl. Abbot.
Because of old
Thou thyself doat'st on womankind, admiring
Their shape, their colour, and attractive grace:
None are, thou think'st, but taken with such toys. Milton.
O virtue! virtue! what art thou become,
That men should leave thee for that toy a woman. Dryden.
2. A plaything; a bauble.
To dally thus with death is no fit toy,
Go find some other play-fellows, mine own sweet boy. Fairy Queen, b. i.
What a profusion of wealth laid out in coaches, trappings, tables, cabinets, and the like precious toys. Addison.
In Delia's hand this toy is fatal found,
Nor could that fabled dart more surely wound. Pope.
3. Matter of no importance.
'Tis a cockle or a walnut shell,
A knack, a toy, a trick, a baby's cap. Shakespeare.
4. Folly; trifling practice; silly opinion.
The things which so long experience of all ages hath confirmed and made profitable, let us not presume to condemn as follies and toys, because we sometime know not the cause and reason of them. Hooker, b. iv.
5. Play; sport; amorous dalliance.
Ye sons of Venus, play your sports at will;
For greedy pleasure, careles of your toys,
Thinks more upon her pandite of joys. Spenser's Epithal.
So said he, and forbore not glance or toy
Of amorous intent. Milton.

very rich country gentleman. Arbut. Hist. of J. Bull.
- Domesticks in a gentleman's family have more opportunities of improving their minds, than the ordinary tradesmen. Swift.
- Boastful and rough, your first ion is a squire;
The next a tradesman, meek and much a liar. Pope's Ep.
- TRA'DEFUL. adj. [trade and full.] Commercial; busy in traf-fick.
- Ye tradeful merchants that with weary toil
Do seek most precious things to make your gain,
And both the Indies of their treasure spoil,
What needeth you to seek for in vain. Spenser.
- TRADITION. n. f. [traditio, Fr. traditio, Lat.]
1. The act or practice of delivering accounts from mouth to mouth without written memorials; communication from age to age.
- To learn it we have tradition; namely, that so we believe, because both we from our predecessors, and they from theirs, have so received. Hesler. b. iii.
2. Any thing delivered orally from age to age.
- They the truth
With superstitions and traditions taint,
Left only in those written records pure. Milton.
- Our old solemnities
From no blind zeal, or fond tradition rise;
But fav'd from death, our Argives yearly pay
These grateful honours to the God of day. Pope's Statius.
- TRADITIONAL. adj. [from tradition.]
1. Delivered by tradition; descending by oral communication; transmitted by the foregoing to the following age.
- Whence may we have the infallible traditional sense of scripture, if not from the heads of their church? Tillotson.
- If there be any difference in natural parts, it should seem the advantage lies on the side of children born from wealthy parents, the same traditional cloth and luxury which render their body weak, perhaps refining their spirits. Swift.
2. Observant of traditions, or idle rites. Not used, nor proper.
- God forbid
We should infringe the holy privilege
Of sanctuary!
—You are too senseless obdurate, my lord;
Too ceremonious and traditional. Shakspe. Rich. III.
- TRADITIONALLY. adv. [from traditional.]
1. By transmission from age to age.
- There is another channel wherein this doctrine is traditionally derived from Saint John, namely, from the clergy of Asia. Barnet's Theory of the Earth.
2. From tradition without evidence of written memorials.
- It crosseth the proverb, and Rome might well be built in a day, if that were true which is traditionally related by Strabo, that the great cities Anchiale and Tarsus were built by Sardanapalus both in one day. Brown's Vulgar Err.
- TRADITIONARY. adj. [from tradition.] Delivered by tradition.
- Suppose the same traditional strain
Of rigid manners in the house remain, Inveterate truth, an old plain Sabine's heart. Dryden.
- Oral tradition is more uncertain, especially if we may take that to be the traditional sense of texts of scripture. Tillotson.
- The fame of our Saviour, which in so few years had gone through the whole earth, was confirmed and perpetuated by such records as would preserve the traditional account of him to after-ages. Addison on the Christian Religion.
- TRADITIVE. adj. [traditive, Fr. from trade, Latin.] Transmitted or transmissible from age to age.
- Suppose we on things traditive divide,
And both appeal to scripture to decide. Dryd. H. and Pant.
- Tò TRADUCE. v. a. [traduce, Lat. traduire, Fr.]
1. To censure; to condemn; to represent as blameable; to calumniate; to decry.
- The best stratagem that Satan hath, who knoweth his kingdom to be no one way more shaken than by the publick devout prayers of God's church, is by traducing the form and manner of them, to bring them into contempt, and so slack the force of all mens devotion towards them. Hesler. b. v.
- 26 8

- Those particular ceremonies which they pretend to be so scandalous, we shall more thoroughly sift, when other things also traduced in the public duties of the church are, together with these, to be touched. Hosker, b. iv.
- Whilft calumny has such potent abettors, we are not to wonder at its growth; as long as men are malicious and designing they will be traducing. Gov. of the Tongue.
- From that preface he took his hint; though he had the baseness not to acknowledge his benefactor, but instead of it to traduce me in libel. Dryden's Fab.
2. To propagate; to encrease by deriving one from another. None are so gross as to contend for this, That souls from bodies may traduced be; Between whose natures no proportion is, When root and branch in nature still agree. Dowies.
- From these only the race of perfect animals were propagated and traduced over the earth. Hale.
- Some believe the soul is made by God, some by angels, and some by the generant: whether it be immediately created or traduced hath been the great ball of contention to the latter ages. Glanville's Sceps.
- TRADUCEMENT. n. f. [from traduce.] Censure; obloquy. Rome must know The value of her own: 'twere a concealment Worse than a theft, no less than a traducement, To hide your doings. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
- TRADUCER. n. f. [from traduce.] A false censor; a calumniator. Though oral tradition might be a competent discoverer of the original of a kingdom, yet such a tradition were incompetent without written monuments to derive to us the original laws, because they are of a complex nature, and therefore not orally traducible to so great a distance of ages. Hale.
- TRADUCIBLE. adj. [from traduce.] Such as may be derived. The patrons of traduction accuse their adversaries of affronting the attributes of God; and the asserters of creation impeach them of violence to the nature of things. Glanville.
- If by traduction came thy mind, Our wonder is the less to find A soul so charming from a stock so good; Thy father was transfus'd into thy blood. Dryden.
2. Tradition; transmission from one to another. Touching traditional communication and traduction of truths connatural and engraven, I do not doubt but many of them have had the help of that derivation. Hale.
3. Conveyance. Since America is divided on every side by considerable seas, and no passage known by land, the traduction of brutes could only be by shipping: though this was a method used for the traduction of useful cattle from hence thither, yet it is not credible that bears and lions should have so much care used for their transportation. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
4. Transition. The reports and fugues have an agreement with the figures in rhetoric of repetition and traduction. Bacon.
- TRAFFICK. n. f. [from traffico, Fr. traffico, Italian.] 1. Commerce; merchandising; large trade; exchange of commodities. Traffick's thy god. Shakespeare. Timon of Athens.
- My father A merchant of great traffick through the world. Shakespeare.
- As the first of these was, for his great wisdom, stiled the English Solomon, he followed the example of that wise king in nothing more than by advancing the traffick of his people. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 41.
2. Commodities; subject of traffick. You'll see a draggled damsel From Billingsgate her filthy traffick bear. Gay.
- TO TRAFFICK. v. n. [from traffico, Fr. trafficare, Italian.] 1. To practise commerce; to merchandise; to exchange commodities. They first plant for corn and cattle, and after enlarge themselves for things to traffick withal. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
2. To trade meanly or mercenarily. Saucy and overbold! how did you dare To trade and traffick with Macbeth, In riddles and affairs of death? Shakespeare. Macbeth.
- How hast thou dar'd to think so vilely of me, That I would condescend to thy mean arts, And traffick with thee for a prince's ruin? Rowe.
- TRAFFICKER. n. f. [from traffico, Fr. from traffick.] Trader; merchant. Your Argosies with portly fail, Like signiors and rich burghers on the flood, Do overpeer the petty traffickers That curtsy to them. Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.
- In it are so many Jews very rich, and so great traffickers, that they have most of the English trade in their hands. Add.

- which this name has been given, because it proceeds from the incision of the root or trunk of a plant so called. Treves.
- TRAGEDIAN. n. f. [from tragedy, tragædus, Lat.] 1. A writer of tragedy. Many of the poets themselves had much nobler conceptions of the Deity, than to imagine him to have any thing corporeal; as in these verses out of the ancient tragedian. Shillingfleet.
2. An actor of tragedy. I can counterfeit the deep tragedian; Speak, and look back, and pry on ev'ry side, Tremble and start at wagging of a straw, Intending deep suspicion. Shakespeare. Rich. III.
- To well-lung'd tragedian's rage They recommend their labours of the stage. Dryden.
- TRAGEDY. n. f. [from tragedia, Fr. tragedia, Lat.] 1. A dramatick representation of a serious action. Thoudands more, that yet suspect no peril, Will now conclude their plotted tragedy. Shakespeare.
- All our tragedies are of kings and princes; but you never see a poor man have a part unless it be as a chorus, or to fill up the scenes, to dance, or to be derided. Taylor's holy living.
- Imitate the filter of painting, tragedy; which employs the whole forces of her art in the main action. Dryden.
- An anthem to their god Dionysius, whilst the goat stood at his altar to be sacrificed, was called the goat-song or tragedy. Rymer's Tragedies of the last Age.
- There to her heart sad tragedy address'd The dagger, wont to pierce the tyrant's breast. Pope.
2. Any mournful or dreadful event. I shall laugh at this, That they, who brought me in my master's hate, I live to look upon their tragedy. Shakespeare. Rich. III.
- I look upon this now done in England as another act of the same tragedy which was lately begun in Scotland. K. Ch.
- TRAGICAL. adj. [from tragicus, Lat. tragique, Fr.] 1. Relating to tragedy. The root whereof and tragic effect, Vouchsafed, O thou the mournfullest muse of nine, That won't the tragic stage for to direct, In funeral complaints and wailful time Reveal to me. Spenser's Muirpothos.
- Thy Clarence he is dead that stabb'd my Edward; And the beholders of this tragic play, Th' adulterer Hastings, Rivers, Vaughan, Gray, Untimely smother'd in their dusky graves. Shakespeare. R. III.
2. Mournful; calamitous; sorrowful; dreadful. A dire induction I am witness to; And will to France, hoping the consequence Will prove as bitter, black, and tragic. Shakespeare.
- The gaudy, blabbing, and remorseful day, Is crept into the bosom of the sea: And now loud howling wolves arouse the jades, That drag the tragic melancholy night. Shakespeare. Hen. VI.
- Why look you still so stern and tragic? Shakespeare.
- So tragic and merited a fate Shall swallow those who God and justice hate. Sandys.
- I now must change those notes to tragic. Milton.
- The tale of this song is a pretty tragic story; and pleases because it is a copy of nature. Addison.
- Bid them dress their bloody altars With every circumstance of tragic pomp. Rowe.
- TRAGICALLY. adv. [from tragic.] 1. In a tragic manner; in a manner befitting tragedy. Juvenal's genius was sharp and eager; and as his provocations were great, he has revenged them tragically. Dryden.
2. Mournfully; sorrowfully; calamitously. TRAGICALNESS. n. f. [from tragic.] Mournfulness; calamitousness. Like bold Phaëton we despise all benefits of the father of light, unless we may guide his chariot; and we moralize the fable as well in the *tragic*ness of the event as in the influence of the undertaking. Decay of Piety.
- TRAGICOMEDY. n. f. [from tragicomedia, Fr. from tragedy and comedy.] A drama compounded of merry and serious events. On the world's stage, when our applause grows high, For acting here life's tragi-comedy, The lookers-on will say we act not well, Unless the last the former scenes excel. Denham.
- The faults of that drama are in the kind of it, which is tragi-comedy; but it was given to the people. Dryden.
- We have often had tragi-comedies upon the English theatre with success: but in that sort of composition the tragedy and comedy are in distinct scenes. Gay.
- TRAGICOMICAL. adj. [from tragicomique, Fr. tragic and comical.] 1. Relating to tragi-comedy. The whole art of the tragi-comical farce lies in interweaving the several kinds of the drama, so that they cannot be distinguished. Gay's What d'ye call it.
2. Consisting of a mixture of mirth with sorrow. TRAGI-

TRA

- TRAGICOMICALLY. adv. [from tragicomical.] In a tragicomical manner. Laws my Pindarick parents matter'd not, So I was tragicomically got. Brampston.
- TO TRAJECT. v. a. [from trajectus, Latin.] To cast through; to throw. The disputes of those assuming confident, that think so highly of their attainments, are like the controversy of those in Plato's den, who having never seen but the shadow of an horse trajected, eagerly contended, whether its neighing proceeded from its appearing mane or tail. Glanville's Sceps.
- If there are different kinds of æther, they have a different degree of rarity; by which it becomes so fit a medium for trajecting the light of all celestial bodies. Grew's Cosm. b. ii.
- If the sun's light be trajected through three or more crofs prisms successively, those rays which in the first prism are refracted more than others, are in all the following prisms refracted more than others in the same proportion. Newton.
- TRAJECT. n. f. [from traject, Fr. trajectus, Latin.] A ferry; a passage for a water-carriage. What notes and garments he doth give thee, Bring to the traject, to the common ferry, Which trades to Venice. Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.
- TRAJECTION. n. f. [from trajectio, Lat.] 1. The act of darting through. Later astronomers have observed the free motion of such comets as have, by a trajection through the æther, wandered through the celestial or interstellar part of the universe. Boyle.
2. Emission. The trajections of such an object more sharply pierce the martyred soul of John, than afterwards did the nails the crucified body of Peter. Brown's Vulgar Err. b. vii.

- Now to my charms And to my wily trains! I shall ere long Be well stock'd with as fair a herd as graz'd About my mother Circe. Milton.
- The practice begins of crafty men upon the simple and good; these easily follow and are caught, while the others lay trains and pursue a game. Temple.
2. The tail of a bird. Contracting their body, and being forced to draw in their fore parts to establish the hinder in the elevation of the train, if the fore parts do part and incline to the ground, the hinder grow too weak, and suffer the train to fall. Brown.
- The bird guideth her body with her train, and the ship is steered with the rudder. Hakevill.
- TH' other, whose gay train Adorns him colour'd with the florid hue Of rainbows and hazy eyes. Milton.
- Rivers now stream and draw their humid train. Milton.
- The train steers their flights, and turns their bodies like the rudder of a ship; as the kite, by a light turning of his train, moves his body which way he pleases. Ray.
3. The part of a gown that falls behind upon the ground. A thousand pounds a year, for pure respect! That promises more thousands: honour's train Is longer than his fore skirts. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.
- Costly followers are not to be liked, lest while a man makes his train longer he makes his wings shorter. Bacon.
4. A series; a consecution. Distinct gradual growth in knowledge carries its own light with it, in every step of its progression, in an easy and orderly train. Locke.
- If we reflect on what is observable in ourselves, we shall find our ideas always passing in train, one going and another coming, without intermission. Locke.
- They laboured in vain so far to reach the apostle's meaning, all along in the train of what he said. Locke.
- Some truths result from any ideas, as soon as the mind puts them into propositions; other truths require a train of ideas placed in order, a due comparing of them, and deductions made with attention. Locke.
- What would'st thou have me do? consider well The train of ills our love would draw behind it. Addison.
- The author of your beings can by a glance of the eye, or a word speaking, enlighten your mind, and conduct you to a train of happy sentiments. Watts.
5. Process; method; state of procedure. If things were once in this train, if virtue were established as necessary to reputation, and vice not only loaded with infamy, but made the infallible ruin of all mens pretensions, our duty would take root in our nature. Swift.
6. A retinue;

TRA

5. A retinue; a number of followers or attendants.
My train are men of choice and rarest parts,
That in the most exact regard support
The worships of their names. Shakespeare.
Our fire walks forth, without more train
Accompany'd than with his own complete Perfections. Milton's Par. Lost, b. v.
Thou should'st be seen
A goddess among gods, ador'd, and serv'd
By angels numberless, thy daily train. Milton's Par. Lost.
Fairest of stars, last in the train of night,
If better thou belong not to the dawn. Milton's Par. Lost.
He comes not with a train to move our fear. Dryden.
The king's daughter, with a lovely train
Of fellow nymphs, was sporting on the plain. Addison.
He would put a check to the fury of war, that a stop might be put to those fins which are of its train. Smalridge.
7. An orderly company; a procession.
Who the knights in green, and what the train
Of ladies dress'd with daisies on the plain? Dryden.
8. The line of powder reaching to the mine.
Since first they fail'd in their designs,
To take in heav'n by springing mines;
And with unanswerable barrels
Of gun-powder, dispute their quarrels;
Now take a course more practicable,
By laying trains to fire the rabble. Hudibras, p. iii.
Shall he that gives fire to the train pretend to wash his hands of the hurt that's done by the playing of the mine!
L'Estrange's Fables.
9. TRAIN of artillery. Cannons accompanying an army.
With an army abundantly supplied with a train of artillery, and all other provisions necessary, the king advanced towards Scotland. Clarendon, b. ii.
TRAINBANDS. n. f. [train and band]. I suppose for trained band. The militia; the part of a community trained to martial exercise.
He directed the trainbands of Westminster and Middlesex, which consisted of the most substantial householders, to attend. Clarendon.
Give commission
To some bold man, whose loyalty you trust,
And let him raise the trainbands of the city. Dryden.
A council of war was called, wherein we agreed to retreat: but before we could give the word, the trainbands, taking advantage of our delay, fled first. Addison's Freeholder.
TRAINOIL. n. f. [train and oil]. Oil drawn by coction from the fat of the whale.
TRAINY. adj. [from train]. Belonging to train oil. A bad word.
Here steams ascend.
Where the huge hogheads sweat with trainy oil. Gay.
To TRAIPE. v. a. [A low word, I believe, without any etymology.] To walk in a careless or sluttish manner.
Two slipshod muses traipe along.
In lofty madness, meditating song. Pope.
TRAIT. n. f. [trait, Fr.] A stroke; a touch. Scarce English.
By this single trait Homer marks an essential difference between the Iliad and Odyssey; that in the former the people perished by the folly of their kings; in this by their own folly. Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.
TRAITOR. n. f. [traitor, Fr. traditor, Lat.] One who being trusted betrays.
The law laid that grievous punishment upon traitors, to forfeit all their lands to the prince, that men might be terrified from committing treasons. Spenser on Ireland.
If you flatter him, you are a great traitor to him. Bacon.
I'll put him thus far into the plot, that he should be secured as a traitor; but when I am out of reach, he shall be released. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
There is no difference, in point of morality, whether a man calls me traitor in one word, or says I am one hired to betray my religion and sell my country. Swift.
TRAITORLY. adj. [from traitor]. Treacherous; perfidious.
These traitorly rascals miseries are to be smil'd at, their offences being so capital. Shakespeare, Winter's Tale.
TRAITOROUS. adj. [from traitor]. Treacherous; perfidious;
faithless.
What news with him, that trait'rous wight? Daniel.
Pontinius knows not you,
While you stand out upon these trait'ous terms. B. Johnson.
The traitorous or treacherous, who have misled others, he would have severely punished, and the neutrals noted. Bacon.
More of his majesty's friends have lost their lives in this rebellion than of his traitorous subjects. Addison's Freeholder.
TRAITOROUSLY. adv. [from traitorous]. In a manner suiting traitors; perfidiously; treacherously.
Good duke Humphry traitorously is murder'd
By Suffolk. Shakespeare, Henry VI.
Thou bitter sweet! whom I had laid
Next me, me traitorously hast betray'd;
And unsuspected half invisibly
At once fled into him, and stay'd with me. Donne.

TRA

They had traitorously endeavoured to subvert the fundamental laws, deprive the king of his regal power, and to place on his subjects a tyrannical power. Clarendon.
TRAITRESS. n. f. [from traitor]. A woman who betrays.
I, what I am, by what I was, overcome:
Traitress, restore my beauty and my charms,
Nor steal my conquest with my proper arms. Dryden.
Nor did my traitress wife these eye-lids close,
Nor decently in death my limbs compose. Pope's Odyssey.
By the dire fury of a trait'ess wife,
Ends the sad evening of a stormy life. Pope's Odyssey.
TRALATI'IOUS. adj. [from tralatius, Lat.] Metaphorical; not literal.
TRALATI'IOUSLY. adv. [from tralatius]. Metaphorically; not literally; not according to the first intention of the word.
Language properly is that of the tongue directed to the ear by speaking; written language is tralatitiously so called, because it is made to represent to the eye the same words which are pronounced. Holder's Elements of Speech.
To TRALI'NEATE. v. n. [trans and line]. To deviate from any direction.
If you tralinete from your father's mind,
What are you else but of a bastard kind?
Do, as your progenitors have done,
And by their virtues prove yourself their son. Dryden.
TRAMMEL. n. f. [trammil, Fr. trama, tragula, Lat.]
1. A net in which birds or fish are caught.
The trammel differeth not much from the shape of the bunt, and serveth to such use as the wear and haking. Carew.
2. Any kind of net.
Her golden locks she roundly did uptry
In braided trammels, that no looter hairs
Did out of order stray about her dainty ears. Fairy Qu.
3. A kind of shackles in which horses are taught to pace.
I may go shufflingly at first, for I was never before walked in trammels; yet I shall drudge at canter, till I have worn off the hitching in my pace. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
To TRAMMEL. v. a. [from the noun]. To catch; to intercept.
If th' assassination
Could trammel up the consequence, and catch
With its surecave success. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
To TRAMPLE. v. a. [trampe, Danish]. To tread under foot with pride, contempt, or elevation.
Cast not your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet. Milton.
My strength shall trample thee as mire. Milton.
To TRAMPLE. v. n.
1. To tread in contempt.
Diogenes trampled on Plato's pride with greater of his own. Government of the Tongue.
Your country's gods I scorn,
And trample on their ignominious altars. Rever.
2. To tread quick and loudly.
I hear his thundering voice resound,
And trampling feet that shake the solid ground. Dryden.
TRAMPLER. n. f. [from trample]. One that tramples.
TRANA'TION. n. f. [trana, Latin]. The act of swimming over.
TRANSE. n. f. [trans, Fr. transitus, Lat.]. It might therefore be written trans. An ecstasy; a state in which the soul is rapt into visions of future or distant things; a temporary absence of the soul from the body.
Gynecia had been in such a trans of musing, that Zelmane was fighting with the lion before she knew of any lion's coming. Sidney, b. i.
Rapt with joy resembling heavenly madness,
My soul was ravish'd quite as in a trans. Spenser's Sonnet.
Abstract as in a trans methought I saw. Milton.
Sudden he starts,
Shook from his tender trans. Thomson's Spring.
TRANSED. adj. [from trans]. Lying in a trans or ecstasy.
His grief grew puerile, and the strings of life
Began to crack. Twice then the trumpets sounded,
And there I left him trans'd. Shakespeare, King Lear.
TRANSGRAM. n. f. [A cant word.] An odd intricately contrived thing.
What's the meaning of all these transgrams and gimcracks?
what are you going about, jumping over my master's hedges, and running your lines cross his grounds? Arbutnot.
TRANNNEL. n. f. A sharp pin.
With a small trammel of iron, or a large nail ground to a sharp point, they mark the brick. Moxon's Mach. Exerc.
TRANQUIL. adj. [tranquille, Fr. tranquillus, Latin.] Quiet; peaceful; undisturbed.
I had been happy
So I had nothing known. Oh now, for ever Farewell the tranquil mind! farewell content! Shakespeare.
TRANQUILLITY. n. f. [tranquillitas, Latin; tranquillitas, Fr.]
Quiet; peace of mind; peace of condition; freedom from perturbation. 8

TRA

Leave off,
To let a weary wretch from her due rest,
And trouble dying souls tranquillity. Fairy Qu. b. ii.
You can scarce imagine any hero passing from one stage of life to another with so much tranquillity, so easy a transition, and so laudable a behaviour. Pope.
To TRANSACT. v. a. [transactus, Lat.]
1. To manage; to negotiate; to conduct a treaty or affairs.
2. To perform; to do; to carry on.
It cannot be expected they should mention particulars which were transacted amongst some few of the disciples only, as the transfiguration and the agony. Addison.
TRANSACTION. n. f. [transactio, Fr. from transact]. Negotiation; dealing between man and man; management; affairs; things managed.
It is not the purpose of this discourse to set down the particular transactions of this treaty. Clarendon, b. viii.
TRANSIMMATION. n. f. [trans and anima]. Conveyance of the soul from one body to another.
If the transimination of Pythagoras were true, that the souls of men transfiguring into species answering their former natures, some men cannot escape that very brood whose fire Satan entered. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vii.
To TRANSCEND. v. a. [transcend, Latin].
1. To pass; to overpass.
It is a dangerous opinion to such popes, as shall transcend their limits and become tyrannical. Bacon.
To judge herself, she must herself transcend,
As greater circles comprehend the less. Davies.
2. To surpass; to outgo; to exceed; to excel.
This glorious piece transcends what he could think;
So much his blood is nobler than his ink. Waller.
These are they Deserve their greatness and unenvy'd stand,
Since what they act transcends what they command. Denb.
High though her wit, yet humble was her mind,
As if she cou'd not, or she wou'd not find,
How much her worth transcended all her kind. Dryden.
3. To surmount; to rise above.
Make disquisition whether these unusual lights be meteorological impressions not transcending the upper region, or whether to be ranked among celestial bodies. Howell.
To TRANSCEND. v. n. To climb. Not in use.
To conclude, because things do not easily sink, they do not drown at all, the fallacy is a frequent addition in human expressions, which often give distinct accounts of proximity, and transcend from one unto another. Brown.
TRANSCENDENCE. n. f. [from transcend].
TRANSCENDENCY. n. f. [from transcend].
1. Excellence; unusual excellence; supereminence.
2. Exaggeration; elevation beyond truth.
It is true greatness to have in one the frailty of a man, and the security of a God: this would have done better in poetry, where transcendencies are more allowed. Bacon's Essays.
TRANSCENDENT. adj. [transcendens, Lat. transcendent, Fr.]
Excellent; supremely excellent; passing others.
Thou, whose strong hand, with so transcendent worth,
Holds high the rein of fair Parthenope. Cragshaw.
There is, in a lawgiver, a habitual and ultimate intention of a more excellent and transcendent nature. Bishop Sanderfon.
If thou best he—But O! how fal'n, how chang'd
From him who in the happy realms of light,
Cloath'd with transcendent brightness, didst outline
Myriads, though bright. Milton.
Oh charming prince! Oh transcendent maid! A. Phillips.
The right our Creator has to our obedience is of so high and transcendent a nature, that it can suffer no competition; his commands must have the first and governing influence on all our actions. Rogers's Sermons.
TRANSCENDENTAL. adj. [transcendentalis, low Lat.].
1. General; pervading many particulars.
2. Supereminent; passing others.
Though the Deity perceiveth not pleasure nor pain, as we do; yet he must have a perfect and transcendental perception of these, and of all other things. Grew's Cosmol. b. ii.
TRANSCENDENTLY. adv. [from transcendent]. Excellently; supereminently.
The law of Christianity is eminently and transcendently called the word of truth. South's Sermons.
To TRANSCOLATE. v. a. [trans and colo, Latin]. To strain through a sieve or colander.
The lungs are, unless pervious like a sponge, unfit to imbibe and transcolate the air. Harvey.
To TRANSCRIBE. v. a. [transcribo, Lat. transcribe, Fr.] To copy; to write from an exemplar.
He was the original of all those inventions from which others did but transcribe copies. Clarendon.
The most rigid exactors of mere outward purity do but transcribe the folly of him who pumps very laboriously in a ship, yet neglects to stop the leak. Decay of Piety.

TRA

If we imitate their repentance as we transcribe their faults;
we shall be received with the same mercy. Rogers.
TRANSCRIBER. n. f. [from transcribe]. A copier; one who writes from a copy.
A coin is in no danger of having its characters altered by copiers and transcribers. Addison.
TRANSCRIPT. n. f. [transcript, Fr. transcriptum, Latin.] A copy; any thing written from an original.
The Grecian learning was but a transcript of the Chaldean and Egyptian; and the Roman of the Grecian. Glanville.
The decalogue of Moses was but a transcript, not an original. South's Sermons.
Dictate, O mighty Judge! what thou hast seen
Of cities and of courts, of books and men,
And deign to let thy servant hold the pen.
Through ages thus I may presume to live,
And from the transcript of thy prose receive
What my own short-liv'd verse can never give. Prior.
TRANSCRIPTION. n. f. [transcription, Fr. from transcriptus, Lat.]. The act of copying.
The ancients were but men; the practice of transcription in our days was no monster in their's: plagiarist had not its nativity with printing, but began in times when thefts were difficult. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i.
The corruptions that have crept into it by many transcriptions was the cause of so great difference. Beverwood.
TRANSCRIPTIVELY. adv. [from transcript]. In manner of a copy.
Not a few transcriptively subscribing their names to other mens endeavours, transcribe all they have written. Brown.
To TRANSCUR. v. n. [transcurro, Lat.]. To run or rove to and fro.
By fixing the mind on one object, it doth not spaciately and transcur. Bacon.
TRANSCURSION. n. f. [from transcurro, Lat.]. Ramble; passage through; passage beyond certain limits; extraordinary deviation.
In a great whale, the sense and the affects of any one part of the body instantly make a transcurstion throughout the whole. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
I have briefly run over transcurstions, as if my pen had been posting with them. Watson's Life of Buckingham.
His philosophy gives them transcurstions beyond the vortex we breathe in, and leads them through others which are only known in an hypothesis. Glanville's Seep.
I am to make often transcurstions into the neighbouring forests as I pass along. Howell.
If man were out of the world, who were then left to view the face of heaven, to wonder at the transcurstion of comets.
More's Antidote against Atheism.
TRANSE. n. f. [trans, Fr. See TRANCE]. A temporary absence of the soul; an ecstasy.
Abstract as in a trans, methought I saw,
Though sleeping, where I lay, and saw the shape
Still glorious before whom awake I stood. Milton.
TRANSELEMENTATION. n. f. [trans and element]. Change of one element into another.
Rain we allow; but if they suppose any other transelementation, it neither agrees with Moses's philosophy; nor Saint Peter's. Burton's Theory of the Earth.
TRANSEXION. n. f. [trans and sexus, Lat.]. Change from one sex to another.
It much impeacheth the iterated transexion of hares, if that be true which some physicians affirm, that transmutation of sexes was only so in opinion, and that those transfigured persons were really men at first. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
To TRANSFER. v. a. [transferre, Fr. transfere, Lat.].
1. To convey, or make over, from one to another.
He that transfers the laws of the Lacedemonians to the people of Athens, should find a great absurdity and inconvenience. Spenser's State of Ireland.
Was't not enough you took my crown away,
But cruelly you must my love betray?
I was well pleas'd to have transferr'd my right;
And better chang'd your claim of lawless might. Dryden.
The king,
Who from himself all envy would remove,
Left both to be determin'd by the laws,
And to the Grecian chiefs transferr'd the cause. Dryden.
This was one perverse effect of their sitting at ease under their vines and fig-trees, that they forget from whence that ease came, and transferr'd all the honour of it upon themselves. Atterbury's Sermons.
Your sacred aid religious monarchs own;
When first they merit, then ascend the throne:
But tyrants dread you, lest your just decree
Transfer the power and fet the people free. Prior.
By reading we learn not only the actions and the sentiments of distant nations, but transfer to ourselves the knowledge and improvements of the most learned men. Watts.

2. To remove; to transport.
The king was much moved with this unexpected accident, because it was stirred in such a place where he could not with safety transfer his own person to suppress it. Bacon's H. VII.
He thirty rowling years the crown shall wear,
Then from Lavinium shall the seat transfer. Dryden.
- TRANSFIGURATION. n. f. [transfiguration, Fr.]
1. Change of form.
In kinds where the discrimination of sexes is obscure, these transformations are more common, and in some without commixture; as in caterpillars or silkworms, wherein there is a visible and triple transfiguration. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
2. The miraculous change of our blessed Saviour's appearance on the mount.
It cannot be expected that other authors should mention particulars which were transacted amongst some of the disciples; such as the transfiguration and the agony in the garden. Addis.
Did Raphael's pencil never chafe to fall?
Say, are his works transfigurations all? Blackmore.
- TO TRANSFIGURE. v. a. [transfigurer, French; trans and figura, Lat.] To transform; to change with respect to outward appearance.
Jesus was transfigured before them, and his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light. Matth.
I am the more zealous to transfigure your love into devotion, because I have observed your passion to have been extremely impatient of confinement. Boyle.
The nuptial right his outrage strait attends,
The dow'r desir'd is his transfigur'd friends:
The incantation backward she repeats,
Inverts her rod, and what she did defeats. Garth.
- TO TRANSFIX. v. a. [transfixus, Lat.] To pierce through.
Amongst these mighty men were women mix'd;
The bold Semiramis, whose sides transfix'd
With son's own blade, her soul reproaches spoke. Fa. Qu.
With linked thunderbolts Transfix us to the bottom of this gulph. Milton's P. Lost.
Diana's dart
In an unhappy chace transfix'd her heart. Dryden's Homer.
Nor good Eurytion envy'd him the prize,
Though he transfix'd the pigeon in the skies. Dryden.
Till fate shall with a single dart
Transfix the pair it cannot part. Penton.
- TO TRANSFORM. v. a. [transformer, Fr. trans and forma, Latin.] To metamorphose; to change with regard to external form.
She demanded of him, whether the goddess of those woods had such a power to transform every-body. Sidney, b. i.
Love is blind, and lovers cannot see
The pretty follies that themselves commit;
For if they could, Cupid himself would blush
To see me thus transform'd to a boy. Shakespeare.
As is the fable of the lady fair,
Which for her lust was turn'd into a cow;
When thirty to a stream she did repair,
And saw herself transform'd the wift not how. Davies.
- TO TRANSFORM. v. n. To be metamorphosed.
His hair transforms to down, his fingers meet
In skinny films and shape his oary feet. Addison.
- TRANSFORMATION. n. f. [from transform.] Change of shape; act of changing the form; state of being changed with regard to form.
Something you have heard
Of Hamlet's transformation; so I call it,
Since not th' exterior, nor the inward man,
Remembers that it was. Shakespeare. Hamlet.
What beast couldst thou be, that were not subject to a beast?
And what a beast art thou already, and see'st not thy loss in transformation! Shakespeare. Timon of Athens.
The mensuration of all manner of curves, and their mutual transformation, are not worth the labour of those who design either of the three learned professions. Watts.
- TRANSPERATION. n. f. [trans and per, Latin.] Passage over the sea.
Since the last transperation of king Richard the second, the crown of England never sent over numbers of men sufficient to defend the small territory. Davies on Ireland.
- TO TRANSFUSE. v. a. [transfusio, Lat.] To pour out of one into another.
Between men and beasts there is no possibility of social communion; because the well-spring of that communion is a natural delight which man hath to transfuse from himself into others, and to receive from others into himself, especially those things wherein the excellency of this kind doth most consist. Hooker, b. i.
Transfus'd on thee his ample spirit rests. Milton.
When did his muse from Fletcher scenes purloin,
As thou whose Eth'ridge dost transfuse to thine?
But so transfus'd, as oil and waters flow,
His always floats above, thine links below. Dryden.

- Where the juices are in a morbid state, if one could suppose all the unsound juices taken away and sound juices immediately transfused, the sound juices would grow morbid. Abb.
- TRANSFUSION. n. f. [transfusion, Fr. transfusio, Lat.] The act of pouring out of one into another.
The crooked part of the pipe was placed in a box, to prevent the loss of the quicksilver that might fall aside in the transfusion from the vessel into the pipe. Boyle.
Poetry is of so subtle a spirit, that in the pouring out of one language into another it will all evaporate; and if a new spirit be not added in the transfusion, there will remain nothing but a caput mortuum. Denham.
Something must be lost in all transfusion, that is, in all translations, but the sense will remain. Dryden.
What noise have we had about transplantation of ducats and transfusion of blood. Baker's Reflections on Learning.
- TO TRANSGRESS. v. a. [transgresser, French; transgressus, Latin.]
1. To pass over; to pass beyond.
Long stood the noble youth oppress'd with awe,
And stupid at the wondrous things he saw,
Surpassing common faith, transgressing nature's law. Dryd.
2. To violate; to break.
Let no man doubt but that every thing is well done, because the world is ruled by so good a guide as transgresseth not his own law, than which nothing can be more absolute, perfect, and just. Hooker, b. i.
This sorrow we must repeat as often as we transgress the divine commandments. Wake's Preparation for Death.
- TO TRANSGRESS. v. n. To offend by violating a law.
I would not marry her, though she were endowed with all Adam had left him before he transgressed. Shakespeare.
Achan transgressed in the thing accused. 1 Chron. ii. 7.
He upbraided us with our offending the law, and objected to our infamy the transgressings of our education. Widd.
- TRANSGRESSION. n. f. [transgression, Fr. from transgress.]
1. Violation of a law; breach of a command.
Shall I abuse this consecrated gift
Of strength, again returning with my hair
After my great transgression: to requite
Favour renew'd, and add a greater sin. Milton.
All accusation still is founded upon some law; for where there is no law, there can be no transgression; and where there can be no transgression, there ought to be no accusation. South's Sermons.
2. Offence; crime; fault.
What's his fault?
—The flat transgression of a school-boy, who, being overjoy'd with finding a bird's nest, shews it his companion, and he steals it.
—Wilt thou make a trust a transgression? The transgression is in the stealer. Shakespeare. Much ado about nothing.
Teach us, sweet madam, for our rude transgression
Some fair excuse. Shakespeare. Love's Labour lost.
- TRANSGRESSIVE. adj. [from transgress.] Faulty; culpable; apt to break laws.
Though permitted unto his proper principles, Adam perhaps would have sinned without the suggestion of Satan, and from the transgressive infirmities of himself might have erred alone, as well as the angels before him. Brown.
- TRANSGRESSOR. n. f. [transgresser, French, from transgress.] Lawbreaker; violator of command; offender.
He intended the discipline of the church should be applied to the greatest and most splendid transgressors, as well as to the punishment of meaner offenders. Clarendon.
I go to judge
On earth these thy transgressors; but thou know'st
Whoever judg'd, the worst on me must light
When time shall be. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.
Ill-worthy I, such title should belong
To me transgressor! who for thee ordain'd
A help, became thy snare. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.
- TRANSIENT. adj. [transiens, Lat.] Soon past; soon passing; short; momentary; not lasting; not durable.
How soon hath thy prediction, fear blest!
Measur'd this transient world, the race of time,
Till time stand fix'd. Milton.
He that rides post through a country, may, from the transient view, tell how in general the parts lie. Lake.
Love hitherto a transient guest,
Ne'er held possession in his breast. Swift.
What is loose love? a transient guest.
A vapour fed from wild desire. Pope.
- TRANSIENTLY. adv. [from transient.] In passage; with a short passage; not extensively.
I touch here but transiently, without any strict method, on some few of those many rules of imitating nature which Aristotle drew from Homer. Dryden.
- TRANSIENTNESS. n. f. [from transient.] Shortness of continuance; speedy passage.

- It were to be wished that all words of this sort, as they resemble the wind in fury and impetuosity, so they might do also in transiency and sudden expiration. Dec. of Pity.
- TRANSIENCY. n. f. [from transire, Lat.] Leap from thing to thing.
By unadvised transiency leaping from the effect to its remotest cause, we observe not the connection of more immediate causalities. Glanville's Seep.
- TRANSIT. n. f. [transitus, Latin.] In astronomy, the passing of any planet just by or under any fixed star; or of the moon in particular, covering or moving close by any other planet. Harris.
- TRANSITION. n. f. [transitio, Latin.]
1. Removal; passage.
Heat and cold have a virtual transition without communication of substance, but moisture not. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
As for the mutation of sexes, and transition into one another, we cannot deny it in hares, it being observable in man. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.
I have given some intimations of the changes which happen in the interior parts of the earth, I mean the transitions and removes of metals and minerals there. Woodward.
2. Change.
The spots are of the same colour throughout, there being an immediate transition from white to black, and not declining gradually, and mixing as they approach. Woodward.
You can scarce imagine any hero passing from one stage of life to another with so easy a transition, and so laudable a behaviour. Pope.
As once inclos'd in woman's beauteous mould;
Thence, by a soft transition we repair,
From earthly vehicles to these of air. Pope.
- TRANSITION. Fr. Passage in writing or conversation from one subject to another.
Then with transition sweet new speech resumes. Milton.
Covetousness was none of his faults, but described as a veil over the true meaning of the poet, which was to satirize his prodigality and voluptuousness, to which he makes a transition. Dryden.
- TRANSITIVE. adj. [transitivus, Lat.]
1. Having the power of passing.
One cause of cold is the contact of cold bodies; for cold is active and transitive into bodies adjacent, as well as heat. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 70.
2. [In grammar.]
A verb transitive is that which signifies an action, conceived as having an effect upon some object; as ferio terram, I strike the earth. Clarke's Latin Grammar.
TRANSITORILY. adv. [from transitory.] With speedy evanescence; with short continuance.
TRANSITORINESS. n. f. [from transitory.] Speedy evanescence.
TRANSITORY. n. f. [transitorius, Fr. transitorius, from transire, Latin.] Continuing but a short time; speedily vanishing.
If we love things have fought; age is a thing
Which we are fifty years in compassing;
If transitory things, which soon decay,
Age must be loveless at the latest day. Donne.
Religion prefers those pleasures which flow from the presence of God evermore, infinitely before the transitory pleasures of this world. Tillotson's Sermons.
- TO TRANSULATE. v. n. [translatus, Lat.]
1. To transport; to remove.
Since our father is translated unto the gods, our will is that they that are in our realm live quietly. 2 Mac. xi. 23.
By faith Enoch was translated that he should not see death. Heb. xi. 5.
Those argent fields
Translated saints or middle spirits hold. Milton.
Of the same soil their nursery prepare
With that of their plantation, lest the tree
Translated should not with the soil agree. Dryden.
The gods their shapes to winter birds translate,
But both obnoxious to their former fate. Dryden.
To go to heaven is to be translated to that kingdom you have longed for; to enjoy the glories of eternity. Wake.
2. It is particularly used of the removal of a bishop from one see to another.
Fisher, bishop of Rochester, when the king would have translated him from that poor bishoprick to a better, he refused, saying, he would not forsake his poor little old wife, with whom he had so long lived. Camden's Remains.
3. To transfer from one to another; to convey.
I will translate the kingdom from the house of Saul, and set up the throne of David. 2 Sam. iii. 10.
Because of unrighteous dealings the kingdom is translated from one people to another. Ecclus. x. 8.
Lucian affirms the souls of usurers, after their death, to be metamorphosed, or translated into the bodies of asses, there to remain for poor men to take their pennyworths out of their bones and sides with the cudgel and spur. Peacham.
As there are apoplexies from inveterate gout, the regimen

- must be to translate the morbid matter upon the extremities of the body. Arbutnot.
Perverse mankind! whose wills, created free;
Charge all their woes on absolute decree;
All to the dooming gods their guilt translate;
And follies are miscall'd the crimes of fate. Pope.
4. To change.
One do I personate of Timon's frame;
Whom fortune with her iv'ry hand waits to her,
Whose present grace to present slaves and servants.
Translates his rivals. Shakespeare. Timon of Athens.
Happy is your grace,
That can translate the stubbornness of fortune
Into so quiet and so sweet a style. Shakespeare. As you like it.
5. [Translator, old Fr.] To interpret in another language; to change into another language retaining the sense.
I can contrive the action of her familiar stile, and the hardest voice of her behaviour, to be englished right, is, I am Sir John Falstaff's.
—He hath studied her well, and translated her out of honestly into English. Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.
Nor word for word too faithfully translate. Raschman.
Read this ere you translate one bit
Of books of high renown.
Were it meant that in despite
Of art and nature such dull clouds should write, Bavius and Mævius had been fav'd by fate. Duke.
For Settle and for Shadwell to translate.
6. To explain. A low colloquial use.
There's matter in these sighs, these profound heaves
You must translate; 'tis fit we understand them. Shakespeare.
- TRANSLATION. n. f. [translatio, Lat. translatio, Fr.]
1. Removal; act of removing.
His disease was an asthma; the cause a metastasis or translation of humours from his joints to his lungs. Harvey.
Translations of morbid matter arise in acute distempers. Arbutnot.
2. The removal of a bishop to another see.
If part of the people be somewhat in the election, you cannot make them nulls or cyphers in the privation or translation. Bacon's War with Spain.
The king, the next time the bishop of London came to him, entertained him with this compellation, my lord's grace of Canterbury, you are very welcome; and gave order for all the necessary forms for the translation. Clarendon.
3. The act of turning into another language; interpretation.
A book of his travels hath been honoured with translation into many languages. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i.
Nor ought a genius less than his that writ,
Attempt translation; for transplanted wit,
All the defects of air and soil doth share,
And colder brains like colder climates are. Denham.
4. Something made by translation; version.
Of both translations, the better I acknowledge that which cometh nearer to the very letter of the very original verity. Hooker, b. v.
- TRANSLATOR. n. f. [translatur, old Fr. from translat.] One that turns any thing into another language.
A new and nobler way thou dost pursue,
To make translations and translators too. Denham.
No translation our own country ever yet produced, hath come up to that of the Old and New Testament; and I am persuaded, that the translators of the Bible were masters of an English stile much fitter for that work than any we see in our present writings, the which is owing to the simplicity that runs through the whole. Swift.
- TRANSLATORY. n. f. [from translat.] Transferring.
The translatory is a lie that transfers the merit of a man's good action to another more deserving. Arbutnot.
- TRANSLOCATION. n. f. [trans and locus, Latin.] Removal of things reciprocally to each others places.
There happened certain translocations at the deluge, the matter constituting animal and vegetable substances being dissolved, and mineral matter substituted in its place, and thereby like translocation of metals in some springs. Woodward.
- TRANSLUCENCY. n. f. [from translucens.] Diaphaneity; transparency.
Lumps of rock crystal heated red hot, then quenched in fair water, exchanged their translucency for whiteness; the ignition and extinction having cracked each lump into a multitude of minute bodies. Boyle on Colours.
- TRANSLUCENT. adj. [trans and lucens or lucidus Lat.] TRANSLUCID. } Transparent; diaphanous; clear; giving a passage to the light.
In anger the spirits ascend and wax eager; which is seen in the eyes, because they are translucent. Bacon.
Wherever fountain or fresh current flow'd
Against the eastern ray, translucent, pure,
With touch æthereal of heav'n's fiery rod,
I drank. Milton.
The golden ewer a maid obsequious brings,
Replenish'd from the cool translucent springs. Pope's Ody.

TRANSMARINE. adj. [transmarinus, Latin.] Lying on the other side of the sea; found beyond sea.

If she had not been drained this way, she might have made herself mistress of Timeurania, her next transmarine neighbour.

Howel's Vocal Forest.
To TRANSMIEW. v. a. [transmuto, Lat. transmutare, French.] To transmute; to transform; to metamorphose; to change. Obsolete.

When him list the rascal routs appall,
Men into stones therewith he could transmiew,
And stones to dust, and dust to nought at all. Fa. Queen.
TRANSMIGRANT. adj. [transmigrans, Lat.] Passing into another country or state.

Besides an union in sovereignty, or a conjunction in parts, there are other implicit confederations, that of colonies or transmigrants towards their mother nation. Bacon's holy War.
To TRANSMIGRATE. v. n. [transmigro, Lat.] To pass from one place or country into another.

This complexion is maintain'd by generation; so that strangers contract it not, and the natives which transmigrate omit it not without commixture. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

If Pythagoras's transmigration were true, that the souls of men transmigrating into species answering their former natures, some men must live over many serpents. Brown's Vulg. Err.
Their souls may transmigrate into each other. Howel.

Regard
The port of Luna, says our learned bard;
Who, in a drunken dream, beheld his soul
The fifth within the transmigrating roll. Dryden.

TRANSMIGRATION. n. f. [transmigration, Fr. from transmigrare.] Passage from one place or state into another.

The sequel of the conjunction of natures in the person of Christ is no abolishment of natural properties appertaining to either substance, no transition or transmigration thereof out of one substance into another. Hosker, b. v.

Seeing the earth of itself puts forth plants without seed, plants may well have a transmigration of species. Bacon.

From the opinion of the metempsychosis, or transmigration of the souls of men into the bodies of beasts, most suitable unto their human condition, after his death, Orpheus the musician became a swan. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Easing their passage hence, for intercourse
Of transmigration, as their lot shall lead. Milton.

'Twas taught by wife Pythagoras,
One soul might through more bodies pass;
Seeing such transmigration there,
She thought it not a fable here. Denham.

When thou wert form'd, heav'n did a man begin,
But the brute soul by chance was shuff'd in:
In woods and wilds thy monarchy maintain,
Where valiant beasts, by force and rapine, reign.

In life's next scene, if transmigration be,
Some bear or lion is reserv'd for thee. Dryden's Aureng.
TRANSMISSION. n. f. [transmissio, Fr. transmissus, Latin.] The act of sending from one place to another, or from one person to another.

If there were any such notable transmission of a colony hither out of Spain, the very chronicles of Spain would not have omitted so memorable a thing. Spenser on Ireland.

Operations by transmission of spirits is one of the highest secrets in nature. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 236.

In the transmission of the sea-water into the pits, the water riseth; but in the transmission of the water through the vessels it falleth. Bacon.

These move swiftly, but then they require a medium well disposed, and their transmission is easily stopped. Bacon.

The uvea has a muscular power, and can dilate and contract that round hole in it called the pupil, for the better moderating the transmission of light. More.

Languages of countries are lost by transmission of colonies of a different language. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

This enquiry will be of use, as a parallel discovery of the transmission of the English laws into Scotland. Hale.

Their reflexion or transmission depends on the constitution of the air and water behind the glais, and not the striking of the rays upon the parts of the glais. Newton's Opticks.

TRANSMISSION. adj. [from transmissus, Lat.] Transmitted; derived from one to another.

And still the fire inculcates to his son
Transmissive lessons of the king's renown. Prior.

Itself a sun; it with transmissive light
Enlivens worlds deny'd to human sight. Prior.

Then grateful Greece with streaming eyes would raise Historick marbles to record his praise;
His praise eternal on the faithful stone,
Had with transmissive honour grac'd his son. Pope.

To TRANSMIT. v. a. [transmitto, Lat. transmittere, Fr.] To send from one person or place to another.

By means of writing, former ages transmit the memorials of ancient times and things to posterity. Hale.

TRA'VEL. n. f. [travail, Fr. from the noun.]

- Journey; act of passing from place to place.
Love had cut him short,
Confin'd within the purlieus of his court.
Three miles he went, nor farther could retreat,
His travels ended at his country-seat. Dryden.
Mingled send into the dance
Moments fraught with all the treasures,
Which thy eastern travel views. Prior.
- Journey of curiosity or instruction.
Let him spend his time no more at home,
Which would be great impeachment to his age,
In having known no travel in his youth. Shakespeare.
Travel in the younger fort is a part of education; in the elder a part of experience. Bacon's Essays, No. 18.
A man not enlightened by travel or reflexion, grows as fond of arbitrary power, to which he hath been used, as of barren countries, in which he has been born and bred. Addis.
- Labour; toil. This should be travail: as in Daniel.
He wars with a retiring enemy,
With much more travail than with victory. Daniel.
What think'st thou of our empire now, though earn'd
With travel difficult. Milton.
- Labour in childbirth. This sense belongs rather to travail.
Thy mother well deserves that short delight,
The nauseous qualms of ten long months and travel to requite. Dryden's Virg.
- TRAVELS. Account of occurrences and observations of a journey into foreign parts.
A book of his travels hath been honoured with the translation of many languages. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Histories engage the soul by sensible occurrences; as also voyages, travels, and accounts of countries. Watts.
- TRAVELLER. n. f. [travailleux, Fr. from travail.]

- One who goes a journey; a wayfarer.
The weary traveller wand'ring that way
Therein did often quench his thirsty heat. Fairy Qu. b. ii.
A little ease to these my torments give,

TRA

TRE

The seed being so necessary for the maintenance of the several species, it is in some doubly and trebly defended. Ray.
 TREE. n. f. trie, Islandick; tree, Danish.]

1. A large vegetable rising, with one woody stem, to a considerable height.

Trees and shrubs, of our native growth in England, are distinguished by Ray. 1. Such as have their flowers disjointed and remote from the fruit; and these are, 1. Nuciferous ones; as, the walnut tree, the hazel-nut tree, the beech, the chestnut, and the common oak. 2. Coniferous ones; of this kind are the Scotch fir, male and female; the pine, the common alder tree, and the birch tree. 3. Bacciferous; as, the juniper and yew trees. 4. Lanigerous ones; as, the black, white, and trembling poplar, willows, and others of all kinds. 5. Such as bear their seeds, having an imperfect flower, in leafy membranes; as, the horse-bean. 6. Such as have their fruits and flowers contiguous; of these some are pomiferous; as, apples and pears; and some bacciferous; as, the forb or service tree, the white or hawthorn, the wild rose, sweet brier, currants, the great bilberry bush, honey-suckle, joy. Pruniferous ones, whose fruit is pretty large and soft, with a stone in the middle; as, the black-thorn or sloe tree, the black and white bullace tree, the black cherry, &c. Bacciferous ones; as, the strawberry tree in the west of Ireland, mistletoe, water elder, the dwarf, a large laurel, the viburnum or way-faring tree, the dog-berry tree, the sea black thorn, the berry-bearing elder, the privet barberry, common elder, the holy, the buckthorn, the berry-bearing heath, the bramble, and spindle tree or prickwood. Such as have their fruit dry when ripe; as, the bladder nut tree, the box tree, the common elm and ash, the maple, the gaul or sweet willow, common heath, broom, dyers wood, furze or gorse, the lime tree, &c. Miller.

Sometime we see a cloud that's dragonish,
 A forked mountain, or blue promontory
 With trees upon't, that nod unto the world,
 And mock our eyes with air. Shakep. Ant. and Cleopatra.
 Who can bid the tree unfix his earth-bound root. Shak.

It is pleasant to look upon a tree in Summer covered with green leaves, decked with blossoms, or laden with fruit, and casting a pleasant shade: but to consider how this tree sprang from a little seed, how nature shaped and fed it till it came to this greatness, is a more rational pleasure. Burnet.

Trees shoot up in one great stem, and at a good distance from the earth, spread into branches: thus gooseberries are shrubs, and oaks are trees. Locke.

2. Any thing branched out.
 Vain are their hopes who fancy to inherit,
 By trees of pedigree, or fame or merit;
 Though plodding heralds through each branch may trace Old captains and dictators of their race. Dryden.

TREE germander. n. f. A plant.
 TREE of life. n. f. [lignum vitæ, Latin.] An evergreen: the wood is esteemed by turners. Miller.

TREE p im ofe. n. f. A plant.
 TREEN. old plur. of tree.

Well run greenhood, got between
 Under the sand-bag he was seen;
 Loutling low like a forster green,
 He knows his tackle and his treen. Benj. Johnson.

TREEN. adj. Wooden; made of wood. Obsolete.
 Sir Thomas Rookesby, being controlled for first suffering himself to be served in treen cups, answered, these homely cups pay truly for that they contain: I had rather drink out of treen and pay gold and silver, than drink out of gold and silver and make wooden payments. Camden.

TREFOIL. n. f. [trifolium, Latin.] A plant.
 The trefoil hath a papilionaceous flower, consisting of the standard, the wings and keel coming out of the empalement together with the pointal covered with its fringed sheath: it becomes a capsule hidden in the empalement, and full of seeds shaped like a kidney, adhering close to the capsule when ripe: some have flowers consisting of one leaf, and filled with kidney-shaped seeds: to this must be added, that the leaves grow by threes, seldom by four or fives, on a common footstalk. Miller.

Hope, by the ancients, was drawn in the form of a sweet and beautiful child, standing upon tipsies, and a trefoil, or three-leaved grass in her hand. Peacham on D'aving.

SOME FOW TREFOIL OR RYE GRASS WITH THEIR CLOVER. Mortimer.
 TRELLAGE. n. f. [French.]

Trellage is a contexture of pales to support espaliers, making a distinct inclosure of any part of a garden. Trecons.

There are as many kinds of gardening as of poetry: makers of flower-gardens are epigrammatists and sonnetiers, contrivers of bowers, grotto's, trellages, and cascades, are romance writers. Spectator, No. 477.

TRELLIS. n. f. [French.] Is a structure of iron, wood, or other, the parts crossing each other like a lattice. Trecons.

You had musty victuals, and he hath help to eat it: he's a very valiant trencherman; he hath an excellent stomach. Shakep. Much ado about nothing.

TRE'NCHEMATE. n. f. [trencher and mate.] A table companion; a parasite.

Because that judicious learning of the ancient sages doth not in this case serve the turn, these trenchermates frame to themselves a way more pleasant; a new method they have of turning things that are serious into mockery, an art of contradiction by way of scorn. Hooker, b. v.

TO TREND. v. n. To tend; to lie in any particular direction. It seems a corruption of tend.

The scouts to several parts divide their way,
 To learn the natives names, their towns explore
 The coasts and trendings of the crooked shore. Dryden.

TRENTALS. n. f. [trente, Fr.]

Trentals or tringals were a number of masses, to the tale of thirty, laid on the same account, according to a certain order instituted by Saint Gregory. Ayliffe's Poregon.

TRENDLE. n. f. [trensel, Saxon.] Any thing turned round. Now improperly written trundle.

TREPAN. n. f. [trepan, Fr.]

1. An instrument by which chirurgeons cut out round pieces of the skull.

2. A snare; a stratagem by which any one is ensnared. [Of this signification Skinner assigns for the reason, that some English ships in queen Elizabeth's reign being invited, with great shew of friendship, into Trepans, a part of Sicily, were there detained.]

But what a thoughtless animal is man,
 How very active in his own trepan. Roscommon.

Can there be any thing of friendship in snares, hooks, and trepans. South's Sermons.

During the commotion of the blood and spirits, in which passion consists, whatsoever is offered to the imagination in favour of it, tends only to deceive the reason: it is indeed a real trepan upon it, feeding it with colours and appearances instead of arguments. South's Sermons.

TO TREPAN. v. a. [from the noun; trepaner, Fr.]

1. To perforate with the trepan.

A putrid matter flowed forth her nostrils, of the same smell with that in trepaning the bone. Wiseham's Surgery.

Few recovered of those that were trepanned. Arbutnot.

2. To catch; to ensnare.

They trepan'd the state, and fix'd it down
 With plots and projects of our own. Hudibras, p. iii.

Those are but trepanned who are called to govern, being invested with authority but bereaved of power, which is nothing else but to mock and betray them into a splendid and magisterial way of being ridiculous. South's Sermons.

TRE

The citizens of Corioli have issued forth
 And given to Lartius and to Marcius battle:
 I saw our party to the trenches driven,
 And then I came away. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

William carries on the trench. Prior.
 Till both the town and castle yield.

TRE'SCHANT. adj. [trenchant, Fr.] Cutting; sharp.
 He fiercely took his trenchant blade in hand,
 With which he struck so furious and so fell,
 That nothing seem'd the puissance could withstand. F. 2.

Against a vanquish'd foe, their swords
 Were sharp and trenchant, not their words. Hudibras.

TRE'NCHE. n. f. [from trench; trencher, Fr.]

1. A piece of wood on which meat is cut at table.
 No more
 I'll scrape trencher, nor wash dish. Shakep. Tempest.

My estate deserves an heir more rais'd,
 Than one which holds a trencher. Shak. Timon of Athens.

When we find our dogs, we let the dish or trencher on the ground. More's Antidote against Abuse.

Their homely fare dispatch'd; the hungry band
 Invade their trenchers next, and soon devour. Dryden.

Many a child may have the idea of a square trencher, or round plate, before he has any idea of infinite. Locke.

2. The table.
 How often hath thou,
 Fed from my trencher, kneel'd down at the board,
 When I have feasted. Shakep. Henry VI.

3. Food; pleasures of the table.
 It could be no ordinary declension of nature that could bring some men, after an ingenious education, to place their summun bonum upon their trenchers, and their utmost felicity in wine. South's Sermons.

TRE'NCHEFULLY. n. f. [trencher and fy.] One that haunts tables; a parasite.

He found all people came to him promiscuously, and he tried which of them were friends, and which only trencher-fishes and spongers. Leviang.

TRE'NCHEMAN. n. f. [trencher and man.] A feeder; an eater. Paladius assured him, that he had already been more fed to his liking than he could be by the skillfullest trenchermen of Media. Sidney.

You had musty victuals, and he hath help to eat it: he's a very valiant trencherman; he hath an excellent stomach. Shakep. Much ado about nothing.

TRE'NCHEMATE. n. f. [trencher and mate.] A table companion; a parasite.

Because that judicious learning of the ancient sages doth not in this case serve the turn, these trenchermates frame to themselves a way more pleasant; a new method they have of turning things that are serious into mockery, an art of contradiction by way of scorn. Hooker, b. v.

TRE

TREPINE. n. f. A small trepan; a smaller instrument of perforation managed by one hand.

I threw a trepan and trephine, and gave them liberty to try both upon a skull. Wiseham's Surgery.

TREPIDATION. n. f. [trepidatio, Lat.]

1. The state of trembling.

The bow tortureth the string continually, and holdeth it in a continual trepidation. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 137.

All objects of the senses which are very offensive, cause the spirits to retire; upon which the parts, in some degree, are destitute; and so there is induced in them a trepidation and horror. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 793.

Moving of th' earth brings harms and fears,
 Men reckon what it did and meant;
 But trepidation of the spheres,
 Though greater far, is innocent. Dante.

They pass the planets sev'n, and pass the fix'd,
 And that crystalline sphere whose balance weighs
 The trepidation talk'd, and that first-mov'd. Milton.

2. State of terror.

Because the whole kingdom stood in a zealous trepidation of the absence of such a prince, I have been the more desirous to research the several passages of the journey. Watson.

His first action of note was in the battle of Lepanto; where the success of that great day, in such trepidation of the state, made every man meritorious. Watson.

TO TRESPASS. v. n. [trespasse, Fr.]

1. To transgress; to offend.

If they shall confess their trespasss which they trespass'd against me, I will remember my covenant. Lev. xxvi. 43.

They not only contradict the general design and particular exprefses of the gospel, but trespass against all logick. Norris.

2. To enter unlawfully on another's ground.

Their morals and economy,
 Most perfectly they made agree:
 Each virtue kept its proper bound,
 Nor trespass'd on the other's ground. Prior.

TRESPASS. n. f. [trespas, Fr.]

1. Transgression; offence.

Your purpos'd low correction
 Is such, as baffle, and the meanest wretches
 For pil'lings, and most common trespasss Are punish'd with. Shakep. King Lear.

The trespass money and sin money was the priests. 2 Kings.
 He shall bring his trespass offering for his sin. Lev. v. 6.

Will God incense his ire
 For such a petty trespass? Milton.

2. Unlawful entrance on another's ground.

TRESPASSER. n. f. [from trespas.]

1. An offender; a transgressor.

TRI

TRIABLE. adj. [from try.]
1. Possible to be experimented; capable of trial.
For the more easy understanding of the experiments triable by our engine, I insinuated that notion, by which all of them will prove explicable. Boyle.
2. Such as may be judicially examined.
No one should be admitted to a bishop's chancellorship without good knowledge in the civil and canon laws, since divers causes triable in the spiritual court are of weight. Ayliffe.
TRIAD. n. f. [trias, Lat. triade, Fr.] Three united.
TRIAL. n. f. [from try.]
1. Test; examination.
With trial fire touch me his finger end;
If he be chaste the flame will back descend,
And turn him to no pain; but if he start,
It is the flesh of a corrupted heart. Shakespeare.
2. Experience; act of examining by experience.
I leave him to your gracious acceptance,
Whose trial shall better publish his commendation. Shak.
Skillful gardeners make trial of the seeds by putting them into water gently boiled; and if good, they will sprout within half an hour. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N<sup>o</sup>. 520.
3. Experiment; experimental knowledge.
Others had trial of cruel mockings and scourgings. Heb.
4. Judicial examination.
Trial is used in law for the examination of all causes, civil or criminal, according to the laws of our realm: the trial is the issue, which is tried upon the indictment, not the indictment itself. Cowell.
He hath resisted law,
And therefore law shall scorn him further trial
Than the severity of public power. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.
5. Temptation; test of virtue.
Left our trial, when least fought,
May find us both perhaps far less prepar'd,
The willing I go. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.
No such company as then thou saw'st Intend thee; for trial only brought,
To see how thou could'st judge of fit and meet. Milton.
Every station is expos'd to some trials, either temptations that provoke our appetites, or disquiet our fears. Rogers.
6. State of being tried.
Good shepherd, tell this youth what 'tis to love?
—It is to be all made of sighs and tears;
It is to be made all of faith and service,
All humbleness, all patience and impatience;
All purity, all trial, all observance. Shakespeare, As you like it.
TRIANGLE. n. f. [triangle, Fr. triangulum, Lat.] A figure of three angles.
The three angles of a triangle are equal to two right ones. Locke.
TRIANGULAR. adj. [triangularis, Lat.] Having three angles.
The frame thereof seem'd partly circular,
And part triangular; O work divine!
These two the first and last proportions are. Fairy Qu.
Though a round figure be most capacious for the honey,
And most convenient for the bee; yet did she not chuse that,
Because then there must have been triangular spaces left void. Ray on the Creation.
TRIBE. n. f. [tribu, Fr. tribus, Lat. from treu, b and v being labials of promiscuous use in the ancient British words; treu from tir es, his lands, is supposed to be Celtic, and used before the Romans had any thing to do with the British government; to prove which Mr. Rowland offers many reasons, which he mentions by imagining that centuria is derived from treu, supposing it to be the same with our centrev, importing a hundred treus or tribes.]
1. A distinct body of the people as divided by family or fortune, or any other characteristic.
I ha' been writing all this night unto all the tribes
And centuries for their voices, to help Catiline
In his election. Boj. Johnson's Cataline.
If the heads of the tribes can be taken off, and the mislead multitude will see their error, such extent of mercy is honourable. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
Who now shall rear you to the sun, or rank
Your tribes, and water from th' ambrosial fount. Milton.
Straggling mountaineers, for publick good,
To rank in tribes, and quit the savage wood,
Houses to build. Tate.
I congratulate my country upon the increase of this happy tribe of men, since, by the present parliament, the race of freeholders is spreading into the remotest corners. Addison.
2. It is often used in contempt.
Folly and vice are easy to describe,
The common subjects of our scribbling tribe. Roscommon.
TRIBLET or TRIBOLET. n. f. A goldsmith's tool for making rings. Ainsl.
TRIBULATION. n. f. [tribulation, Fr.] Persecution; distress; vexation; disturbance of life.
Tribulation being present causeth sorrow, and being imminent breedeth fear. Hosker, b. v.

TRI

The just shall dwell,
And after all their tribulations long,
See golden days, fruitful of golden deeds. Milton.
Death becomes
His final remedy; and after life
Try'd in sharp tribulation, and refin'd
By faith, and faithful works. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.
Our church taught us to pray, that God would, not only in all time of our tribulation, but in all time of our wealth, deliver us. Atterbury's Sermons.
TRIBUNAL. n. f. [tribunal, Latin and French].
1. The seat of a judge.
P' th' market-place, on a tribunal silver'd,
Cleopatra and himself in chairs of gold
Were publickly enthron'd. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.
He sees the room
Where the whole nation does for justice come,
Under whose large roof flourishes the gown,
And judges grave on high tribunals frown. Waller.
Here the tribunal stood. Dryden's Rn.
There is a necessity of standing at his tribunal, who is infinitely wise and just. Grey's Com. b. iii.
2. A court of justice.
Summoning arch-angels to proclaim
Thy dread tribunal. Milton.
TRIBUNUS. n. f. [tribun, tribunus, Lat.].
1. An officer of Rome chosen by the people.
These are the tribunes of the people,
The tongues o' th' common mouth: I do despise them. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
2. The commander of a Roman legion.
TRIBUNITIAL. adj. [tribunitius, Lat.] Suited a tribune;
TRIBUNITIUS. adj. relating to a tribune.
Let them not come in multitudes, or in a tribunitious manner; for that is to clamour counsels, not to inform. Bacon.
Oh happy ages of our ancestors,
Beneath the kings and tribunitial powers
One jail did all their criminals restrain. Dryden's Juvenal.
TRIBUTARY. adj. [tributarius, Fr. tributarius, Lat.].
1. Paying tribute as an acknowledgement of submission to a master.
Thenceforth this land was tributary made
T' ambitious Rome, and did their rule obey,
Till Arthur all that reckoning did defray:
Yet oft the Briton kings against them strongly sway'd. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
The two great empires of the world I know;
And since the earth none larger does afford,
This Charles is some poor tributary lord. Dryden.
Around his throne the sea-born brothers stood,
That swell with tributary urns his flood. Pope.
2. Subject; subordinate.
These he, to grace his tributary gods,
By course commits to feveral government,
And gives them leave to wear their sapphire crowns,
And wield their little tridents. Milton's Comus.
O'er Judah's king ten thousand tyrants reign,
Legions of lust, and various pow'rs of ill
Insult the master's tributary will. Prior.
3. Paid in tribute.
Nor flattery tunes these tributary lays. Connaught.
TRIBUTARY. n. f. [from tribute.] One who pays a stated sum in acknowledgement of subjection.
All the people therein shall be tributaries unto thee, and serve thee. Deut. xx. 11.
The Irish lords did only promise to become tributaries to king Henry the second: and such as only pay tribute, are not properly subjects but vassals. Davies.
TRIBUTE. n. f. [tribut, Fr. tributum, Lat.] Payment made in acknowledgement; subjection.
The Lord's tribute of the sheep was six hundred. Numb.
They that received tribute money said, Doth not your master pay tribute? Mat. xvii. 2.
She receives
As tribute her warmth and light.
To acknowledge this was all he did exact;
Small tribute, where the will to pay was aught. Dryden.
TRICOMANES. n. f. A plant.
A branch of some capillary plant, resembling the common trichomanes, only the pinnae are larger in a dusky grey flay stone. Woodsward.
TRICE. n. f. [I believe this word comes from trails, Fr. corrupted by pronunciation.] A short time; an instant; a stroke.
If they get never to great spoil at any time, the same they waste in a trice, as naturally delighting in spoil, though it do themselves no good.
Just in the nick the cook knock'd thrice,
And all the waiters in a trice
His summons did obey:
Each serving man with dish in hand,
March'd boldly up like our train'd band, Presented, and away. Snelling, He

TRI

He could raise scruples dark and nice,
And after solve them in a trice. Hudibras, p. i.
So when the war had rais'd a storm,
We seen a snake in human form,
All stain'd with infamy and vice,
Leap from the dunghill in a trice. Swift.
It seems incredible at first, that all the blood in our bodies should circulate in a trice, in a very few minutes; but it would be more surprising if we knew the short periods of the great circulation of water. Bentley's Sermons.
TRICHOTOMY. n. f. Division into three parts.
Some disturb the order of nature by dichotomies, trichotomies, sevens, twelves: let the subject with the design you have in view determine the number of parts into which you divide it. Watts.
TRICK. n. f. [treck, Dutch].
1. A fly fraud.
Sir Thomas Moor said, that a trick of law had no less power than the wheel of fortune, to lift men up, or cast them down. Raleigh.
A bantering droll took a journey to Delphos, to try if he could put a trick upon Apollo. L'Estrange's Fables.
Such a one thinks to find some shelter in my friendship, and I betray him: he comes to me for counsel and I shew him a trick. South.
He swore by Stix,
Whate'er she wou'd desire, to grant;
But wife Arcelia knew his tricks. Swift.
2. A dexterous artifice.
Gather the lowest and leaving the top,
Shall teach thee a trick for to double thy crop.
And now, as oft in some distemper'd state,
On one nice trick depends the gen'ral fate. Pope.
3. A vicious practice.
Suspicion shall be stuck full of eyes:
For treason is but trusted like a fox,
Who ne'er so tame, so cherish'd and lock'd up,
Will have a wild trick of his ancestors. Shakespeare.
I entertain you with somewhat more worthy than the stale exploded trick of fulsom panegyrics. Dryden.
Some friends to vice pretend,
That I the tricks of youth too roughly blame. Dryden.
4. A juggle; an antic; any thing done to cheat jocosely, or to divert.
A rev'rend prelate stopp'd his coach and fix,
To laugh a little at our Andrew's tricks. Prior.
5. An unexpected effect.
So selfest foes who broke their sleep,
To take the one the other, by some chance,
Some trick not worth an egg, shall grow dear friends. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.
6. A practice; a manner; a habit.
I spoke it but according to the trick: if you'll hang me you may. Shakespeare.
The trick of that voice I well remember. Shakespeare.
Behold,
Although the print be little, the whole matter
And copy of the father; eye, nose, lip,
The trick of 's frown, his forehead. Shak, Winter's Tale.
7. A number of cards laid regularly up in play: as, a trick of cards.
TO TRICK. v. a. [from the noun; tricker, Fr.]
1. To cheat; to impose on; to defraud.
It is impossible that the whole world should thus conspire to cheat themselves, to put a delusion on mankind, and trick themselves into belief. Stephens's Sermons.
2. To dress; to decorate; to adorn; properly to knot. [trica, in low Latin, signifies a knot of hair; treccia, Italian: hence trace. *Matt. 23. 5. Simonistien's says of Godiva of Coventry, that she rode tricus capitis & crines dissolvens.]
And trick them up in knotted curls anew. Drayton.
They turned the imposture upon the king, and gave out, that to defeat the true inheritor he had tricked up a boy in the likeness of Edward Plantagenet. Bacon's Henry VII.
Horridly trick
With blood of fathers, mothers, daughters, sons, Shakespeare.
Bak'd and impasted with the parching fires,
This pillar is but a medley, or a mass of all the precedent ornaments, making a new kind by stealth; and though the most richly tricked, yet the poorest in this, that he is a borrower of all his beauty. Wotton's Architect.
Their heads are trick with taffels and flowers. Sandys.
Woful shepherds, weep no more,
For Lycidas, your sorrow, is not dead:
Sunk, though he be, beneath the wat'ry floor;
So sinks the Day-star in the ocean bed,
And yet anon repairs his drooping head,
And tricks his beams, and with new spangled ore,
Flames in the forehead of the morning sky. Milton.
A daw that had a mind to be sparkish, tricked himself up with all the gay feathers he could muster. *L'Estrange's Fab.

TRI

Love is an airy good, opinion makes;
That tricks and dresses up the gaudy dream. Dryden.
People lavish it profusely in tricking up their children in fine cloaths, and yet starve their minds. Locke.
3. To perform by slight of hand, or with a tight touch.
The colours and the ground prepare:
Dip in the rainbow, trick her off in air, Pope.
Chuse a firm cloud before it fall.
TO TRICK. v. n. To live by fraud.
Thus they jog on, still tricking, never thriving,
And murr'ring plays, which they call reviving. Dryden.
TRICKER. n. f. [This is often written trigger; I know not which is right.] The catch which being pulled disengages the cock of the gun, that it may give fire.
Pulling aside the tricker we observed, that the force of the spring of the lock was not sensibly abated by the absence of the air. Boyle.
As a goose
In death contracts his talons close;
So did the knight, and with one claw
The tricker of his pistol draw. Hudibras, p. i.
TRICKING. n. f. [from trick.] Dress; ornament.
Get us properties and tricking for our fairies. Shakespeare.
TRICKISH. adj. [from trick.] Knavishly artful; fraudulently cunning; mischievously subtle.
All he says is in a loose, slippery, and trickish way of reasoning. Pope.
TO TRICKLE. v. n. [Of this word I find no etymology that seems well authorized or probable.] To fall in drops; to rill in a slender stream.
He, prick'd with pride,
Forth spurred fast; adown his courser's side
The red blood trickling, stain'd the way. Fa. Qu. b. i.
Fast beside there trickled softly down
A gentle stream, whose murr'ring wave did play
Amongst the pumy stones, and made a sound
To lull him soft asleep that by it lay. Fa. Qu. b. ii.
Some noises help sleep; as, the blowing of the wind, and trickling of water, as moving in the spirits a gentle attention, which stilleth the discursive motion. Bacon.
He wakened by the trickling of his blood. Wisdeman.
Beneath his ear the fast'ned arrow stood,
And from the wound appear'd the trickling blood. Dryden.
All at once his grief and rage appear'd,
And floods of tears ran trickling down his beard. Dryden.
He lay stretch'd along, his eyes fixt upward,
And ever and anon a silent tear
Stole down, and trickled from his hoary beard. Dryden.
The emblems of honour wrought on the front in the brittle materials above-mentioned, trickled away under the first impressions of the heat. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 28.
Tombrown'd with native bronze, lo! Henly stands,
Tuning his voice and balancing his hands:
How fluent nonsense trickles from his tongue!
How sweet the periods, neither said nor sung. Pope.
They empty heads console with empty sound.
No more, alas! the voice of fame they hear,
The balm of dulness trickling in their ear. Pope's Dunciad.
Subdu'd,
The frost resolves into a trickling thaw. Thomson's Winter.
TRICKSY. adj. [from trick.] Pretty. This is a word of endearment.
The fool hath planted in his memory
An army of good words; and I do know
A many fools that stand in better place,
Garnish'd like him, that for a tricksy word
Defy the matter. Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice.
All this service have I done since I went.
—My tricksy spirit! Shakespeare's Tempest.
TRICORPORAL. adj. [tricarpus, Lat.] Having three bodies.
TRIDE. adj. [among hunters; tride, French.] Short and ready. Bailey.
TRIDENT. n. f. [trident, Fr. tridentis, Lat.] A three-forked sceptre of Neptune.
His nature is too noble for the world:
He would not flatter Neptune for his trident. Shakespeare.
Can't thou with figs pierce him to the quick?
Or in his skull thy barbed trident stick? Sandys on Job.
He lets them wear their sapphire crowns,
And wield their little tridents. Milton.

tion, but will not fubfift in a violent fire. Brown.
TRITURATION. n. f. [trituration, Fr. trituro, Lat.] Reduction of any fubftances to powder upon a ftone with a muller, as colours are ground: it is alfo called levigation.
He affirmeth, that a pumice ftone powdered is lighter than one entire; that abatement can hardly be avoided in trituration. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv.
TRIVET. n. f. [See TREVET.] Any thing fupported by three feet.
The beft at horfe-race he ordain'd a lady for his prize, Generally fruitful; fair and young, and fkill'd in houfe-wiferies;
Of all kind fitting; and withal a trivet, that enclos'd
Twenty-two meafures. Chapman's Iliad.
The trivet table of a foot was lame,
A blot which prudent Baucis overcame,
Who thrufts beneath the limping leg a fherd. Dryden.
TRIVIAL. n. f. [trivialis, Fr. trivialis, Lat.]
1. Vile; worthless; vulgar; fuch as may be picked up in the highway.
Be fubjects great, and worth a poet's voice,
For men of fenfe defpise a trivial choice. Refcommon.
2. Light; trifling; unimportant; inconfiderable. This ufe is more frequent, though lefs juft.
This argues confidence in your grace,
But the refpects thereof are nice and trivial,
All circumftances well confidered. Shakefp. Rich. III.
See you mad fools, who, for fome trivial right,
For love, or for miftaken honour, fight. Dryden.
Were they only fome flight and trivial indifcretions, to which the example of the world expofed us, it might perhaps not much concern our religion. Rogers's Serm.
In ev'ry work regard the writer's end;
And if the means be juft, the conduct true,
Applaufe, in fpite of trivial faults, is due. Pope.
The ancient poets are like many modern ladies; let an action be never fo trivial in itfelf, they always make it appear of the utmoft importance. Pope.
TRIVIALITY. adv. [from trivial.]
1. Commonly; vulgarly.
Money is not the finews of war, as is trivially faid, where the finews of mens arms, in effeminate people, fail. Bacon.
2. Lightly; inconfiderably.
TRIVIALNESS. n. f. [from trivial.]
1. Commonnefs; vulgarity.
2. Lightnefs; unimportance.
TRUMP. n. f. [triumphus, Lat. triumpho, Fr.]

3. Victory; conquest.
Eros has
Packt cards with Cafars, and falfe play'd my glory Unto an enemy's triumph. Shakefp. Ant. and Cleopatra.
Each order bright
Sung triumph, and him fung victorious king. Milton.
Turn arcs of triumph to a garden-gate. Pope.
If fools admire, or whining coxcombs toaft,
The vain coquets the trifling triumphs boatt. Legie.
4. Joy for fuccels.
Great triumph and rejoicing was in heav'n. Milton.
5. A conquering card now called trump. See TRUMP.
To TRIUMPH. v. n. [triumpho, Lat. triumpho, Fr.] This word is always accented in profe on the firft fyllable, but in poetry fometimes on the laft.
1. To celebrate a victory with pomp; to rejoice for victory.
The triumphing of the wicked is fhort, and the joy of the hypocrite is but for a moment. Job xx. 5.
Your victory, alas, begets my fears;
Can you not then triumph without my tears. Dryden.
2. To obtain victory.
This great commander fought many times to perfuade So-lyman to forbear to ufe his forces any farther againft the Chriftians, over whom he had fufficiently triumphed, and turn them upon the Perfians. Kroll's Hift. of the Turks.
Then all this earthy groffnefs quit,
Attir'd with ftars, we fhall for ever fit,
Triumphing over death, and chance, and time. Milton.
There fix thy faith and triumph o'er the world;
For who can help, or who can fave befides?
While blooming youth and gay delight
Sit on thy rofy cheeks confelt,
Thou haft, my dear, undoubted right
To triumph o'er this deftin'd breath. Prior.
3. To infult upon an advantage gained.
How ill befeming is it in thy fex
To triumph, like an Amazonian trull. Shakefppeare.
Sorrow on all the pack of you,
That triumph thus upon my misery. Shakefppeare.
Our grand foe,
Who now triumphs, and in th' excefs of joy
Sole reigning, holds the tyranny of heav'n. Milton.
TRIUMPHAL. adj. [triumphalis, Fr. triumphalis, Lat. from triumph.] Ufed in celebrating victory.
He left only triumphal garments to the general. Bacon.
Ye fo near heav'n's door,
Triumphal with triumphal act have met. Milton.
Steel could the works of mortal pride confound,
And hew triumphal arches to the ground. Pope.
Left we fhould for honour take
The drunken quarrel of a rake;
Or think it feated in a fear,
Or a proud triumphal car. Swift.
TRIUMPHAL. n. f. [triumphalia, Lat. triumphal ornaments.]
A token of victory. Not in ufe.
He to his crew that fat confulting brought Joylefs triumphs of his hop'd fuccels. Milton's Paradife Regain'd.
TRIUMPHANT. adj. [triumphans, Lat. triumphans, Fr.]
1. Celebrating a victory.
Captives bound to a triumphant car. Shakefppeare.
It was drawn as a triumphal chariot, which at the fame time both follows and triumphs. South's Sermons.
2. Rejoicing as for victory.
Think you, but that I know our ftate fecure,
I would be fo triumphant as I am? Shakefp. Rich. III.
Off with the traitor's head;
And now to London with triumphant march,
There to be crowned. Shakefp. Henry VI. p. iii.
Successful beyond hope, to lead ye forth
Triumphant out of this infernal pit. Milton.
3. Victorious; graced with conquest.
He fpeedily through all the hierarchies
Intends to pafs triumphant, and give laws. Milton.
Athena, war's triumphant maid,
The happy fon will, as the father, aid. Pope's Odifley.
TRIUMPHANTLY. adv. [from triumphant.]
1. In a triumphant manner in token of victory; joyfully as for victory.
Victory with little lofs doth play
Upon the dancing banners of the French;
Who are at hand triumphantly difplay'd. Shakefppeare.
Through armed ranks triumphantly fhe drives,
And with one glance commands ten thoufand lives. Gran.
2. Victoriously; with fuccels.
Thou muft, as a foreign recreant, be led
With manacles along our ftreets; or elfe
Triumphantly tread on thy country's ruin,
And bear the palm. Shakefppeare's Coriolanus.

in its stead, is the source of most of those confusions that plague the universe. South's Sermons.
TRIUMPHER. n. f. [from triumph.] One who triumphs.
 These words become your lips, as they pass through them.
 And enter in our ears, like great triumphers,
 In their applauding gates. Shaksp. Timon of Athens.
 August was dedicated to Augustus by the senate, because in the same month he was the first time created consul, and thrice triumpher in Rome. Peacocks on Drawing.
TRIUMVIRATE. n. f. [triumviratus or triumvirat, Lat. triumvirat, Fr.] A coalition or concurrence of three men.
 Lepidus of the triumvirate
 Should be depos'd. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopatra.
 The triumvir, the three corner cap of society. Shaksp.peare.
 During that triumvirate of kings, Henry the eighth of England, Francis the first of France, and Charles the fifth emperor of Germany, none of the three could win a palm of ground but the other two would balance it. Bacon's Essays.
 With these the Piercys them confederate,
 And, as three heads conjoin in one intent,
 And instituting a triumvirate,
 Do part the land in triple government. Daniel's Civil War.
 From distant regions fortune sends
 An odd triumvirate of friends. Swift.
TRIUNE. adj. [tres and unus, Lat.] At once three and one.
 We read in scripture of a triune Deity, of God made flesh in the womb of a virgin, and crucified by the Jews. Burnet.
TO TROT. v. a. [with hunters.] To cry as a buck does at rutting time. Diët.
TROCAR. n. f. [trocar corrupted from trois quart, French.] A chirurgical instrument.
 The handle of the trocar is of wood, the canula of silver, and the perforator of steel. Sharp's Surgery.
TROCHAEAL. adj. [trochaeus, Fr. trochaicus, Lat.] Consisting of trochees.
TROCHAEI. n. f. [τροχαιοί, Gr.] Two processes of the thigh bone, called rotator major and minor, in which the tendons of many muscles terminate. Diët.
TROCHEE. n. f. [trocheus, Lat. trochee, Fr. τροχαιον, Gr.] A foot used in Latin poetry, consisting of a long and short syllable.
TROCHILICKS. n. f. [τροχίλιον, Gr.] a wheel.] The science of rotatory motion.
 There succeeded new inventions and horologies, composed by trochilicks, or the artifice of wheels, whereof some are kept in motion by weight, others without. Brown.
 It is requisite that we rightly understand some principles in trochilicks, or the art of wheel instruments; as chiefly the relation betwixt the parts of a wheel and those of a balance, the several proportions in the semidiameter of a wheel being answerable to the sides of a balance. Wilkins's Dædalus.
TROCHINGS. n. f. The branches on a deer's head. Ainsl.
TROCHISCH. n. f. [τροχισκος, Gr. trochisque, Fr. trochiscus, Latin.] A kind of tablet or lozenge.
 The trochisks of vipers, so much magnified, and the flesh of snakes some ways condited and corrected. Bacon.
ТРОПЕ, the preterite of tread.
 They tread the grapes and made merry. Judges ix. 27.
TRODE. n. f. [from tread, pret. of tread.] Footing.
 The tread is not so tickle. Spenser.
 They never set foot on that same tread,
 But baulke their right way, and strain abroad. Spenser.
TROD.
TRODDEN. } participate passive of tread.
 Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles. Luke xxi.
 Thou, infernal serpent, shalt not long
 Rule in the clouds; like an autumnal star,
 Or light'ning, thou shalt fall from heav'n trod down Under his feet. Milton's Par. Reg. b. iv.
 Ev'n the rough rocks with tender myrtle bloom,
 And trodden weeds send out a rich perfume. Addison.
TROGLDYTE. n. f. [τρογλοδιτης, Gr.] One who inhabits caves of the earth.
 Procure me a troglodyte footman, who can catch a roe at his full speed. Arbut. and Pope's Mart. Scrib.
TO TROLL. v. a. [trollen, to roll, Dutch; perhaps from trochlea, Lat. a thing to turn round.] To move circularly; to drive about.
 With the phant'ies of hey troll,
 Troll about the bridal bowl,
 And divide the broad-bread cake,
 Round about the bride's stake. Benj. Johnson's Underwoods.
TO TROLL. v. n.
 1. To roll; to run round.
 How pleasant on the banks of Styx,
 To troll it in a coach and fix. Swift.
 2. To fish for a pike with a rod which has a pulley towards the bottom, which I suppose gives occasion to the term.
 Nor drain I ponds the golden carp to take,
 Nor trouble for pikes, dispeoplers of the lake. Gay.

TRO

TROLOP. n. f. [A low word, I know not whence derived.] A flatteringly, loose woman.
TROLMYDAMES. n. f. [Of this word I know not the meaning.] A fellow I have known to go about with trolymdames; I knew him once a servant of the prince. Shak. Winter's Tale.
TROOP. n. f. [troupe, Fr. troppa, Italian; troope, Dutch; troop, Swedish; troppa, low Latin.]
 1. A company; a number of people collected together.
 That which should accompany old age,
 As honour, love, obedience, troops of friends,
 I must not look to have. Shaksp. Macbeth.
 Saw you not a blessed troop
 Invite me to a banquet, whose bright faces
 Cast thousand beams upon me like the sun. Shaksp.peare.
 As the mind, by putting together the repeated ideas of unity, makes the collective mode of any number, as a score, or a gro's; so by putting together several particular substances, it makes collective ideas of substances, as a troop, an army. Locke.
 2. A body of soldiers.
 Eneas seeks his absent foe,
 And sends his slaughter'd troops to shades below. Dryden.
 3. A small body of cavalry.
TO TROOP. v. u. [from the noun.]
 1. To march in a body.
 I do not, as an enemy to peace,
 Troop in the throngs of military men,
 But rather shew a while like fearful war. Shaksp.peare.
 They anon
 With hundreds, and with thousands, trooping came, Attended. Milton's Par. Lost, b. i.
 Armies at the call of trumpet
 Troop to their standard. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vii.
 2. To march in haste.
 Yonder shines Aurora's harbinger,
 At whose approach ghosts, wand'ring here and there,
 Troop home to churchyards. Shaksp.peare.
 The dry streets flow'd with men,
 That troop'd up to the king's capacious court. Chapman.
 3. To march in company.
 I do invest you jointly with my power,
 Preeminence, and all the large effects
 That troop with majesty. Shaksp. King Lear.
TROOPER. n. f. [from troop.] A horse soldier A trooper fights only on horseback; a dragoon marches on horseback, but fights either as a horseman or footman.
 Custom makes us think well of any thing: what can be more indecent now than for any to wear boots but troopers and travellers? yet not many years since it was all the fashion. Grew.
TROPE. n. f. [τροπος, Gr. trope, Fr. tropus, Lat.] A change of a word from its original signification; as, the clouds foretold rain for foretold.
 For rhetoric he could not ope
 His mouth, but out there flew a trope. Hudibras.
 If this licence be included in a single word, it admits of tropes; if in a sentence, of figures.
TROPHIED. adj. [from trophy.] Adorned with trophies.
 Some greedy minion, or imperious wife,
 The trophy'd arches, story'd halls invade. Pope.
TROPHY. n. f. [trophaum, trophaum, Latin.] Something taken from an enemy, and shewn or treasured up in proof of victory.
 What trophy then shall I most fit devise,
 In which I may record the memory
 Of my love's conquest, peerless beauty's prize
 Adorn'd with honour, love, and chastity? Spenser.
 To have borne
 His bruised helmet and his bended sword,
 Before him through the city, he forbids;
 Giving all trophy, signal, and ostent,
 Quite from himself to God. Shaksp. Henry V.
 There lie thy bones,
 Till we with trophies do adorn thy tomb. Shaksp.peare.
 Twice will I not review the morning's rise,
 Till I have torn that trophy from thy back,
 And split thy heart for wearing it. Shaksp.peare.
 In ancient times the trophies erected upon the place of the victory, the triumphs of the generals upon their return, the great donatives upon the disbanding of the armies, were things able to enflame all mens courage. Bacon's Essays.
 Around the posts hung helmets, darts, and spears,
 And captive chariots, axes, shields, and bars,
 And broken beaks of ships, the trophies of their wars. Dry.
 The tomb with manly arms and trophies grace,
 To shew posterity Elpenor was. Pope's Odyssey, b. xi.
TROPICAL. adj. [from trope.]
 1. Rhetorically changed from the original meaning.
 A strict and literal acceptance of a loose and tropical expression was a second ground. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 The words are tropical or figurative, and import an hyperbole, which is a way of expressing things beyond what really and naturally they are in themselves. South's Sermons.
 The

TRO

The foundation of all parables is, some analogy or similitude between the tropical or allusive part of the parable, and the thing intended by it. South's Sermons.
 2. [From tropic.] Placed near the tropick; belonging to the tropick.
 The pine apple is one of the tropical fruits. Salmon.
TROPICK. n. f. [tropique, Fr. tropicus, Lat.] The line at which the sun turns back, of which the North has the tropick of Cancer, and the South the tropick of Capricorn.
 Under the tropick is our language spoke,
 And part of Flanders hath receiv'd our yoke. Waller.
 Since on ev'ry sea, on ev'ry coast,
 Your men have been distress'd, your navy toft,
 Sev'n times the sun has either tropick view'd,
 The Winter banish'd, and the Spring renew'd. Dryden.
TROPOLOGICAL. n. f. [tropologus, Fr. τροπος and λογος.] Varied by tropes; changed from the original import of the words.
TROPOLOGY. n. f. [τροπος and λογος.] A rhetorical mode of speech including tropes, or a change of some word from the original meaning.
 Not attaining the deuterology and second intention of words, they omit their superconsequences, coherences, figures, or tropologies, and are not persuaded beyond their literalities. Tracy's Vulgar Errors.
TROUSERS. n. f. [trousses, Fr.] Breeches; hose. See TROUSE.
 You rode like a kern of Ireland; your French hose off, and in your strait trousers. Shaksp. Henry V.
TO TROT. v. n. [trotter, Fr. trotten, Dutch.]
 1. To move with a high jolting pace.
 Poor Tom, that hath made him proud of heart, to ride on a bay trotting horse, over four inch'd bridges, to course his own shadow for a traitor. Shaksp. King Lear.
 Whom doth time trot withal?
 —He trots hard with a young maid, between the contract of her marriage and the day it is solemniz'd: if the interim be but a sevennight time's pace, is so hard that it seems the length of seven years. Shaksp. As you like it.
 Take a gentle trotting horse, and come up and see your old friends. Dennis.
 2. To walk fast, in a ludicrous or contemptuous sense.
TROT. n. f. [trot, Fr. from the verb.]
 1. The jolting high pace of a horse.
 His honesty is not
 So loose or easy, that a ruffling wind
 Can blow away, or glitt'ring look it blind:
 Who rides his fire and even trot,
 While the world now rides by, now lags behind. Herbert.
 Here lieth one who did most truly prove,
 That he could never die while he could move;
 So hung his destiny, never to rot
 While he might still jog on and keep his trot. Milton.
 The virtuous siddle will amble when the world is upon the hardest trot. Dryden.
 2. An old woman. In contempt. I know not whence derived.
 Give him gold enough, and marry him to an old trot with ne'er a tooth in her head: why, nothing comes amiss, so money comes withal. Shak. Taming of the Shrew.
 How now bold-face, cries an old trot's firrah, we eat our own hens, and what you eat you steal. LE Strange.
TROT. n. f. [trout, old English; træd, Saxon.] Truth;
 faith; fidelity.
 Saint Withold met the night-mare,
 Bid her light and her trot plight. Shaksp.peare.
 Stephen affails the realm, obtains the crown,
 Such tumults raising as torment them both:
 Th' afflicted state, divided in their trot
 And partial faith, most miserable grown, Endures the while. Daniel's Civil War.
 In trot, thou'rt able to instruct grey hairs,
 And teach the wily African deceit. Addison's Cato.
TROTLESS. adj. [from trot.] Faithless; treacherous.
 Thrall to the faithless waves and trothless sky. Fairfax.
TROTTLIGHT. adj. [trot and plight.] Betrothed; affianced.
 This, your son in law,
 Is trothplight to your daughter. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.
TO TROUBLE. v. a. [troubler, Fr.]
 1. To disturb; to perplex.
 An hour before the worshipp'd sun
 Pear'd through the golden window of the East,
 A troubled mind drew me to walk abroad. Shaksp.peare.
 But think not here to trouble holy rest.
 Never trouble yourself about those faults which age will cure. Locke on Education.
 2. To afflict; to grieve.
 It would not trouble me to be slain for thee, but much it torments me to be slain by thee. Sidney, b. ii.
 They pertinaciously maintain that afflictions are no real evils; and therefore a wife man ought not to be troubled at them. Tillotson's Sermons.
 Though it is in vain to be troubled for that which I cannot chuse, yet I cannot chuse but be afflicted. Tillotson's Sermons.

TRO

3. To distress; to make uneasy.
 Be not dismay'd nor troubled at these tidings. Milton.
 He was fore troubled in mind, and much distressed. Mac.
 4. To busy; to engage overmuch.
 Martha, thou art careful, and troubled about many things. Luke x. 41.
 5. To give occasion of labour to. A word of civility or slight regard.
 I will not trouble myself to prove that all terms are not definable, from that progress in infinitum which it will lead us into. Locke.
 6. To teize; to vex.
 The boy so troubles me;
 'Tis past enduring. Shaksp.peare.
 7. To disorder; to put into agitation or commotion.
 A woman mov'd is like a fountain troubled;
 Muddy, ill seeming, thick, bereft of beauty. Shaksp.peare.
 An angel went down into the pool and troubled the water;
 whosoever first after the troubling stepped in was made whole. John v. 4.
 God looking forth will trouble all his host. Milton.
 Hear how she the ear employs;
 Their office is the troubled air to take. Davies.
 Seas are troubled when they do revoke
 Their flowing waves into themselves again. Davies.
 It is not bare agitation, but the sediment at the bottom that troubles and defiles the water. South.
 The best law in our days is that which continues our judges during their good behaviour, without leaving them to the mercy of such who might, by an undue influence, trouble and pervert the course of justice. Addison's Guard. N<sup>o</sup>. 99.
 Thy force alone their fury can restrain,
 And smooth the waves, or swell the trouble'd main. Dryden.
 8. To mind with anxiety.
 He had credit enough with his master to provide for his own interest, and troubled not himself for that of others. Clar.
 9. [In low language.] To fute for a debt.
TROUBLE. n. f. [trouble, French.]
 1. Disturbance; perplexity.
 They all his host derided, while they stood
 A while in trouble. Milton.
 2. Affliction; calamity.
 Double, double, toil and trouble,
 Fire burn and cauldron bubble. Shaksp. Macbeth.
 3. Molestation; obstruction; inconvenience.
 Take to thee from among the cherubim
 The choice of flaming warriors, left the fiend
 Some new trouble raise. Milton.
 4. Uneasiness; vexation.
 I have dream'd
 Of much offence and trouble, which my mind
 Knew never till this irksome night. Milton.
TROUBLE-STATE. n. f. [trouble and state.] Disturber of a community; publick makebate.
 Those fair baits these trouble-states still use,
 Pretence of common good, the king's ill course,
 Must be cast forth. Daniel's Civil War.
TROUBLER. n. f. [from trouble.] Disturber; confounder.
 Unhappy falls that hard necessity,
 Quoth he, the troubler of my happy peace,
 And vowed foe of my felicity. Fairy Qu. b. i.
 Heav'n's hurl down their indignation
 On thee, thou troubler of the poor world's peace! Shak.
 The best temper of minds desireth good name and true honour; the lighter, popularity and applause; the more depraved, subjection and tyranny; as is seen in great conquerors and troublers of the world, and more in arch-hereticks. Bac.
 Spain,
 Whose chief support and finews are of coin,
 Our nation's solid virtue did oppose
 To the rich troublers of the world's repose. Waller.
 The sword justly drawn by us can scarce safely be sheathed, till the power of the great troubler of our peace be pared, as to be under no apprehensions for the future. Atterbury.
TROUBLESOME. adj. [from trouble.]
 1. Full of molestation; vexatious; uneasy; afflictive.
 Heav'n knows
 By what bye-paths and indirect crooked ways
 I met this crown; and I myself know well
 How troublesome it sat upon my head:
 To thee it shall descend with better quiet. Shaksp.peare.
 He must be very wise that can forbear being troubled at things very troublesome. Tillotson's Sermons.
 Though our passage through this world be rough and troublesome, yet the trouble will be but short, and the rest and contentment at the end will be an ample recompence. Atterb.
 2. Burdensome; tiresome; wearisome.
 My mother will never be troublesome to me. Pope.
 3. Full of teizing business.
 All this could not make us accuse her, though it made us almost pine away for sight, to lose any of our time in so troublesome an idleness. Sidney.
 4. Slightly

TRO

4. Slightly harrasing.
They cas'd the putting off
These troublesome disguises which we wear. Milton.
Why doth the crown lie there upon his pillow,
Being so troublesome a bedfellow. Shakesp. Henry IV.
5. Unseasonably engaging; improperly importuning.
She of late is lightened of her womb.
That her to see should be but troublesome. Fa. Qu. b. i.
6. Importunate; teizing
Two or three troublesome old nurses, never let me have a quiet night's rest with knocking me up. Arbutnot.
TROUBLESOMELY. adv. [from troublesome.] Vexatiously;
wearisomely; unseasonably; importunately.
Though men will not be so troublesomely critical as to correct others in the use of words; yet where truth is concerned, it can be no fault to desire their explication. Locke.
TROUBLESOMENESS. n. f. [from troublesome.]
1. Vexatiousness; uneasiness.
The lord treasurer, he complained of the troublesomeness of the place, for that the exchequer was so empty: the chancellor answered, be of good cheer, for now you shall see the bottom of your business at the first. Bacon.
2. Importunity; unseasonableness.
TROUBLOUS. adj. [from trouble.] Tumultuous; confused; disordered; put into commotion. An elegant word, but disused.
He along would fly
Upon the streaming rivers, sport to find;
And oft would dare tempt the troubulous wind. Spenser.
Soon as they this mock king did espy,
Their troubulous strife they stinted by and by. Hubb. Tale.
No other noise, nor people's troubulous cries,
As still are wont to annoy the walled town,
Might there be heard. Fairy Queen, b. i.
As a tall ship tossed in troubulous seas,
Whom raging winds threaten to make the prey
Of the rough rocks. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
Then, masters, look to see a troubulous world. Shakesp.
Only one supply
In four years troubulous and expensive reign. Daniel.
TROVER. n. f. [trouver, French.] In the common law, is an action which a man hath against one that having found any of his goods refuseth to deliver them upon demand. Cowel.
TROUGH. n. f. [troog, tröh, Saxon; troch, Dutch; trou, Danish; traug, Islandick; truga, Italian.] Any thing hollowed and open longitudinally on the upper side.
The bloody boar
That spoil'd your summer fields and fruitful vines, Swills your warm blood like wash, and makes his trough
In your embow'd bosoms. Shakesp. Rich. III.
They had no ships but big troughs, which they call canoes.
Where there is a good quick fall of rain water, lay a half trough of stone, of a good length, three foot deep, with one end upon the high ground, the other upon the low; cover the trough with brakes a good thickness, and cast sand upon the top of the brakes, the lower end of the trough will run like a spring of water. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 29.
Some logs, perhaps, upon the water swam,
An useless drift, which rudely cut within,
And hollow'd, first a floating trough became,
And cross some riv'let passage did begin. Dryden.
The water dissolves the particles of salt mixed in the stone, and is conveyed by long troughs and canals from the mines to Hall, where it is received in vast cisterns and boiled off. Add.
TO TROUL. v. n. [trollen, to roll, Dutch.] See TROLL.
1. To move volubly.
Bred only, and completed, to the taste
Of lustful appetite; to sing, to dance,
To dress, and troul the tongue, and roll the eye. Milton.
2. To utter volubly.
Let us be jocund. Will you troul the catch
You taught me while-ere. Shakesp. Hamlet.
TO TROUNCE. v. a. [derived by Skinner from trunc or trouzon, French, a club.] To punish by an indictment or information.
More probable, and like to hold
Than hand, or seal, or breaking gold;
For which to many, that renounc'd
Their plighted contracts have been trounc'd. Hudibras.
If you talk of peaching, I'll peach first: I'll trounce you for offering to corrupt my honesty. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
TROUSE. n. f. [trouss, Fr. trufis, Erse.] Breeches; hose.
TROUSERS. s. See TROUSERS.
The leather quilted jack serves under his shirt of mail, and to cover his trous on horseback. Spenser on Ireland.
The unlightness and pain in the leg may be helped by wearing a laced stocking; a laced trouse will do as much for the thigh. Wise man's Surgery.
TROUT. n. f. [truh, Saxon; trosta, truta, trutta, Lat.]
1. A delicate spotted fish inhabiting brooks and quick streams.
The pond will keep trout and salmon in their seasonable plights, but not in their reddish grain. Carver.

TRU

- Worse than the anarchy at sea,
Where fishes on each other prey;
Where ev'ry trout can make as high rants
O'er his inferiours as our tyrants.
2. A familiar phrase for an honest, or perhaps for a silly fellow.
Here comes the trout that must be caught with tickling.
TO TROW. v. n. [trōdian, Saxon; trōe, Danish.] To think;
to imagine; to conceive. A word now disused, and rarely used in ancient writers but in familiar language.
What handfomeness, trow you, can be observed in that speech, which is made one knows not to whom? Sidney.
Is there any reasonable man, trow you, but will judge it meeter that our ceremonies of Christian religion should be Popish than Turkish or Heathenish. Hooker, b. iv.
Lend less than thou owest,
Learn more than thou trowst. Shakesp. King Lear.
To-morrow next
We will for Ireland; and 'tis time, I trow. Shakesp.
O useful day! useful indeed, I trow. Gop.
TROW. interj. [for I trow, or trow you.] An exclamation of enquiry.
Well, if you be not turn'd Turk, there is no more failing by the star.
—What means the fool, trow? Shakesp.
TROUWEL. n. f. [truelle, Fr. trulla, Lat.]
A trouwel is a tool to take up the mortar with, and spread it on the bricks; with which also they cut the joints to such lengths as they have occasion, and also stop the joints. Moson.
Fair prince, you have lost much good sport.
—Sport! of what colour?
—What colour, madam? how shall I answer you?
—As wit and fortune will.
—Or as the destinies decree.
—Well said, that was laid on with a trouwel. Shakesp.
This was dextrous at his trouwel,
That was bred to kill a cow well. Swift.
TROY-WEIGHT. n. f. [from Troies, Fr.] A kind of weight Troy. } by which gold and bread are weighed, consisting of these denominations: a pound = 12 ounces;
ounce = 20 pennyweights; pennyweight = 24 grains.
The English physicians make use of troyweight after the following manner.
- |        |         |        |       |        |
|--------|---------|--------|-------|--------|
| Grains | Scruple | Drachm | Ounce | Pound. |
| 20     | 3       | 8      | 12    |        |
| 60     | 24      | 96     |       |        |
| 480    |         |        |       |        |
| 5760   |         |        |       |        |
- The Romans left their ounce in Britain, now our averdu-pois ounce, for our troy ounce we had elsewhere. Arbutnot.
TRUANT. n. f. [truand, Old Fr. treuvant, Dutch, avagabond.]
An idler; one who wanders idly about, neglecting his duty or employment. To play the truant is, in schools, to stay from school without leave.
For my part I may speak it to my shame,
I have a truant been to chivalry. Shakesp.
Though myself have been an idle truant,
Omitting the sweet benefit of time,
To cloath mine age with angel-like perfection,
Yet hath Sir Protheus made fair advantage of his days.
Providence would only initiate mankind into the knowledge of her treasures, leaving the rest to our industry, that we might not live like idle loiterers and truants. Mora.
Our ships are laden with the Trojan store,
And you like truants come too late ashore. Dryden's Æn.
TRUANT. adj. Idle; wandering from business; lazy; loitering.
What keeps you from Wertemberg?
—A truant disposition, good my lord. Shakesp. Hamlet.
He made a blushing cital of himself,
And chid his truant youth with such a grace,
As if he matter'd there a double spirit,
Of teaching, and of learning instantly.
Where thou feelt a single sheep remain
In shades aloof, or couch'd upon the plain,
Or late to lag behind with truant pace,
Revenge the crime, and take the traitor's head. Dryden.
TO TRUANT. v. n. [trouander, to beg about a country, French;
trouanten, old German.] To idle at a distance from duty;
to loiter; to be lazy.
'Tis double wrong to truant with your bed,
And let her read it in thy looks at board. Shakesp.
TRUANTSHIP. n. f. [trualte, Old Fr. from truant; truandise in Chaucer is beggary.] Idleness; negligence; neglect of study or business.
The master should not chide with him if the child have done his diligence, and used no truantship. Alphon.

TRU

- TRU'TAIL. n. f. A short squat woman. Ainsworth.
TRUBS. n. f. [tuber, Lat.] A sort of herb. Ains.
TRUCE. n. f. [truga, low Lat. tragua, Italian; truie, old Fr.]
1. A temporary peace; a cessation of hostilities.
Leagues and truces made between superstitious persons, and such as serve God aright. Hooker, b. v.
They pray in vain to have sin pardoned, which seek not also to prevent sin by prayer, even every particular sin, by prayer against all sin, except men can name some transgression wherewith we ought to have truce. Hooker.
All this utter'd
With gentle breath, calm look, knees humbly bent,
Could not make truce with the unruly spleen
Of Tybalt, deaf to peace. Shakesp.
This token ferveth for a flag of truce
Betwixt ourselves, and all our followers.
Men shall be lovers of their own selves, without natural affection, truce breakers. 2 Tim. iii. 3.
Least the truce with treason should be mixt,
'Tis my concern to have the tree betwixt.
Shadow till death true dulness would maintain;
And in his father's rights, and realm's defence,
Ne'er would have peace with wit, nor truce with sense. Dryd.
2. Cession; intermission; short quiet.
There he may find
Truce to his restless thoughts, and entertain
The irksome hours. Milton.
TRUCIDATION. n. f. [from truido, Lat.] The act of killing.
TO TRUCK. v. n. [troguor, Fr. truccare, Italian; tracar, Spanish; deduced by Salinasius from troquus, to get money.] To traffic by exchange; to give one commodity for another.
TO TRUCK. v. a. To give in exchange; to exchange.
The Indians truck gold for glances. L'Estrange.
Go, miser! go; for lucre sell thy soul,
Truck wares for wares, and trudge from pole to pole;
That men may say, when thou art dead and gone,
See, what a vast estate he left his son. Dryden.
I see nothing left us, but to truck and barter our goods like the wild Indians, with each other. Swift.
TRUCK. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Exchange; traffic by exchange.
It is no less requisite to maintain a truck in moral offices, than in the common business of commerce. L'Estrange.
Love is covetous; I must have all of you: heart for heart is an equal truck. Dryden.
2. [τροχός] Wooden wheels for carriage of cannon. Ains.
TRUCKLEBED, or TRUNDLEBED. n. f. [properly trucklebed; from truckle, Latin, or τροχός.] A bed that runs on wheels under a higher bed.
There's his chamber, his house, his cattle, his standing bed and trucklebed. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
If he that is in battle slain,
Be in the bed of honour lain;
He that is beaten may be laid,
To lie in honour's trucklebed. Hudibras, p. i.
TO TRUCKLE. v. n. [This word is, I believe, derived from trucklebed, which is always under another bed.] To be in a state of subjection or inferiority; to yield; to creep.
Shall our nation be in bondage thus Unto a land that truckles under us. Cleveland.
For which so many a legal cuckold
Has been run down in courts and truckle'd. Hudibras.
Men may be stiff and obstinate upon a wrong ground, and ply and truckle too upon as false a foundation. L'Estrange.
Religion itself is forced to truckle to worldly policy. Norris.
His zeal was not to lash our crimes,
But discontent against the times:
For had we made him timely offers,
To raise his post or fill his coffers:
Perhaps he might have truckle'd down,
Like other brethren of his gown. Swift.
They were subdued and insulted by Alexander's captains, and continued under several revolutions, a small truckling
state, of no name till they fell under the Romans. Swift.
TRUCULENCE. n. f. [traculentia, Lat.]
1. Savageness of manners.
2. Terribleness of aspect.
TRUCULENT. adj. [traculentus, Lat.]
1. Savage; barbarous.
A barbarous Scythia where the savage and truculent inhabitants transfer themselves from place to place in waggons, as they can find pasture, and live upon milk, and flesh roasted in the sun at the pomels of their faddles. Ray.
2. Terrible of aspect.
3. Descriptive; cruel.
Pestilential seminaries, according to their grossness or subtlety, cause more or less truculent plagues, some of such malignity, that they enstate in two hours. Harvey on the Plague.
TO TRUDGE. v. n. [truggolare, Italian.] To travel laboriously; to jog on; to march heavily on.
No man is secure, but night-walking heralds,
That trudge between the king and mistress Shore. Shakesp.

TRU

- No sooner was he fit to trudge,
But both made ready to dislodge. Hudibras, p. iii.
Away they trudged together, and about midnight got to their journey's end. L'Estrange's Fables.
Go, miser! go; for lucre sell thy soul,
Truck wares for wares, and trudge from pole to pole;
That men may say, when thou art dead and gone,
See, what a vast estate he left his son! Dryden.
Once a poor rogue, 'tis true, I trod the street,
And trudg'd to Rome upon my naked feet:
Gold is the greatest god. Dryden's Juvenal.
He that will know the truth, must leave the beaten track, which none but servile minds trudge continually in. Locke.
TRUE. adj. [εἰσπρα, εἰσπρα, Saxon.]
1. Not false; not erroneous; agreeing with fact, or with the nature of things.
Of those he chose he falsest two,
And fittest for to forge true seeming lies. Fairy Qu. b. i.
Teeth hadst thou in thy head when thou wast born,
And, if the rest be true which I have heard,
Thou canst not find the world with thy legs forward. Shak.
A new commandment I write, which thing is true in him and in you. 1 John ii. 8.
What you said had not been true,
If spoke by any elfe but you. Cowley.
2. Not false; agreeing with our own thoughts.
3. Pure from the crime of falsehood; veracious.
4. Genuine; not counterfeit.
The darkness is past, and the true light now shineth. 1 Job.
Among unequals what society
Can sort? What harmony or true delight? Milton.
Religion, as it is the most valuable thing in the world, so it gives the truest value to them who promote the practice of it by their example and authority. Atterbury.
5. Faithful; not perfidious; steady.
My revenge is now at Milford, would I had wings to follow it! come and be true. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
So young and so untender?
—So young my lord, and true.
—Let it be so; thy truth then be thy dower. Shakesp.
Do not see
My fair rose wither; yet look up; behold,
That you in pity may dissolve to dew,
And wash him fresh again with true love tears. Shakesp.
The first great work
Is, that yourself may to yourself be true. Roscommon.
I'll rather die
Deserted, than oblige thee with a fact
Pericious to thy peace, chiefly assur'd
Remarkably so late of thy true.
So faithful, love unequal'd. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.
When this fire is kindled, both sides inflame it: all regard of merit is lost in persons employed, and these only chosen that are true to the party. Temple.
Smil'd Venus, to behold her own true knight Obtain the conquest, though he lost the fight. Dryden.
True to the king her principles are found;
Oh that her practice were but half so found!
Stedfast in various turns of state she stood,
And seal'd her vow'd affection with her blood. Dryden.
The truff hearts for Voiture heav'd with sighs;
Voiture was wept by all the brightest eyes. Pope.
True to his charge the bard preserv'd her long
In honour's limits, such the pow'r of song. Pope.
6. Honest; not fraudulent.
The thieves have bound the true man: now could thou and I rob the thieves and go merrily to London, it would be argument for a week. Shakesp. Henry IV.
If king Edward be as true and just,
As I am subtle, false, and treacherous,
This day should Clarence closely be mew'd up. Shakesp.
7. Exact; truly conformable to a rule.
If all those great painters, who have left us such fair platforms, had rigorously observed it, they had made things more regularly true, but withal very unpleasing. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
He drew
A circle regularly true. Prior.
Tickel's first book does not want its merit; but I was disappointed in my expectation of a translation nicely true to the original; whereas in those parts where the greatest exact-ness seems to be demanded, he has been the least careful. Arb.
8. Rightful.
They seize the sceptre;
Then lose it to a stranger, that the true
Anointed King Messiah might be born
WHERE'er I wander, boast of this I can,
Though banish'd, yet a trueborn Englishman. Shakesp.
Let him that is a trueborn gentleman,
And stands upon the honour of his birth,
From off this briar pluck a white rose with me. Shakesp.
27 A TRUEBORN

TRU

TRUEBRE'D. adj. [true and breed.] Of a right breed.
Two of them I know to be as truebred cowards as ever turned back. Shakespeare.
Bauble do you call him? he's a substantial truebred beast, bravely forehanded. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
TRUEHEARTED. n. f. [true and heart.] Honest; faithful.
I have known no honest or truehearted man: fare thee well. Shakespeare.
TRUELOVE. n. f. An herb, called herba Paris.
TRUELOVEKNOT. } n. f. [true, love, and knot.] Lines
TRUELOVERKNOT. } drawn through each other with many involutions, considered as the emblem of interwoven affection.
I'll carve your name on barks of trees
With truelovesknots, and flourishes, Hudibras, p. ii.
TRUENESS. n. f. [from true.] Sincerity; faithfulness.
The even carriage between two factions proceedeth not always of moderation, but of a *true*ness to a man's self, with end to make use of both. Bacon's Essays.
TRUEPENNY. n. f. [true and penny.] A familiar phrase for an honest fellow.
Say'st thou fo? art thou there, truepenny?
Come on. Shakespeare.
TRUEFFLE. n. f. [truffe, truffe, French.]
In Italy, the usual method for the finding of truffles, or subterraneous mushrooms, called by the Italians tartufi, and in Latin tubera terre, is by tying a cord to the hind leg of a pig, and driving him, observing where he begins to root. Ray.
TRUG. n. f. A hod for mortar. Ainslie.
TRULL. n. f. [trulla, Italian.]
1. A low where; a vagrant stumper.
I'm sure, I fear'd the dauphin and his trull. Shakespeare.
A trull who fits
By the town wall, and for her living knits. Dryden.
So Mævius, when he drain'd his skull,
To celebrate some suburb trull;
His families in order set,
And ev'ry crumb he cou'd get;
Before he could his poem close,
The lovely nymph had lost her nose. Swift.
2. It seems to have had first at least a neutral sense: a girl; a lass; a wench.
Among the rest of all the route
A passing proper lassie,
A white-hair'd trull, of twenty years,
Or neerer about there was:
In stature passing all the rest,
A gallant girl for hewe;
To be compar'd with townish nymphs,
So fair the was to viewe. Turberville.
TRULLY. adv. [from true.]
1. According to truth; not falsely; faithfully; honestly.
They thought they might do it, not only willingly, because they loved him; and truly, because such indeed was the mind of the people; but safely, because she who ruled the king was agreed thereto. Sidney, b. ii.
No untruth can avail the patron long; for things most truly are most behoovfully spoken. Hooker.
Wisdom alone is truly fair. Milton.
2. Really; without fallacy.
Right reason is nothing else but the mind of man judging of things truly, and as they are in themselves. South.
3. Exactly; justly.
Indeed.
I have not undertaken it out of any wanton pleasure in mine own pen; nor truly without often pondering with myself beforehand what censures I might incur. Wotton.
TRUMP. n. f. [trump, Dutch, and old Fr. tromba, Italian.]
1. A trumpet; an instrument of warlike music.
Whilst any trump did sound, or drum struck up,
His sword did ne'er leave striking in the field. Shakespeare.
Yet first to those ychain'd in sleep,
The wakeful trump of doom must thunder through the deep. Milton.
I heard
The neighing couriers and the soldiers cry,
And founding trumps that seem'd to tear the sky. Dryden.
Beneath this tomb an infant lies,
To earth whose body lent,
Hereafter shall more glorious rise,
But not more innocent.
When the archangel's trump shall blow,
And souls to bodies join,
What crowds shall with their lives below
Had been as short as thine. Wesley.
2. [Corrupted from triumph. Latimer, in a Christmas sermon, exhibited a game at cards, and made the ace of hearts triumph. Fox.] A winning card; a card that has particular privileges in a game.
Him Basto follow'd, but his fate more hard,
Gain'd but one trump and one plebeian card. Pope.

Now her heart with pleasure jumps,
She scarce remembers what is trump. Swift.
3. To put to or upon the TRUMPS. To put to the last expedient.
We are now put upon our last trump; the fox is earth'd, but I shall fend my two terriers in after him. Dryden.
To TRUMP. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To win with a trump card.
2. To TRUMP up. [from tromper, Fr. to cheat.] To devise; to forge.
TRUMPERY. n. f. [tromperie, French, a cheat.]
1. Something fallaciously splendid; something of less value than it seems.
The trumpery in my house bring hither,
For state to catch these thieves. Shakespeare's Tempest.
2. Falshood; empty talk.
Breaking into parts the story of the creation, and delivering it over in a mystical sense, wrapping it up mixed with other their own trumpery, they have sought to obscure the truth thereof. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
3. Something of no value; trifles.
Embrios and idiots, eremits and friars,
White, black, and grey, with all their trumpery. Milton.
Another cavity of the head was stuffed with billeted, pricked dances, and other trumpery of the same nature. Addison.
TRUMPET. n. f. [trumpette, French and Dutch.]
1. An instrument of martial music founded by the breath.
What's the business?
That such a hideous trump calls to parley
The sleepers of the house. Shakespeare.
If any man of quality will maintain upon Edmund earl of Gloster, that he is a manifold traitor, let him appear by the third found of the trumpet. Shakespeare. King Lear.
He blew
His trumpet, heard in Oreb since perhaps
When God defended, and perhaps once more
To found at gen'ral doom. Th' angelick blast Filled all the regions. Milton.
The last loud trumpet's wondrous sound
Shall through the rending tombs rebound,
And wake the nations under ground. Roscommon.
Things of deep sense we may in prose unfold,
But they move more in lofty numbers told;
By the loud trumpet which our courage aids,
We learn that found, as well as sense, persuades. Waller.
The trumpet's loud clangor
Excites us to arms,
With shrill notes of anger,
And mortal alarms. Dryden.
Every man is the maker of his own fortune, and must be in some measure the trumpet of his fame. Tatler.
No more the drum
Provokes to arms, or trumpet's clangor shrill Affrights the wives. Philips.
Let the loud trumpet found,
Till the roofs all around,
The shrill echoes rebound. Pope.
2. In military file, a trumpeter.
He wisely desired, that a trumpet might be first sent for a pail.
Among our forefathers, the enemy, when there was a king in the field, demanded by a trumpet in what part he relided, that they might avoid firing upon the royal pavilion. Addison.
3. One who celebrates; one who praises.
Glorious followers, who make themselves as trumpets of the commendation of those they follow, taint business for want of secrecy, and export honour from a man, and make him a return in envy. Bacon.
That great politician was pleased to have the greatest wit of those times in his interests, and to be the trumpet of his praises. Dryden.
TRUMPET-FLOWER. n. f. [bignonia, Lat.] It hath a tubulous flower consisting of one leaf, which opens at top like two lips: these flowers are succeeded by pods, which are divided into two cells, and contain several winged seeds. Miller.
To TRUMPER. v. a. [trompetter, Fr. from the noun.] To publish by found of trumpet; to proclaim.
That I did love the Moor to live with him,
My downright violence to form my fortunes
May trump to the world. Shakespeare. Othello.
Why so tart a favour
To trump such good tidings? Shakespeare.
They went with found of trumpet; for they did nothing but publish and trump all the reproaches they could devise against the Irish. Bacon's War with Spain.
TRUMPETER. n. f. [from trumpet.]
1. One who sounds a trumpet.
With brazen din blast you the city's ear,
Make mingle with our rattling tabourines. Shakespeare.
As they returned, a herald and trumpeter from the Scots overtook them. Hayward.
Their

Their men lie securely intrench'd in a cloud, Dryden.
And a trumpeter hornet to battle sounds loud.
An army of trumpeters would give as great a strength as this confederacy of tongue warriors, who, like those military musicians, content themselves with animating their friends to battle. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 28.
2. One who proclaims, publishes, or denounces.
Where there is an opinion to be created of virtue or greatness, these men are good trumpeters. Bacon's Essays.
How came so many thousands to fight, and die in the same rebellion? why were they deceived into it by those spiritual trumpeters, who followed them with continual alarms of damnation if they did not venture life, fortune and all, in that which those impostors called the cause of God. South.
3. A fish.
TRUMPET-TONGUED. adj. [trumpet and tongue.] Having tongues vociferous as a trumpet.
This Duncan's virtues
Will plead, like angels, trumpet-tongued against
The deep damnation of his taking off. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
To TRUNCATE. v. a. [truncare, Lat.] To maim; to lop; to cut short.
TRUNCATION. n. f. [from truncate.] The act of lopping or maiming.
TRUNCHEON. n. f. [tronçon, French.]
1. A short staff; a club; a cudgel.
With his truncheon he so rudely stroke
Cymochles twice, that twice him forc'd his foot revoke. F. 2.
Set limb to limb, and thou art far the lesser;
Thy hand is but a finger to my fist;
Thy leg is a stick compared with this truncheon. Shakespeare.
The English flew divers of them with plummets of lead tied to a truncheon of staff by a cord. Hayward.
One with a broken truncheon deals his blows. Dryden.
2. A staff of command.
The hand of Mars
Beckon'd with fiery truncheon my retire. Shakespeare.
No ceremony that to great ones 'longs,
The marshal's truncheon, nor the judge's robe,
Become them with one half so good a grace,
As mercy does. Shakespeare. Measure for Measure.
To TRUNCHEON. v. a. [from the noun.] To beat with a truncheon.
Captain, thou abominable cheater! If captains were of my mind, they would truncheon you out of taking their names upon you before you earn'd them. Shakespeare.
TRUNCHEONEER. n. f. [from truncheon.] One armed with a truncheon.
I mist the meteor once, and hit that woman, who cried out, chibs! when I might see from far some forty truncheoneers draw to her succour. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.
To TRUNDLE. v. n. [trondeler, Picard French; trunpel, a low, Saxon.] To roll; to bowl along.
In the four first it is heaved up by several spondees intermixed with proper breathing places, and at last trundles down in a continued line of dactyls. Addison's Spect. N<sup>o</sup>. 253.
TRUNDLE. n. f. [trunpel, Saxon.] Any round rolling thing.
TRUNDLE-TAIL. n. f. Round tail.

- TRUSTEE. n. f. [from trust.]
1. One entrusted with any thing.
Having made choice of such a confessor that you may trust your soul with, sincerely open your heart to him, and look upon him only as he is a trustee from God, commissioned by him as his ministerial deputy, to hear, judge, and absolve
you. Taylor's Guide to a Penitent.
2. One to whom something is committed for the use and behoof of another.
You are not the trustees of the publick liberty: and if you have not right to petition in a crowd, much less to intermeddle in the management of affairs. Dryden.
- TRUSTER. n. f. [from trust.] One who trusts.
Nor shall you do mine ear that violence,
To make it truster of your own report Against yourself. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
- TRUSTINESS. n. f. [from trust.] Honesty; fidelity; faithfulness.
If the good qualities which lie dispersed among other creatures, innocence in a sheep, trustiness in a dog, are singly so commendable, how excellent is the mind, which embodies them into virtues. Grew's Cynol. b. ii.
- TRUSTLESS. n. f. [from trust.] Unfaithful; unconstant; not to be trusted. A word elegant, but out of use.
I beheld this fickle trustless state,
Of vain world's glory, flitting to and fro. Spenser.
- TRUSTY. adj. [from trust.]
1. Honest; faithful; true; fit to be trusted.
This dastard, at the battle of Poitiers,
Before we met, or that a froke was given,
Like to a trusty fquire, did run away. Shakespeare.
This trusty servant
Shall pass between us. Shakefp. King Lear.
He removeth away the speech of the trusty, and taketh away the understanding of the aged. Job xii. 26.

The teeth are tubulated for the conveyance of the poison into the wound they make; and their hollownels doth not reach to the top of the tooth. Derham's Physico-Theol.
TUCK. n. f. [twece Welsh, a knife; efce, French; stocco, Italian.]
1. A narrow sword.
If he by chance escape your venom'd tuck, Shakspeare. Hamlet.
Our purpose may hold there.
There being prim'd, with force he labour'd
To free's sword from retentive scabbard;
And after many a painful tuck,
From rufly durance he bail'd tuck. Hudibras, p. 1.
2. A kind of net.
The tuck is narrower meshed, and therefore scarce lawful with a long bunt in the midst. Carver.
TO TUCK. v. n. [from traction, German.] To press. Skinner.
1. To crush together; to hinder from spreading.
He tucked up her vestments, like a Spartan virgin, and marched directly forwards to the utmost summit of the promontory. Addison.
The flex, at the same time they are letting down their stays, are tucking up their petticoats, which grow shorter and shorter every day. Addison's Guardian.
The following age of females first tucked up their garments to the elbows, and exposed their arms to the air. Addison.
Dick adept! tuck back thy hair,
And I will pour into thy ear. Priori.
2. To inclose, by tucking cloaths round.
Make his bed after different fashions, that he may not feel every little change, who is not to have his mail always to lay all things in print and tuck him in warm. Locks on Education.
TO TUCK. v. n. To contradict. A bad word.
An uicer discharging a nasty thin ichor, the edges tuck in, and growing skinned and hard, give it the name of a callous ulcer. Sharpe's Surgery.
TUCKER. n. f. A small piece of linen that shades the breast of women.
A female ornament by some called a tucker, and by others the neck-piece, being a slip of fine linen or muslin, used to run in a small kind of ruffle round the uppermost verge of the stays. Addison's Guardian.
TUCKETSONANCE. n. f. A word apparently derived from the French, but which I do not certainly understand; tucquet is a hat, and toquer is to strike.
Let the trumpets sound,
The tucketsonance and the note to mount. Shakspeare. Hen. V.
TUGEL. n. f. [tyugauz, French.] The anus. Skinner.
TUESDAY. n. f. [tyue oaz, Saxon; tyu, Saxon, is Mars.] The third day of the week.
TUFFETAFETY. n. f. [from tuffed and taffety.] A villous kind of silk.
His cloaths were strange, tho' coarse, and black, tho' bare;
Sleeveless his jerkin was, and it had been Velvet: but it was now, so much ground was seen, Become tuffetafety. Donne.
TUFF. n. f. [tyuff, French.]
1. A Number of threads or ribbands, flowery leaves, or any small bodies joined together.
Upon sweet brier, a fine tuff or brush of moss of divers colours, you shall ever find full of white worms. Bacon.
It is notorious for its growth small, and tuffs not unlike the beard of that animal. Moré's Antidote against Althelm.
A tuff of daisies on a flow'ry lay. Dryden.

TUG

- Near a living stream their manifold place.
Edg'd round with mofs and tufts of matted gras. Dryden.
The male among birds often appears in a crest, comb, a tuft of feathers, or a natural little plume, erected like a pinnacle on the top of the head. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup> 265.
2. A clufter; a plump.
Going a little aside into the wood, where many times before the delighted to walk, her eyes were saluted with a tuft of trees so close set together, as with the shade the moon gave through it, it might breed a fearful kind of devotion to look upon it. Sidney.
My house is at the tuft of olives hard by. Shakspeare.
With high woods the hills were crown'd;
With tufts the valleys, and each fountain side,
With borders long the rivers. Milton's Par. Lost.
In bow'r and field he fought, where any tuft
Of grove, or garden-plot more pleasant,
Their tendance, or plantation for delight. Milton's P. L.
Under a tuft of shade, that on a green
Stood whirling loft, by a fresh fountain side
They fat them down. Milton's Par. Lost.
To Tuft, v. a. To adorn with a tuft; a doubtful word, not authorised by any competent writer.
Sit beneath the shade
Of solemn oaks, that tuft the swelling mounts, Thrown graceful round. Thomson.
TuFTED, adj. [from tuft.] Growing in tufts or clusters.
There does a false cloud
Turn forth her silver lining on the night,
And cast a gleam over this tufted grove. Milton.
Towers and battlements it sees,
Bosom'd high in tufted trees,
Where perhaps some beauty lies
The cynosure of neighbouring eyes. Milton.
Midst the desert fruitful fields arise,
That crown'd with tufted trees and springing corn,
Like verdant isles the fable waste adorn. Pope.
To TUFFY, adj. [from tuft.] Adorned with tufts. A word of no authority.
Let me strip thee of thy tuffy coat,
Spread thy ambrosial floures. Thomson's Summer.
To TUG, v. a. [tigan, teogan, Saxon.]
1. To pull with strength long continued in the utmost exertion; to draw.
No more tug one another thus, nor moil yourselves;
receive Prize equal; conquests crown ye both: the lifts to others leave. Chapman's Iliads.
These two massy pillars
With horrible confusion to and fro
He tugg'd, he shook, till down they came, and drew
Upon the heads of all that sat beneath.
The whole roil after them, with bust of thunder. Milton.
Take pains the genuine meaning to explore,
There sweat, there strain, tug the laborious oar. Reflex.
2. To pull; to pluck.
Pric'd, beware thy beard;
I mean to tug it, and to cuff you soundly. Shak. Hen. VI.
There leaving him to his repose
Secured from the pursuit of foes,
And wanting nothing but a song,
And a well tun'd theorbos hung
Upon a bow, to ease the pain
His tugg'd ears suffer'd, with a strain. Hudibras, p. 12.
To TUG, v. n.
1. To pull; to draw.
The meaner fort will tug lustily at one oar. Sandys.
Lead your thoughts to the galleys, there those wretched captives are chained to the oars they tug at. Boyle.
There is such tugging and pulling this way and that way.
Moré's Antidote against Absiejin.
Thus galley-slaves tug willing at their oar,
Content to work in prospect of the shore;
But would not work at all, if not constrained before. Dryd.
We have been tugging a great while against the stream, and have almost weathered our point; a stretch or two more will do the work; but if instead of that we slacken our arms, and drop our oars, we shall be hurried back to the place from whence we set out. Addison on the State of War.
2. To labour; to contend; to struggle.
Cast your good counsels
Upon his passion; let myself and fortune
Tug for the time to come. Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.
His face is black and full of blood,
His hands abroad display'd, as one that grasps
And tugg'd for life. Shakspeare's Hen. VI. p. ii.
They long wrestled and strenuously tugg'd for their liberty with a no less magnanimous than constant pertinacity. Howe.
Go now with some daring dog,
Bait thy disease, and while they tug,
Thou to maintain the cruel strife,
Spend the dear treasure of thy life. Craheaw.

TUG. n. f. [from the verb.] Pull performed with the utmost effort.

Downward by the feet he drew
The trembling daffodil at the tug he falls.

Vast ruins come along, rent from the smoking walls. Dryd.

TUGGER. n. f. [from tug.] One that tugs or pulls hard.

TUTORION. n. f. [from tutor, Lat.] Guardianship; superintendent care; care of a guardian or tutor.

A folly for a man of wisdom, to put himself under the tuition of a beast. Sidney, b. ii.

They forcibly endeavour to cast the churches, under my care and tuition, into the moulds they have fashioned to their designs. King Charles.

If government depends upon religion, this shews the pestilential deluge of those that attempt to disjoin the civil and ecclesiastical interests, setting the latter wholly out of the tuition of the former. South's Sermons.

When so much true life is put into them, freely talk with them about what most delights them, that they may perceive that those under whose tuition they are, are not enemies to their satisfaction. Locke.

TULIP. n. f. [tulipa, Fr. tulipa, Lat.] A flower.

It hath a lily flower, composed of six leaves, shaped somewhat like a pitcher; the pointal rising in the middle of the flower is surrounded with stamina, and afterwards becomes an oblong fruit, which opens into three parts; and is divided into three cells, full of plain seeds, resting upon one another in a double row. To these may be added a coated root, with fibres on the lower part. The properties of a good tulip, according to the characteristics of the best florists of the present age, are, 1. It should have a tall stem. 2. The flower should consist of six leaves, three within, and three without, the former being larger than the latter. 3. Their bottom should be proportioned to their top; their upper part should be rounded off, and not terminate in a point. 4. The leaves when opened should neither turn inward nor bend outward, but rather stand erect; the flower should be of a middling size, neither over large nor too small. 5. The stripes should be small and regular, arising quite from the bottom of the flower. The chives should not be yellow, but of a brown colour. They are generally divided into three classes, viz. præcoces, or early flowers; media's, or middling flowers; and serotines, or late flowers. The early blowing tulips are not near so fair, nor rise half so high as the late ones, but are chiefly valued for appearing so early in the spring. Their roots should be taken up and spread upon mats in a shady place to dry; after which they should be cleared from their filth, and put up in a dry place until the season for planting. Miller.

The tulip opens with the rising, and shuts with the setting sun.

Why tulips of one colour produce some of another, and running thro' all, still escape a blue. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TUMULT. n. f. [tumultus, Lat.] A confusion.

To TUMBLE. v. n. [tumber, Fr. tommeler, Dutch; tombolare, Italian.]

3. To throw down.

Wilt thou still be hammering treachery,

To tumble down thy husband and thyself, Shakespeare.

From top of honour to disgrace's feet?

King Lycurgus, while he fought in vain, Dryden.

His friend to free, was tumbled on the plain.

If a greater force than his holds him fast, or tumbles him down, he is no longer free. Locke.

TUMBLE. n. f. [from the verb.] A fall.

A country-fellow got an unlucky tumble from a tree: why, says a passenger, I could have taught you a way to climb, and never hurt yourself with a fall. L'Estrange.

TUMBLER. n. f. [from tumble.] One who shews postures by various contortions of body, or feats of activity.

What strange agility and activeness do common tumblers and dancers on the rope attain to by continual exercise? Willkins's Math. Magic.

Nic. bounced up with a spring equal to that of the nimblest tumbler or rope-dancers. Arbutnot.

Never by tumbler thro' the hoops was shown,

Such skill in passing all, and touching none. Pope.

TUMBLE. n. f. [tumber, Fr. tumbe, Lat.] A dungcart.

Twifallow once ended, get tumbrel and man,

And compass that fallow as soon as ye can. Tuff. Heph.

My corps is in a tumbrel laid, among

The filth and ordure, and inclos'd with dung;

That cart arreft, and raise a common cry,

For sacred hunger of my god I die. Dryden.

What shall I do with this beastly tumbrel? go lie down and sleep, you fool. Congreve.

To convince the present little race how unequal all their measures were to an antediluvian, in respect of the insects which now appear for men, he sometimes rode in an open tumbrel. Taltr.

TUMFACTION. n. f. [tumefactio, Latin.] Swelling.

The common signs and effects of weak fibres, are paleness, a weak pulse, tumefactions in the whole body. Arbutnot.

I applied three small causticks triangular about the tumefied joint. Wifeman's Surgery.

A fleshy excrescence, exceeding hard and tumefied, imposed to demand extirpation. Sharp's Surgery.

TUMID. adj. [tumidus, Lat.]

1. Swelling; puffed up.

2. Protuberant; raised above the level.

So high as heav'd the tumid hills, so low

Down sunk a hollow bottom broad and deep, Milton.

Capacious bed of waters.

3. Pompous; boastful; puffy; falsely sublime.

Though such expressions may seem tumid and aspiring, yet cannot I scruple to use seeming hyperboles in mentioning felicities, which make the highest hyperboles but seeming ones. Boyle.

TUMOUR. n. f. [tumor, Latin.]

1. A morbid swelling.

Tumour is a disease, in which the parts recede from their natural state by an undue increase of their bigness. Wifeman.

Having dissected this swelling vice, and seen what it is that feeds the tumour, if the disease be founded in pride, the abating that is the most natural remedy. Governor of the Tongue.

2. Affected pomp; false magnificence; puffy grandeur; swelling inien; unsubstantial greatness.

His stile was rich of phrase, but seldom in bold metaphors; and so far from the tumour, that it rather wants a little elevation. Watson.

It is not the power of tumour and bold looks upon the passions of the multitude.

TUMOROUS. adj. [from tumour.]

1. Swelling; protuberant.

Who ever saw any cypress or pine, small below and above, and tumorous in the middle, unless some diseased plant. Watson.

2. Fastuous; vainly pompous; falsely magnificent.

According to their subject, these styles vary; for that which is high and lofty, declaring excellent matter, becomes vain and tumorous, speaking of petty and inferior things. B. Job.

His limbs were rather sturdy than dainty, sublime and almost tumorous in his looks and gestures. Watson.

To TUMP. among gardeners, to fence trees about with earth.

To TUMULATE. v. n. [tumulo, Latin.] To swell. This seems to be the sense here, but I suspect the word to be wrong.

Urinous spirits, or volatile alkalies, are such enemies to acid, that as soon as they are put together, they tumulate and grow hot, and continue to fight till they have dissipated or mortified each other. Boyle.

TUMULOSE. adj. [tumulosus, Lat.] Full of hills.

TUMULOUSITY. n. f. [tumulus, Lat.] Hilliness.

TUMULT. n. f. [tumulte, Fr. tumulus, Latin.]

1. Tune is a diversity of notes put together. Locke.

Came he to sing a raven's note,

Whose dismal tune bereft my vital pow'rs. Shakespeare.

Tunes and airs have in themselves some affinity with the affections; as merry tunes, doleful tunes, solemn tunes, tunes inclining mens minds to pity, warlike tunes, so that tunes have a predisposition to the motion of the spirits. Bacon.

Keep unfixedly nature to her laws,

And the low world in measur'd motion draw

After the heav'nly tune, which none can hear

Of human mould with gross unpurged ear. Milton.

That sweet song you sung one happy night,

The tune I still retain, but not the words. Dryden.

The disposition in the fiddle to play tunes. Arch. & Pope.

2. Sound; note.

Such a noise arose

As the shrouds make at sea in a stiff tempest,

As loud, and to as many tunes. Shakespeare.

3. Harmony; order; concert of parts.

A continual parliament I thought would but keep the commonweal in tune, by preserving laws in their due execution and vigour. K. Charles.

4. State of giving the due sounds, as the fiddle is in tune, or out of tune.

5. Proper state for use or application; right disposition; fit temper; proper humour.

A child will learn three times as much when he is in tune, as he will with double the time and pains, when he goes awkwardly, or is dragged unwillingly to it. Locke.

6. State of any thing with respect to order.

Distressed Lear, in his better tune, remembers what we are come about. Shakespeare.

To TUNE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put into such a state, as that the proper sounds may be produced.

Their golden harps they took,

Harps ever tun'd, that glitter'd by their side. Milton.

He is still to spring from one of a poetical disposition, from whom he might inherit a soul turn'd to poetry. Pope.
25. To double in.
Thus a wife taylor is not pinching,
But turns at ev'ry seam an inch in. Swift.
26. To revolve; to agitate in the mind.
Turn these ideas about in your mind, and take a view of them on all sides. Watts.
27. To drive from a perpendicular edge; to blunt.
Quick wits are more quick to enter speedily, than able to pierce far; like sharp tools whose edges be very soon turn'd. Afcham.
28. To drive by violence; to expel.
Rather turn this day out of the week;
This day of shame. Shakespeare.
They turn'd weak people and children unable for service, out of the city. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.
He now was grown deform'd and poor;
And fit to be turn'd out of door. Hudibras, p. iii.
If I had taken to the church, I should have had more sense than to have turn'd myself out of my benefice by writing libels on my parishioners. Dryden's Preface to Fables.
I would be hard to imagine that God would turn him out of paradise, to till the ground, and at the same time advance him to a throne. Locke.
A great man in a peasant's house, finding his wife handsome, turn'd the good man out of his dwelling. Addison.

ful creatures that inhabit the ruins of Babylon. Gov. of Tong.
He turn'd off his former wife to make room for this marriage. Addison.
38. To TURN off. To give over; to resign.
The most adverse chances are like the ploughing and breaking the ground, in order to a more plentiful harvest.
And yet we are not so wholly turned off to that reversion, as to have no supplies for the present; for besides the comfort of so certain an expectation in another life, we have promises also for this. Deacy of Piety.
39. To TURN off. To deflect.
The institution of sports was intended by all governments to turn off the thoughts of the people from busying themselves in matters of state. Addison's Freeholder.
40. To TURN over. To transfer.
Excusing himself and turning over the fault to fortune;
then let it be your ill fortune too. Sidney.

Criminals condemned to suffer
Are blinded first, and then turn'd over. Butler.
- To TURN, v. n.
1. To move round; to have a circular or vertiginous motion.
Such a light and mett'd dance
Saw you never;
And by lead-men for the nonce,
That turn round like grindstones. Ben. Jonson.
The gate on golden hinges turning. Milton.
The cause of the imagination that things turn round, is, for that the spirits themselves turn, being compressed by the vapour of the wine; for every liquid body, upon compression, turneth, as we see in water: and it is all one to the light, whether the visual spirits move, or the object moveth, or the medium moveth. And we see that long turning round breedeth the same imagination. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
2. To hew regard or anger, by directing the look towards any thing.
Pompey turn'd upon him and bad him be quiet. Bacon.
The understanding turns inwards on itself, and reflects on its own operations. Locke.
Turn, mighty monarch, turn, this way;
Do not refuse to hear. Dryden.
3. To move the body round.
Nature wrought so, that seeing me she turn'd. Milton.
He said, and turning short with speedy pace,
Casts back a scornful glance and quits the place. Dryden.
4. To move from its place.
The ancle-bone is apt to turn out on either side, by reason of relaxation of the tendons upon the least walking. Wifem.
5. To change posture.
If one with ten thousand dice, should throw five thousand sises once or twice, we might say he did it by chance; but if, with almost an infinite number he should, without failing, throw the same sises, we should certainly conclude he did it by art, or that these dice could turn upon no other side. Cheyne.
6. To have a tendency or direction.
There is not a more melancholy object than a man who has his head turned with religious enthusiasm. Addison.
His cares all turn upon Aftyanax,
Whom he has lodg'd within the citadel. A. Philippi.
7. To move the face to another quarter.
The night seems doubled with the fear she brings.
The morning, as mistaken, turns about,
And all her early fires again go out. Dryden's Aurengzeib.
8. To depart from the way; to deviate.
My lords turn in, into your servant's house. Gen. xix. 2.
Virgil, suppose in describing the fury of his hero in a battle, when endeavouring to raise our concernment to the highest pitch, turns short on the sudden into some similitude, which diverts attention from the main subject. Dryden.

TUR

9. To alter; to be changed; to be transformed.
Your bodies may at last turn all to spirit. Milton.
A storm of sad mischance will turn into something that is good, if we lift to make it so. Taylor.
This suspicion turned to jealousy, and jealousy to rage;
then the diffidans and threatens, and again is humble. Dryd.
Socrates meeting Alcibiades going to his devotions, and observing his eyes fixed with great seriousness, tells him that he had reason to be thoughtful, since a man might bring down evils by his prayers, and the things which the gods send him at his request might turn to his destruction. Addison.
For this I suffer'd Phœbus' steeds to stray,
And the mad ruler to misguide the day,
When the wide earth to heaps of ashes turn'd,
And heav'n itself the wand'ring chariot burn'd. Pope.
Rather than let a good fire be wanting, enliven it with the butter that happens to a turn to oil. Swift.
10. To become by a change.
Cygnets from grey turn white; hawks from brown turn more white. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Oil of vitriol and petroleum, a drachm of each, will turn into a mouldy substance. Boyle.
They turn viragos too; the wrestler's toil
They try. Dryden's Jivinal.
In this disease, the gall will turn of a blackish colour, and the blood verge towards a pitchy consistence. Arbutnot.
11. To change sides.
I turn'd, and try'd each corner of my bed,
To find if sleep were there, but sleep was lost. Dryden.
As a man in a fever turns often, although without any hope of ease, so men in the extremest misery fly to the first appearance of relief, though never so vain. Swift's Intellig.
12. To change the mind, conduct, or determination.
Turn from thy fierce wrath. Exod. xxxii. 12.
Turn at my reproof: behold I will pour out my spirit. Prov.
He'll relent and turn from his displeasure. Milton.
13. To change to acid. Used of milk.
Has friendship such a faint and milky heart,
It turns in less than two nights? Shak. Timon of Athens.
Alles milk turneth not so easily as cows. Bacon.
14. To be brought eventually.
Let their vanity be flattered with things that will do them good; and let their pride set them on work on something which may turn to their advantage. Locke on Education.
Christianity directs our actions so, as every thing we do may turn to account at the great day. Addison's Spect.
For want of due improvement, these useful inventions have not turned to any great account. Baker's Reflect. on Learning.
15. To depend on, as the chief point.
When a man once perceives how far ideas agree or disagree, he will be able to judge of what other people say.
The question turns upon this point; when the presbyterians shall have got their share of employments, whether they ought not, by their own principles, to use the utmost of their power to reduce the whole kingdom to an uniformity. Swift.
Conditions of peace certainly turn upon events of war. See.
The first platform of the poem, which reduces into one important action all the particulars upon which it turns, Pope.
16. To grow giddy.
I'll look no more,
Lest my brain turn, and the deficient sight
Topple down headlong. Shakespeare's King Lear.
If we repent seriously, submit contentedly and serve him faithfully, afflictions shall turn to our advantage. Wake.
17. To TURN away. To deviate from a proper course.
The turning away of the simple shall slay him. Prov.
In some springs of water if you put wood, it will turn into the nature of stone. Bacon.

Who first did serve their turn, and now serves his. Dan.
They tried their old friends of the city, who had served their turns so often, and set them to get a petition. Clarendon.
This philosophy may pass with the most sensual, while they pretend to be reasonable; but whenever they have a mind to be otherwise, to drink or to sleep, will serve the turn. Temple's Miscellanies.
13. The form; cast; shape; manner.
Our young men take up some cry'd up English poet, without knowing wherein his thoughts are improper to his subject, or his expressions unworthy of his thoughts, or the turn of both is unharmonious. Dryden.
Seldom any thing raises wonder in me, which does not give my thought a turn that makes my heart the better. Addison.
Female virtues are of a domestic turn. The family is the proper province for private women to shine in. Addison.
An agreeable turn appears in her sentiments upon the most ordinary affairs of life. Addison.
Wit

TUR

Wit doth not consist so much in advancing things new, as in giving things known an agreeable turn. Addison's Spect.
Before I made this remark, I wondered to see the Roman poets, in their description of a beautiful man, so often mention the turn of his neck and arms.
A young man of a sprightly turn in conversation, had an inordinate desire of appearing fashionable. Spektator.
Books give the same turn to our thoughts and reasoning, that good company does to our conversation. Swift's Misc.
The very turn of voice, the good pronunciation, and the alluring manner which some teachers have attained, will engage the attention. Watts.

14. The manner of adjusting the words of a sentence. The turn of words, in which Ovid excels all poets, are sometimes a fault or sometimes a beauty, as they are used properly or improperly. Dryden.

The three first stanzas are rendered word for word with the original, not only with the same elegance, but the same short turn of expression peculiar to the sapphick ode. Addison.
The first coin being made of brass gave the denomination to money among the Romans, and the whole turn of their expressions is derived from it. Arbutnot.

15. By Turns. One after another. They feel by turns the bitter change Of fierce extremes; extremes by change more fierce. Milt.

The challenge to Demetrius shall belong; Menalcas shall sustain his under-song; Each in his turn your tuneful numbers bring; By turns the tuneful muses love to sing. Dryden's Virg.

By turns put on the suppliant, and the lord; Threaten'd this moment, and the next implor'd. Prior.

TURNBENCH. n. f. [turn and bench.] A term of turners. Small work in metal is turn'd in an iron lathe called a turnbench, which they screw in a vice, and having fitted their work upon a small iron axle, with a drill barrel, fitted upon a square shank, at the end of the axis, next the left-hand, they with a drill-bow, and drill-string, carry it about. Moxon.

TURNOAT. n. f. [turn and coat.] One who forsakes his party or principles; a renegade; Shak. Love's Lab. Lost.
Courteously itself must turn to disdain, if you come in her presence—Then is courtly a turncoat. Shaksp.

TURNER. n. f. [from turn.] One whose trade is to turn in a lathe.

Nor box, nor limes without their use are made, Smooth-grain'd and proper for the turner's trade. Dryden.
Some turners, to shew their dexterity in turning, turn long and slender pieces of ivory, as small as an hay-stalk. Moxon.

TWENTIETH. adj. [twenticozda, Saxon.] Twice tenth; or dinal of twenty.
This year,
The twentieth from the firing the capital,
As fatal too to Rome, by all predictions. Ben. Johnson.
The quantity of the fiftieth should be turned to a twentieth.
Bacon.
Why was not I the twentieth by descent
From a long restive race of droning kings? Dryden.
This crown now must be raised, and coined one twentieth lighter; which is nothing but changing the denomination, calling that a crown now, which yesterday was but a part,
viz. nineteen twentieths. Locke.
TWENTY. adj. [twentiz, Saxon.]
1. Twice ten.
At least nineteen in twenty of these perplexing words might

The tender twig shoots upwards to the skies. Dryden.
From parent bough
A cyon meetly lever: after force
A way into the crabstocks close wrought grain
By wedges, and within the living wound
Inclose the softer twigs, around which spread
The binding clay. Philips.
TWIGGEN. adj. [from twig.] Made of twigs.
I'll beat the knave with a twiggen bottle. Shakespeare.
The sides and rim sewed together after the manner of twiggen work. Grew.
TWIGGY. adj. [from twig.] Full of twigs.
TWILIGHT. n. f. [twelicht, Dutch; zponcleohz, Saxon.]

T W I

The dubious or faint light before sunrise, and after sunset;
obscure light; uncertain view.
Her twilight were more clear than our mid-day. Donne.
Suspensions amongst thoughts, are like bars amongst birds, they ever fly by twilight. Certainly they are to be well guarded. Bacon.
A faint weak love of virtue, and of good,
Reflects from her on them, which understood
Her worth; and though she have shut in all day
The twilight of her memory doth stay. Donne.
He that saw hell in's melancholy dream,
And in the twilight of his phancy's theme
Scar'd from his sins, repented in a fright,
Had he view'd Scotland, had turn'd proselyte. Cleveland.
Ambrosial night, with clouds exhal'd
From that high mount of God, whence light and shade
Spring both, the face of brightest heav'n had chang'd
To grateful twilight. Milton's Par. Lgh.
When the sun was down
They just arriv'd by twilight at a town. Dryden.
In the greatest part of our concernment he has afforded us only the twilight of probability, suitable to our state of mediocrity. Locke.
TWILIGHT. adj.
1. Not clearly or brightly illuminated; obscure; deeply shaded.
When the sun begins to fling
His flaming beams, me goddess bring
To arched walks of twilight groves. Milton.
O'er the twilight groves, and dusky caves,
Long-sounding isles, and intermingled graves,
Black melancholy fits, and round her throws
A death-like silence, and a dead repose. Pope.
2. Seen by twilight.
On old Lycæus or Cyllene hear
Trip no more in twilight ranks. Milton.
TWIN. n. f. [twinn, Saxon; tweligen, Dutch.]
1. Children born at a birth. It is therefore seldom used in the singular; though sometimes it is used for one of twins.
In this mystery of ill opinions, here's the twin brother of thy letter; but let thine inherit first, for mine never shall. Sh.
In bestowing
He was most princely: ever witness for him
Those twins of learning Ipswich and Oxford. Shakespeare.
If that moment of the time of birth be of such moment, whence proceedeth the great difference of the constitutions of twins, which, tho' together born, have strange and contrary fortunes. Drummond.
The divided dam
Runs to the humours of her hungry lamb;
But when the twin cries halves, she quits the first. Cleveland.
They came twins from the womb, and still they live
As if they would go twins too to the grave. Outway.
Fair Leda's twins, in time to stars decreed,
One fought on foot, one curb'd the fiery steed. Dryden.
Had there been the same likeness in all men, as sometimes in twins, it would have given occasion to confusion. Grew.
2. Gemini, the sign of the zodiac.
This, when the sun retires,
First shines, and spreads black night with feeble fires,
Then parts the twins and crab. Crech.
When now no more, th' alternate twins are fir'd,
Short is the doubtful empire of the night. Thomson.
To TWIN. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To be born at the same birth.
He that is approv'd in this offence,
Though he had twinn'd with me both at a birth,
Shall lose me. Shakespeare. Orbell.
2. To bring two at once.
Ewes yearly by twinning rich masters do make. Tusser.
3. To be paired; to be suited.
Hath nature given them eyes,
Which can distinguish 'twixt
The fiery orbs above and the twinn'd stones
Upon the humb'd beach. Shakespeare.
O how inscrutable! his equity
Twins with his power. Sandys.
TWINBORN. adj. [twin and born.] Born at the same birth.
Our fins lay on the King; he must bear all.
O hard condition and twinborn with greatness. Shakespeare.
To TWINE. v. a. [twinn, Saxon; twynan, Dutch.]
1. To twist or complicate so as to unite, or form one body or substance out of two or more.
Thou shalt make an hanging of blue, and fine twinn'd linen, wrought with needlework. Exod. xxvi. 36.
2. I know not whether this is from twine or twinn.
By original lapse, true liberty
Is lost, which always with right reason dwells,
Twinn'd, and from her hath no dividual being. Milton.
3. To unite itself.
Lumps of sugar lose themselves, and twine
Their subtle essence with the soul of wine. Craford.

T W I

To TWINE. v. n.
1. To convolve itself; to wrap itself closely about.
Let wreaths of triumph now my temples twine,
The victor cry'd, the glorious prize is mine! Pope.
2. To unite by interposition of parts.
Friends now fast sworn, who twine in love
Unseparable, shall, within this hour,
On a diffension of a doits, break out
To bitterest enmity. Shakespeare.
3. To wind; to make flexures.
As rivers, though they bend and twine,
Still to the sea their course incline.
Or as philosophers who find
Some fav'rite lytem to their mind,
In ev'ry point to make it fit,
Will force all nature to submit.
The deer rattles thro' the twining brake. Thomson.
TWINE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A twisted thread.
Not any damsel, which her vaunteth most
In skilful knitting of soft filken twine. Spenser.
A pointed sword hung threat'ning o'er his head,
Sustain'd but by a slender twine of thread. Dryden.
2. Twist; convolution.
Nor all the gods beside Longer dare abide,
Not Typhon huge ending in snaky twine. Milton.
Welcome joy and feast,
Braid your locks with rosy twine,
Dropping odours, dropping wine. Milton.
3. Embrace; act of convolving itself round.
Everlasting hate
The vine to ivy bears, but with am'rous twine
Clasps the tall elm. Philips.
To TWINGE. v. a. [twingen, German; twinge, Danish.]
1. To torment with sudden and short pain.
The great charg'd into the nostrils of the lion, and there twing'd him till he made him tear himself, and so matter'd him. L'Estrange.
2. To pinch; to tweak.
When a man is past his sense,
There's no way to reduce him thence,
But twinging him by th' ears and nose,
Or laying on of heavy blows. Hudibras.
TWINGE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Short sudden sharp pain.
The wickedness of this old villain flartles me, and gives me a twinge for my own sin, though far short of his. Dryden.
2. A tweak; a pinch.
How can you fawn upon a master that gives you so many blows and twinges by the ears. L'Estrange.
TWINK. n. f. [See TWINKLE.] The motion of an eye;
a moment. Not in use.
She hung about my neck, and kiss on kiss
She vied so fast, protesting oath on oath,
That in a twink the won me to her love. Shakespeare.
To TWINKLE. v. n. [twincian, Saxon.]
1. To sparkle; to flash irregularly; to shine with intermitted light; to shine faintly; to quiver.
At first I did adore a twinkling star,
But now I worship a celestial sun. Shakespeare.
As plays the sun upon the glassy streams,
Twinkling another counterfeited beam,
So seems this gorgeous beauty. Shakespeare.
Some their forked tails stretch forth on high,
And tear the twinkling stars from trembling sky. Fairfax.
God comprises all the goods we value in the creatures, as the sun doth the light that twinkles in the stars. Boyle.
The star of love,
That twinkles you to fair Almeyda's bed. Dryden.
Think you your new French proselytes are come
To starve abroad, because they starv'd at home,
Your benefices twinkl'd from afar. Dryden.
So weak your charms, that like a winter's night,
Twinkling with stars, they freeze me while they light. Dryden.
These stars do not twinkle when viewed through telescopes which have large apertures: for the rays of light which pass through divers parts of the aperture, tremble each of them apart; and by means of their various, and sometimes contrary tremors, fall at one and the same time upon different points in the bottom of the eye. Newton.
2. To open and shut the eye by turns.
The owl fell a moping and twinkling. L'Estrange.
3. To play irregularly.
His eyes will twinkle, and his tongue will roll,
As tho' he beck'ned, and call'd back his soul. Donne.
TWINKLE. } n. f. [from the verb.]
TWINKLING. }
1. A sparkling intermitted light; a motion of the eye.

T W I

Suddenly, with twinkle of her eye,
The damsel broke his misintended dart. Spenser.
I come, I come; the least twinkle had brought me to thee. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
2. A short space, such as is taken up by a motion of the eye.
Money can thy wants at will supply,
Shields, steeds, and arms, and all things for thee meet,
It can pourvey in twinkling of an eye. Fairy Queen.
These false beauties of the stage are no more lasting than a rainbow; when the actor gilds them no longer with his reflection, they vanish in a twinkling. Dryden.
The action, passion, and manners of so many persons in a picture, are to be discerned in the twinkling of an eye, if the sight could travel over so many different objects all at once. Dryden.
TWYNLING. n. f. [diminutive of twinn.] A twin lamb; a lamb of two brought at a birth. Tusser's Husb.
Twynlings increase bring. Tusser's Husb.
TWYNNER. n. f. [from twinn.] A breeder of twins.
Ewes yearly by twinning rich masters do make,
The lambs of such twynners for breeders go take. Tusser.
To TWIRL. v. a. [from whirl.] To turn round; to move by a quick rotation.
Wool and raw silk by moisture incorporate with other thread; especially if there be a little twirling, as appeareth by the twirling and twirling about of spindles. Bacon.
Dextrous damfels twirl the sprinkling mop. Gay.
See ruddy maids,
Some taught with dextrous hand to twirl the wheel. Dodds.
TWIRL. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Rotation; circular motion.
2. Twist; convolution.
The twirl on this is different from that of the others; this being an heterostrophæ, the twirls turning from the right-hand to the left. Woodward on Fossils.
To TWIST. v. a. [twypan, Saxon; twisten, Dutch.]
1. To form by complication; to form by convolution.
Do but despair,
And if thou want'st a cord, the smallest thread
That ever spider twisted from her womb,
Will strangle thee. Shakespeare.
To reprove discontent, the ancients feigned, that in hell stood a man twisting a rope of hay; and still he twisted on, suffering an ass to eat up all that was finished. Taylor.
Would Clotho wash her hands in milk,
And twist our thread with gold and silk;
Would she in friendship, peace, and plenty,
Spin out our years to four times twenty,
And should we both in this condition,
Have conquer'd love, and worse ambition,
Else these two passions by the way,
May chance to shew us scurvy play. Prior.
The task were harder to secure my own
Against the pow'r of those already known;
For well you twist the secret chains that bind
With gentle force the captivated mind. Lyttleton.
2. To contort; to writhe.
Either double it into a pyramidal, or twist it into a serpentine form. Pope.
3. To wreath; to wind; to encircle by something round about.
There are pillars of smoke twisted about with wreaths of flame. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
4. To form; to weave.
If thou dost love fair Hero, cherish it,
And thou shalt have her: was't not to this end
That thou began'st to twist so fine a story? Shakespeare.
5. To unite by intertexture of parts.
All that know how prodigal
Of thy great soul thou art, longing to twist
Bays with that joy, which so early kilt
Thy youthful temples, with what horror we Think on the blind events of war. Waller.
6. To unite; to insinuate.
When avarice twists itself, not only with the practice of men, but the doctrines of the church; when ecclesiasticks dispute for money, the mischief seems fatal. Decay of Piety.
To TWIST. v. n. To be contorted; to be convolved.
In an ileus, commonly called the twisting of the guts, is a circumvolution or insertion of one part of the gut within the other. Arbutnot on Aliments.
Deep in her breast he plung'd the shining sword:
Th' Inachians view the slain with vast surprise,
Her twisting volumes, and her rolling eyes. Pope.
TWIST. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Anything made by convolution, or winding two bodies together.
Minerva nurs'd him
Within a twist of twining olives laid. Addison.

T W I

2. A single string of a cord.
Winding a thin string about the work, hazards its breaking by the fretting of the several twists against one another. Maxon's Mech. Exer.
3. A cord; a string.
Through these labyrinths, not my grov'ling wit,
But thy silk twist, let down from heav'n to me,
Did both conduct and teach me, how by it
To climb to thee. Herbert.
About his chin the twist Dryden.
He ty'd, and soon the strang'd foul dismiss'd.
4. Contortion; writhing.
Not the least turn or twist in the fibres of any one animal, which does not render them more proper for that particular animal's way of life than any other cast or texture. Addison.
5. The manner of twisting.
Jack thrunk at first light of it; he found fault with the length, the thickness, and the twist. Arbutnot.
Twister. n. f. [from twist.] One who twists; a ropemaker.
To this word I have annexed some remarkable lines, which explain twist in all its senses.
When a twister a-twisting will twist him a twist,
For the twisting of his twist, he three times doth intwine;
But if one of the twines of the twist do untwine,
The twine that untwisteth untwisteth the twist.
Untwisting the twine that untwisteth between,
He twirls with his twister, the two in a twine;
Then twice having twisted the twines of the twine,
He twicheth the twine he had twined in twain.
The twain that in twining before in the twine,
As twines were intwined, he now doth untwine,
'Twixt the twain intwisting a twine more between,
He, twirling his twister, makes a twist of the twine. Wallis.
To twist. v. a. [copied, Saxon.] To finer; to flout; to reproach.
When approaching the stormy flowers,
We mought with our shoulders bear off the sharp showers,
And sooth to faine, nought seemeth like strife,
That shepherds to twisten each other's life. Spenser.
When I protest true loyalty to her,
She twists me with my falsehood to my friend. Shakespeare.
Ætop minds men of their errors without twisting them for what's amiss. L'Estrange.
This these scoffers twisted the Christians with. Tillotson.
Galen bled his patients, till by fainting they could bear no longer; for which he was twisted in his own time. Baker.
To twitch. v. a. [epicurean, Saxon.] To vellicate; to pluck with a quick motion; to snatch; to pluck with a hasty motion.
He rose, and twitch'd his mantle blue,
To-morrow to fresh woods, and pastures new. Milton.
Twitch'd by the sleeve he mouths it more and more. Dryden's Juvenal.
With a furious leap
She sprung from bed, disturbed in her mind,
And fear'd at ev'ry step a twitching fright behind. Dryd.
Thrice they twitch'd the diamond in her ear. Pope.
twitch. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A quick pull; a sudden vellication.
But Hudibras give him a twitch,
As quick as lightning in the breech. Hudibras.
The lion gave one hearty twitch, and got his feet out of the trap, but left his claws behind. L'Estrange.
2. A painful contraction of the fibres.
Other confederate pairs
Contract the fibres, and the twitch produce,
Which gently pushes on the grateful food.
To the wide stomach, by its hollow road. Blackmore.
Mighty physical their fear is,
For soon as noise of combat near is,
Their heart defending to their breeches,
Must give their stomachs cruel twitches. Prior.
A fit of the stone is the cure, from the inflammation and pain occasioning convulsive twitches. Sharp.
twitchgrass. n. f. A plant.
twitch-grass is a weed that keeps some land loose, hollow, and draws away the virtue of the ground. Mortimer.
To twytter. v. n.
1. To make a sharp tremulous intermitted noise.
This must be done,
Swallows twytter on the chimney-tops. Dryden.
They twytter cheerful, till the vernal months Invite them back. Thomson.
2. To be suddenly moved with any inclination. A low word.
A widow which had a twyttering toward a second husband, took a gossiping companion to manage the job. L'Estr. twytter. n. f. Any motion or disorder of passion; such as a violent fit of laughing, or fit of fretting.
The ancient errant knights
Won all their ladies hearts in fights,
And cut whole giants into fitters,
To put them into amorous twytters. Hudibras.

T Y M

- The moon was in a heavy twitter, that her cloaths never fitted her. L'Estrange. twittletwattle. n. f. [A ludicrous reduplication of twattle.] Tattle; gabble. A vile word.
Insipid twittletwattles, frothy jests, and jingling witticisms,
inure us to a misunderstanding of things. L'Estrange. twixt. A contraction of betwixt.
Twilight, short arbiter twixt day and night. Milton.
Two. adj. [twai, Gothic; cyu, Saxon.]
1. One and one.
Between two hawks, which flies the higher pitch;
Between two dogs, which hath the deeper mouth;
Between two blades, which bears the better temper;
Between two horses, which doth bear him best;
Between two girls, which hath the merriest eye,
I have some shallow spirit of judgment. Shakespeare.
Three words it will three times report, and then the two latter for some times. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Fifteen chambers were to lodge us two and two together. Bacon.
They lay
By two and two across the common way. Dryden.
2. It is used in composition.
Next to the raven's age, the Pylan king
Was longest liv'd of any two-legg'd thing. Dryden.
A rational animal better described man's essence, than a two-legged animal, with broad nails, and without feathers. Locke's Works.
The two-shap'd Erichonius had his birth
Without a mother, from the teeming earth. Addison.
Her register was a two-leaved book of record, one page containing the names of her living, and the other of her deceased members. Ayliffe.
Two-edged. adj. [two and edge.] Having an edge on either side.
Clarissa drew, with tempting grace,
A twoedg'd weapon from her shining case. Pope.
Two-fold. adj. [two and fold.] Double.
Our prayer against sudden death importeth a two-fold desire, that death when it cometh may give us some convenient re-pite, or if that be denied us of God, yet we may have wi-dom to provide always before hand. Hooker.
Through mirkom air her ready way she makes,
Her two-fold team, of which two black as pitch,
And two were brown, yet each to each unlike.
Did softly swim away. Fairy Queen.
O thou! the earthly author of my blood,
Whose youthful spirit in me regenerate,
Doth now with two-fold vigour lift me up,
To reach at victory above my head,
Add proof unto mine armour with thy prayers,
And with thy blessings steel my lance's point. Shakespeare.
Our two-fold seas wash either side. Dryden.
Time and place taken for distinguishable portions of space and duration, have each of them a two-fold acceptance. Locke.
Ewes, that erst brought forth but single lambs,
Now dropp'd their two-fold burdens. Prior.
Holiness may be taken in a two-fold sense; for that external holiness, which belongs to persons or things, offered to God;
or for those internal graces which sanctify our natures. Atterbury.
Two-fold. adv. Doubly.
A prophete you make two-fold more the child of hell than yourself. Matt. xxiii. 15.
Two-handed. adj. [two and hand.] Large; bulky; enormous of magnitude.
With huge two-handed sway,
Brandish'd aloft, the horrid edge came down,
Wide wafting. Milton's Par. Lost.
If little, then she's life and soul all o'er;
An Amazon, the large two-handed whore. Dryden.
Two-pence. n. f. A small coin, valued at twice a penny.
You all shew like gilt two-pences to me. Shakespeare.
To tye. v. a. To bind. See Tie.
Tye. n. f. See Tie. A knot; a bond or obligation.
Lay your Command upon me; to the which my duties
Are with a most indissoluble tye
For ever knit. Shakespeare.
I have no tye upon you to be true,
But that which loosen'd your's, my love to you. Dryden.
Honour's a sacred tye, the law of kings,
The noble mind's distinguishing perfection,
That aids and strengthens virtue where it meets her,
And imitates her actions where she is not. Addison's Cato.
It ought not to be sported with;
Lend me aid, I now conjure thee, lend,
By the soft tye and sacred name of friend. Pope.
Tyger. n. f. See Tiger.
Tymbal. n. f. [tymbal, French.] A kind of kettle-drum.
Yet gracious charity! indulgent guest!
Were not thy pow'r exerted in my breast; Those

- My speeches would send up unheeded pray'r:
The scorn of life would be but wild despair:
A tymbal's sound were better than my voice,
My faith were form, my eloquence were noise. Prior.
Type. n. f. [See Tike.] Type in Scottish still denotes a dog, or one as contemptible and vile as a dog, and from thence perhaps comes teague.
Bafe tye, call'st thou me host? now,
By this hand, I swear I scorn the term. Shakespeare.
TYMPANITES. n. f. [τυμπανίτης, from τυμπανίον, to sound like a drum.] That particular sort of dropsy that swells the belly up like a drum, and is often cured by tapping.
TYMPANUM. n. f. A drum; a part of the ear, so called from its resemblance to a drum.
The three little bones in meatu auditorio, by firming the tympanum, are a great help to the hearing. Wijeman.
TYMPANY. n. f. [from tympanum, Lat.] A kind of obstructed flatulence that swells the body like a drum.
Hope, the christian grace, must be proportioned and at-temperate to the promise; if it exceed that temper and proportion, it becomes a tumour and tympany of hope. Hamm.
He does not shew us Rome great suddenly,
As if the empire were a tympany,
But gives it natural growth, tells how and why
The little body grew so large and high. Suckling.
Others that affect
A lofty stile, swell to a tympany. Rescommon.
Pride is no more than an unnatural tympany, that rises in a bubble, and spends itself in a blast. L'Estrange.
Nor let thy mountain-belly make pretence
Of likeness; thine's a tympany of sense.
A tun of man in thy large bulk is writ,
But sure thou'rt but a kilderkin of wit. Dryden.
The air is so rarified in this kind of dropsical tumour as makes it hard and tight like a drum, and from thence it is called a tympany. A. butnot.
TYNY. adj. Small.
He that has a little tiny wit,
Must make content with his fortunes fit. Shakespeare.
TYPE. n. f. [type, Fr. typus, Lat. τυπος.]
1. Emblem; mark of something.
Clean renouncing
The faith they have in tennis, and tall stockings,
Short bolster'd breeches, and those types of travel,
And understanding again the honest men. Shakespeare.
Thy emblem, gracious queen, the British rose,
Type of sweet rule, and gentle majesty. Prior.
2. That by which something future is prefigured.
Informing them by types
And shadows of that destin'd seed to bruite
The serpent, by what means he shall achieve Mankind's deliverance. Milton.
The Apostle shews the Christian religion to be in truth and substance what the Jewish was only in type and shadow. Tillotson's Sermons.
3. A stamp; a mark not in use.
Thy father bears the type of King of Naples,
Yet not so wealthy as an English yeoman. Shakespeare.
What good is cover'd with the face of heav'n
To be discovered, that can do me good?
—I had advancement of your children, gentle lady,
—Up to some scaffold, there to lose their heads;
—No, to the dignity and height of fortune,
The high imperial type of this earth's glory. Shakespeare.
4. A printing letter.
TYPICK. n. f. [typicus, Fr. typicus, Lat.] Emblematical;
TYPICAL. adj. figurative of something else.
The Levitical priesthood was only typical of the christian;
which is so much more holy and honourable than that, as the institution of Christ is more excellent than that of Moses. Atterbury.
Hence that many courfers ran,
Hand-in-hand, a goodly train,
To bleis the great Eliza's reign;
And in the typic glory shew
What fuller bliss Maria shall bestow. Prior.
TYPICALLY. adv. [from typical.] In a typical manner.
This excellent communicativeness of the divine nature is typical represented, and mysteriously exemplified by the Por-phyrian scale of being. Norris.
TYPICALNESS. n. f. [from typical.] The state of being typical.
To typify. v. a. [from type.] To figure; to shew in emblem.
The resurrection of Christ hath the power of a pattern to us, and is so typified in baptism, as an engagement to rise to newness of life. Hammond.
Our saviour was typified indeed by the goat that was slain;
at the effusion of whole blood, not only the hard hearts of his enemies relented, but the stony rocks and veil of the temple were shattered. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

2. After the manner of printers.
TYPOGRAPHY. n. f. [τυγραφία, Fr. typographie, Lat.]
1. Emblematical, figurative, or hieroglyphical representation.
Those diminutive and pamphlet treatises daily published amongst us, are pieces containing rather typography than verity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
2. The art of printing.
TYRANNESS. n. f. [from tyrant.] A the tyrant.
They were by law of that proud tyranny,
Provok'd with wrath and envy's false surmise. Fairy Qu.
The tyranny doth joy to see
The huge massacres which her eyes do make. Spenser.
TYRANNICAL. n. f. [tyrannus, Latin; tyrannique, French;
tyrannicus.] Suiting a tyrant; acting like a tyrant; cruel; despotick; imperious.
Charge him home that affects Tyranny power. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
You have contriv'd to take
From Rome all reason'd office, and to wind Yourself into a power tyrannical. Shakespeare.
Domitian had been tyrannical; and in his time many noble houses were overthrown by false accusations. Bacon.
Our sects a more tyrannick power assume,
And would for scorpions change the rods of Rome. Rose.
Subdue and quell, o'er all the earth,
Brute violence, and proud tyrannick pow'r. Milton.
If the spirit of a subject be rebellious, in a prince it will be tyrannical and intolerable. Taylor.
She hath recourse
To tears and prayers, again the feels the smart
Of a fresh wound from the tyrannick dart. Denham.
And by the nobles, by his commons curst,
Th' oppressor rul'd tyrannick where he durst;
Stretch'd o'er the poor and church his iron rod,
And treats alike his vassals and his God. Pope.
TYRANNICALLY. adv. [from tyrannical.] In manner of a tyrant.
TYRANNICIDE. n. f. [tyrannus and caedo, Latin.] The act of killing a tyrant.
To TYRANNISE. v. n. [tyraniser, Fr. from tyrant.] To play the tyrant; to act with rigour and imperiousness.
While we trust in the mercy of God thro' Christ Jesus, fear will not be able to tyrannise over us. Hooker.
Then gan Caraulius tyrannise anew,
And gainst the Romans bent their proper power,
And so Alecctus treacherously slew,
And took on him the robe of Emperor. Fairy Queen.
I made thee miserable,
What time I threw the people's suffrages
On him, that thus doth tyrannise o'er me. Shakespeare.
A crew, whom like ambition joins
With him, or under him to tyrannise. Milton.
Beauty had crown'd you, and you must have been
The whole world's mistress, other than a queen;
All had been rivals, and you might have spar'd,
Or kill'd and tyrannise'd without a guard. Waller.
He does violence to his own faculties, tyrannises over his own mind, and usurps the prerogative that belongs to truth alone, which is to command assent by its own authority. Locke's Works.
TYRANNOUS. adj. [from tyrant.] Tyrannical; despotick; arbitrary; severe; cruel; imperious. Not in use.
It is strange to see the unmanlike cruelty of mankind, who, not content with their tyrannous ambition, to have brought the others virtuous patience under them, think their matterd nothing without doing injury to them. Sidney.
Lately grown into a loathing and detestation of the unjust and tyrannous rule of Harold an usurper. Spenser.
Betwixt two charming words, comes in my father,
And, like the tyrannous breathing of the north,
Shakes all our buds from blowing. Shakespeare.
Subjection to his empire tyrannous. Milton.
'Tis excellent
To have a giant's strength; but it is tyrannous
To use it like a giant. Shakespeare.
Fear you his tyrannous passion more, alas!
Than the queen's life. Shakespeare.
After the death of this tyrannous and ambitious king, these writings came abroad. Temple.
TYRANNY. n. f. [tyrannis, Latin; τυραννία; tyrannie, Fr.]
1. Absolute monarchy imperiously administered.
Our grand foe,
Who now triumphs, and in th' excess of joy,
Sole reigning holds the tyranny of heav'n. Milton.

TYR

- The cities fell often under tyrannies, which spring naturally out of popular governments.
2. Unrefracted and cruel power.
- Boundless intemperance
- In nature is a tyranny; it hath been Th'untimely emptying of the happy throne,
And fall of many kings.
3. Cruel government; rigorous command.
- Bleed, bleed, poor country!
- Great tyranny lay thou thy basis sure,
For goodness dares not check thee.
- Suspicious dispose kings to tyranny, and husbands to jealousy.
- God in judgment just,
Subjects him from without to violent lords;
Who oft as undeservedly intral
His outward freedom; tyranny must be.
4. Severity; rigour; inclemency.
- The tyranny o' the open night's too rough
For nature to endure.
- TYRANT. n. f. [τύραννος]; tyrannus, Latin. Rowland contends that this word, with the correspondent Greek and Latin, is derived from tir, Welch and Erse, land, and rhanner, Welch, to share, q. d. tirbanner, a sharer, or divider of and among his vassals.]

TYR

1. An absolute monarch governing imperiously.
2. A cruel despotick and severe master; an oppressor.
- Love to a yielding heart is a king, but to a resisting is a tyrant.
- I would not be the villain that thou think'st,
For the whole space that's in the tyrant's grasp,
And the rich east to boot.
- Dissembling courtesy! how fine this tyrant
Can tickle where she wounds!
- The house of woe, and dungeon of our tyrant.
- Consider those grand agents and lieutenants of the devil, by whom he scourges and plagues the world under him, to wit, tyrants; and was there ever any tyrant who was not also false and perfidious!
- Thou mean'st to kill a tyrant, not a king.
- When tyrant custom had not shackl'd man,
But free to follow nature was the mode.
- TYRE. n. f. [Properly tire.] See TIRE.
- I have seen her beset and bedecked all over with emeralds and pearls, ranged in rows about the tyre of her head.
- TYRO. n. f. [Properly tiro, as in the Latin.] One yet not master of his art; one in his rudiments.
- There stands a structure on a rising hill,
Where tyro's take their freedom out to kill.

U.

VAC

- V. Has two powers, expressed in modern English by two characters, V consonant and U vowel, which ought to be considered as two letters; but as they were long confounded while the two uses were annexed to one form, the old custom still continues to be followed.
- U*, the vowel, has two sounds; one clear, expressed at other times by eu, as obscure; the other close, and approaching to the Italian u, or English oo, as obtund.
- V*, the consonant, has a sound nearly approaching to those of b and f. With b it is by the Spaniards and Gascons always confounded, and in the Runick alphabet is expressed by the same character with f, distinguished only by a diacritical point. Its sound in English is uniform. It is never mute.
- VACANCY. n. f. [from vacant.]
1. Empty space; vacuity.
- How is't
That thus you bend your eye on vacancy,
And with th'incorporeal air do hold discourse? Sh. Hamlet.
2. Chasm; space unfill'd.
- The reader finds a wide vacancy, and knows not how to transport his thoughts to the next particular, for want of some connecting idea.
3. [Vacancy, Fr.] State of a post or employment when it is un-supplied.
- In the vacancy of a bishop, the guardian of the spiritualities was summon'd to parliament in the bishop's room.
4. [Vacances, Fr.] Time of leisure; relaxation; intermission; time unengaged.
- If, sometimes, each other's eyes we meet,
Those little vacancies from toil are sweet.
- The daily intervals of time and vacancies from necessary labour, together with the one day in seven in the christian world, allow sufficient time.
5. Littlestness; emptiness of thought.
- When alone, or in company, they sit still without doing any thing, I like it worse; for all dispositions to idleness or vacancy, even before they are habits, are dangerous.
- VACANT. adj. [vacant, Fr. vacans, Latin.]
1. Empty; unfilled; void.
- Why should the air so impetuously rush into the cavity of the receiver, if there were before no vacant room to receive it.
- A better race to bring into their vacant room.
2. Free; unencumbered; uncrowded.
- Religion is the interest of all; but philosophy of those only that are at leisure, and vacant from the affairs of the world.
- A very little part of our life is so vacant from uneasinesses, as to leave us free to the attraction of remoter good.
3. Not filled by an incumbent, or possessor.
- Left the fiend invade vacant possession.
- Others when they allowed the throne vacant, thought the succession should immediately go to the next heir.
4. Being at leisure; disengaged.
- They which have the government, scatter the army abroad, and place them in villages to take their vicuals of them, at such vacant times as they lie not in camp.
- Sir John Berkley was the more vacant for that service, by the reduction of Barnstable.
- The memory relieves the mind in her vacant moments, and prevents any chains of thought, by ideas of what is past.
5. Thoughtless; empty of thought; not busy.
- The wretched slave,
Who, with a body fill'd, and vacant mind,
Gets him to rest, cramm'd with distressful bread.
- The duke had a pleasant and vacant face, proceeding from a singular assurance in his temper.
- Some vain amusement of a vacant soul.
- To VACATE. v. a. [vacare, Latin.]
1. To annul; to make void; to make of no authority.

V.

VAG

- That after-act vacating the authority of the precedent, tells the world that some remorse touched even Strafford's most implacable enemies.
2. To make vacant; to quit possession of.
3. To defeat; to put an end to.
- He vacates my revenge;
For while he trusts me, 'twere so base a part
To fawn, and yet betray.
- VACATION. n. f. [vacation, Fr. vacatio, Latin.]
1. Intermission of juridical proceedings, or any other stated employments; recess of courts or senates.
- Vacation* is all that time which passes between term and term, at London.
- As these clerks want not their full task of labour during the open term, so there is for them whereupon to be occupied in the vacation only.
2. Leisure; freedom from trouble or perplexity.
- Benefit of peace, quiet, and vacation for piety, have rendered it necessary in every christian commonwealth, by laws to secure propriety.
- VACCARY. n. f. [vacca, Latin.] a cow-house; a cow-pasture.
- VACILLANCY. n. f. [vacillans, from vacillo, Lat. vacillant, Fr.] A state of wavering; fluctuation; inconstancy. Not much in use.
- I deny that all mutability implies imperfection, though some does, as that vacillancy in human souls, and such mutations as are found in corporeal matter.
- VACILLATION. n. f. [vacillatio, from vacillo, Lat. vacillation, Fr.] The act or state of reeling or staggering.
- The muscles keep the body upright, and prevent its falling, by readily assisting against every vacillation.
- VACUITY. n. f. [from vacuum.] A philosopher that holds a vacuum: opposed to a plenist.
- Those spaces, which the vacuists would have to be empty, because they are manifestly devoid of air, the plenists do not prove replenished with subtle matter.
- VACUATION. n. f. [vacuatio, Latin.] The act of emptying.
- VACUITY. n. f. [vacuitas, from vacuus, Lat. vacuité, Fr.]
1. Emptiness; State of being unfilled.
- Hunger is such a state of vacuity, as to require a fresh supply of aliment.
2. Space unfilled; space unoccupied.
- In filling up vacuities, turning out shadows and ceremonies, by explicit prescription of substantial duties, which those shadows did obscurely represent.
- He, that seat soon falling, meets
A vast vacuity.
- Body and space are quite different things, and a vacuity is interspersed among the particles of matter.
- God, who alone can answer all our longings, and fill every vacuity of our soul, should intirely possess our heart.
3. Inanity; want of reality.
- The soul is seen, like other things, in the mirror of its effects: but if they'll run behind the glass to catch at it, their expectations will meet with vacuity and emptiness.
- VACUOUS. adj. [vacuus, Lat. vacuë, Fr.] Empty; unfilled.
- Boundless the deep, because I AM who fill Infinity: nor vacuous the space.
- VACUUM. n. f. [Latin.] Space unoccupied by matter.
- Our enquiries about vacuum, or space and atoms, will show us some good practical lessons.
- To VADE. v. n. [vado, Latin.] To vanish; to pass away.
- Be ever gloried here thy sovereign name,
That thou may'st smile on all which thou hast made;
Whose frown alone can shake this earthly frame,
And at whose touch the hills in smoke shall vade.
- VAGABOND. adj. [vagabundus, low Latin. vagabond, Fr.]
1. Wandering without any settled habitation; wanting a home.

V A I

Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death;
Vagabond exile: yet I wou'd not buy
 Their mercy at the price of one fair word. Shakesp. Cor.
 A vagabond debtor may be cited in whatever place or jurisdiction he is found. Ayliffe's Paragon.
 2. Wandering; vagrant.
 This common body,
 Like to a vagabond flag upon the stream,
 Goes to, and back, lacquing the varying tide. Shakesp.
 Their prayers by envious winds
 Blown vagabond or frustrate. Milton.
VAGABOND. n. f. [from the adj.]
 1. A vagrant; a wanderer, commonly, in a sense of reproach.
 We call those people wanderers and vagabonds, that have no dwelling-place. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
 Reduced, like Hannibal, to seek relief
 From court to court, and wander up and down
 A vagabond in Africa. Addison's Cato.
 2. One that wanders illegally, without a settled habitation.
Vagabond is a person without a home. Watts.
VAGARY. n. f. [from vagus, Latin.] A wild freak; a capricious frolic.
 They chang'd their minds,
 Flew off, and into strange vagaries fell,
 As they wou'd dance. Milton's Par. Lost. b. vi. l. 613.
 Would your son engage in some frolic, or take a vagary, were it not better he should do it with, than without your knowledge? Lake on Education, § 97.
VAGABOND. n. f. [from vagina and penna, Latin.] Sheath-winged; having the wings covered with hard scales.
VAGOUS. adj. [vagus, Lat. vagus, Fr.] Wandering; unsettled. Not in use.
 Such as were born and begot of a single woman, thro' a vagous lust, were called Sporii. Ayliffe.
VAGRANCY. n. f. [from vagrant.] A state of wandering;
 unsettled condition.
VAGRANT. adj. Wandering; unsettled; vagabond; unfixed in place.
 Do not oppose popular mistakes and surmises, or vagrant and fictitious stories. More's Divine Dialogues.
 Take good heed what men will think and say;
 That beauteous Emma vagrant courtes took,
 Her father's house, and civil life forsook. Prior.
 Her lips no living bard, I weat,
 May say how red, how round, how sweet;
 Old Homer only could indite
 Their vagrant grace, and soft delight:
 They stand recorded in his book.
 When Helen smil'd, and Hebe spoke. Prior.
VAGRANT. n. f. [vagant, Fr.] A sturdy beggar; wanderer; vagabond; man unsettled in habitation. In an ill sense.
Vagrants and outlaws shall offend thy view,
 Train'd to assault, and disciplin'd to kill. Prior.
 You'll not the progress of your atoms stay,
 Nor to collect the vagrants find a way. Blackmore.
 To relieve the helpless poor; to make sturdy vagrants relieve themselves; to hinder idle hands from being mischievious, are things of evident use. F. Atterbury.
Ye vagrants of the sky,
 To fight or left, unheeded, take your way. Pope.
VAGUE. adj. [vague, Fr. vagus, Latin.]
 1. Wandering; vagrant; vagabond.
 Gray encouraged his men to set upon the vague villains, good neither to live peaceably, nor to fight. Hayward.
 2. Unfixed; unsettled; undetermined; indefinite.
 The perception of being, or not being, belongs no more to these vague ideas, signified by the terms, whatsoever and things, than it does to any other ideas. Locke.
VAIL. n. f. [voile, French. This word is now frequently written veil, from velum, Latin, and the verb velo, from the verb velo; but the old orthography commonly derived it, I believe rightly, from the French.]
 1. A curtain; a cover thrown over any thing to be concealed.
 While they supposed to lie hid in their secret sins, they were scattered under a dark vail of forgetfulness. Wisd.
 2. A part of female dress, by which the face and part of the shape is concealed.
 3. Money given to servants. It is commonly used in the plural.
 See VALE.
 To VAIL. v. a. To cover. See VEIL.
 To VAIL. v. a. [avaller le bonet, French.]
 1. To let fall; to suffer to descend.
 They fitly refused to vail their bonnets, which is reckoned intolérable contempt by cavaliers. Carew.
 The virgin 'gan her beavoir vail,
 And thank'd him first, and thus began her tale. Fairfax.
 2. To let fall in token of respect.
 Certain of the Turks gallics, which would not vail their top-falls, the Venetians fiercely assailed. Knolles's Hist.
 They had not the ceremony of vailing the bonnet in salutations; for, in medals, they still have it on their heads. Add.

3. To fall; to let sink in fear, or for any other interest.
 That furious Scot,
 'Gan vail his stomach, and did grace the shame
 Of those that turn'd their backs. Shakesp.
 To VAIL. v. n. To yield; to give place; to shew respect by yielding. In this sense, the modern writers have ignorantly written vail.
 Thy convenience must vail to thy neighbour's necessity;
 and thy very necessities must yield to thy neighbour's extremity. South.
VAIN. adj. [vain, Fr. vanus, Latin.]
 1. Fruitless; ineffectual.
 Let no man speak again
 To alter this; for counsel is but vain. Shakesp.
Vain is the force of man,
 To crush the pillars which the pile sustains. Dryden.
 2. Empty; unreal; shadowy.
 Before the passage horrid Hydra stands,
 Gorgons, Geiron with his triple frame,
 And vain chimera, vomits empty flame. Dryden's En.
 Unmov'd his eyes, and wet his beard appears;
 And shedding vain, but seeming real tears. Dryden.
 3. Meanly proud; proud of petty things.
 No folly like vain glory; nor any thing more ridiculous than for a vain man to be still boasting of himself. L'Estran.
 He wav'd a torch aloft, and, madly vain,
 Sought godlike worship from a servile train. Dryden.
 The minstrels play'd on ev'ry side,
Vain of their art, and for the mastery vy'd. Dryden.
 To be vain is rather a mark of humility than pride.
Vain men delight in telling what honours have been done them, what great company they have kept, and the like;
 by which they plainly confess, that these honours were more than their due, and such as their friends would not believe, if they had not been told: whereas a man truly proud, thinks the honours below his merit, and scorns to boast. Swift.
 Ah friend! to dazzle let the vain design;
 To raise the thought, and touch the heart, be thine. Pope.
 View this marble, and be vain no more. Pope.
 4. Shewy; ostentatious.
 Load some vain church with old theatrick state. Pope.
 5. Idle; worthless; unimportant.
 Both all things vain, and all who in vain things
 Built their fond hopes of glory, or lasting fame,
 Or happiness. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 He heard a grave philosopher maintain,
 That all the actions of our life were vain,
 Which with our sense of pleasure not conspir'd. Denham.
 To your vain answer will you have recourse,
 And tell 'tis ingenuit active force. Blackmore.
 6. False; not true.
 7. In VAIN. To no purpose; to no end; ineffectually; without effect.
 He tempts in vain.
 Providence and nature never did any thing in vain. L'Estr.
 Strong Halys stands in vain; weak Phlegys flies. Dryd.
 The philosophers of old did in vain enquire whether im-munit bonum consisted in riches, bodily delights, virtue, or contemplation. Lake.
 If we hope for what we are not likely to possess, we act and think in vain, and make life a greater dream and shadow than it really is. Addison's Spectator.
 If from this discourse one honest man shall receive satisfaction, I shall think that I have not written nor lived in vain. West on the Resurrection.
VAIN-GLORIOUS. adj. [vanus and gloriosus, Latin.] Boasting without performances; proud in disproportion to desert.
Vain-glorious man, when flut'ring wind does blow,
 In his light wings is lifted up to sky. Fairy Queen.
 Strength to glory aspires
Vain-glorious, and through infamy seeks fame. Milton.
 This his arrogant and vain-glorious expression witnesseth. Hale.
VAIN-GLORY. n. f. [vana gloria, Latin.] Pride above merit; empty pride; pride in little things.
 He had nothing of vain-glory, but yet kept state and majesty to the height; being sensible, that majesty becometh the people bow, but vain-glory boweth to them. Bacon's Hen. VII.
 Expose every blast of vain-glory, every idle thought, to be chastened by the rod of spiritual discipline. Taylor.
 This extraordinary person, out of his natural aversion to vain-glory, wrote several pieces, which he did not assume the honour of. Addison.
 A monarch's sword, when mad vain-glory draws;
 Not Waller's wreath can hide the nation's fear. Pope.
VAINLY. adv. [from vain.]
 1. Without effect; to no purpose; in vain.
 Our cannons malice vainly shall be spent Against th' invulnerable clouds of heav'n. Shakesp.
 In weak complaints you vainly waste your breath;
 They are not tears that can revenge his death. Dryden.
 2. Proudly; arrogantly.
 My forepast proofs, howe'er the matter fall,

Shall tax my fears of little vanity,
 Having vainly fear'd too little. Shakesp.
 Humility teaches us to think neither vainly nor vauntingly of ourselves. Delany.
 3. Idly; foolishly.
 Nor vainly hope to be invulnerable. Milton.
 If Lentulus be ambitious, he shall be vainly credulous;
 presuming his advancement to be decreed by the Sybilline oracles. Grew's Cosmol.
VA'INNESS. n. f. [from vain.] The state of being vain. Pride;
 fallhood; emptiness.
 I hate ingratitude more in a man,
 Than lying, vainness, babbling. Shakesp.
VA'IVODE. n. f. [vaivod, a governor, Slavonian.] A prince of the Dacian provinces.
VA'LANCE. n. f. [from Valencia, whence the use of them came. Skinner.] The fringes or drapery hanging round the tetter and stead of a bed.
 My house
 Is richly furnished with plate and gold;
 Valance of Venice, gold in needlework. Shakesp.
 Thrust the valance of the bed, that it may be full in fight. Swift.
 To VAL'ANCE. v. a. [from the noun.] To decorate with drapery. Not in use.
 Old friend, thy face is valanc'd since
 I saw thee last; com'it thou to beard me. Shakesp.
VALE. n. f. [val, Fr. vallis, Latin.]
 1. A low ground; a valley; a place between two hills. Vale is a poetical word.
 In Ida vale: who knows not Ida vale? Spenser.
 An hundred shepherds woned.
 Met in the vale of Arde. Shakesp. Hen. VIII.
 Anchises, in a flow'ry vale,
 Review'd his muster'd race, and took the tale. Dryden.
 2. [From avail, profit; or vale, farewell. If from avail, it must be written vail, as Dryden writes. If from vale, which I think is right, it must be vale.] Money given to servants.
 Since our knights and senators account
 To what their fordid, begging vails amount;
 Judge what a wretched share the poor attends,
 Whose whole subsistence on those alms depends. Dryden.
 His revenue, besides vales, amounted to thirty pounds. Swift.
VALE'DICTON. n. f. [valedico, Lat.] A farewell.
 A valediction forbidding to weep. Donne.
VALE'DICTORY. adj. [from valedico, Lat.] Bidding farewell.
VALENTINE. n. f. A sweetheart, chosen on Valentine's day.
 Now all nature seem'd in love,
 And birds had drawn their valentines. Wotton.
VALE'RIAN. n. f. [valeriana, Lat. valerian, Fr.] A plant.
 The leaves grow by pairs opposite upon the stalks; the flower consists of one leaf, divided into five segments; these are succeeded by oblong flat seeds. Miller.
VALET. n. f. [valet, French.] A waiting servant.
 Giving cast-clothes to be worn by valets, has a very ill effect upon little minds. Addison.
VALETUDINARIAN. adj. [valetudinaire, Fr. valetudo, Lat.]
VALETUDINARY. } Weakly; sickly; infirm of health.
 Physis, by purging noxious humours, prevents sickness in the healthy, or recourse thereof in the valetudinary. Brown.
 Shifting from the warmer vallies, to the colder hills, or from the hills to the vales, is a great benefit to the valetudi-narian, feeble part of mankind. Derham.
 Cold of winter, by stopping the pores of perspiration, keeps the warmth more within; whereby there is a greater quantity of spirits generated in healthful animals, for the case is quite otherwise in valetudinary ones. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.
Valetudinarians must live where they can command and cold. Swift.
VA'LANCE. n. f. [from valiant; vallance, Fr.] Valour; personal puillance; fierceness; bravery.
 To let him weat his doughty vallance. Spenser.
VALIANT. adj. [valliant, French.] Stout; personally puil-fant; brave.
 Only be thou valiant for me, and fight the Lord's battles. 1 Sam. xviii. 17.
 A son of Jesse, a mighty valiant man. 1 Sam. xvi. 18.
VALIANTLY. adv. [from valiant.] Stoutly; with personal strength; with personal bravery.
 Farewel, kind lord; fight valiantly to-day:
 Thou art fram'd of the firm truth of valour. Shakesp.
 It was the duty of a good soldier valiantly to withstand his enemies, and not to be troubled with any evil hap. Knolles.
VA'LANTNESS. n. f. [from valiant.] Valour; personal bravery; puillance; fierceness; stoutness.
 Thy valiantness was mine; thou suck'dst it from me. Sh.
 Achimenes having won the top of the walls, by the valiant-ness of the defendants was forced to retire. Knolles.
 Shew not thy valiantness in wine. Eccles. xxxi. 25.
VALID. adj. [valide, Fr. validus, Latin.]
 1. Strong; powerful; efficacious; prevalent.

V A L

Perhaps more valid arms,
 Weapons more violent, when next we meet,
 May serve to better us, and worfe our foes. Milton.
 2. Having force; prevalent; weighty; conclusive.
 A difference in their sentiments as to particular questions, is no valid argument against the general truth believed by them, but rather a clearer and more solid proof of it. Stephens.
VAL'IDITY. n. f. [validité, Fr. from valid.]
 1. Force to convince; certainty.
 You are persuaded of the validity of that famous verse,
 'Tis expectation makes a blessing dear. Pope.
 2. Value. A sense not used.
 To thee and thine,
 Remain this ample third of our fair kingdom;
 No less in space, validity, and pleasure,
 Than that conferr'd on Gonerill. Shakesp.
VA'LLANCY. n. f. [from vallance.] A large wig that shades the face.
 But you, loud Sirs, who through your curls look big,
 Criticks in plume and white vallancy wig. Dryden.
VA'LLY. n. f. [vallée, Fr. vallis, Latin.] A low ground; a hollow between hills.
 Live with me, and be my love,
 And we will all the pleasure prove,
 That hills and vallies yield. Raleigh.
Vallies are the intervals betwixt mountains. Woodward.
 Sweet interchange of hill and vally. Milton.
VA'LO'ROUS. adj. [from valour.] Brave; stout; valiant.
 The famous warriors of the antique world
 Us'd trophies to erect in stately wife,
 In which they would the records have enroll'd,
 Of their great deeds and valorous exploits. Spenser.
 Captain Jamy is a marvellous valorous gentleman. Shakesp.
VA'LOUR. n. f. [valour, Fr. valor, Latin; Ans.] Personal bravery; strength; prowess; puillance; stoutness.
 That I may pour the spirits in thine ear,
 And chastise with the valour of my tongue,
 All that impedes thee. Shakesp. Macbeth.
 Here I contest
 As hotly and as nobly with thy love,
 As ever in ambitious strength I did Contend against thy valour. Shakesp. Coriolanus.
 When valour preys on reason,
 It eats the sword it fights with. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleo.
 An innate valour appeared in him, when he put himself upon the soldiers defence, as he received the mortal stab. Howel.
 For contemplation he, and valour form'd;
 For softness she, and sweet attractive grace. Milton.
 Such were these giants; men of high renown!
 For, in those days, might only shall be admir'd,
 And valour, and heroic virtue, call'd. Milton.
Valour gives awe, and promises protection to those who want heart or strength to defend themselves. This makes the authority of men among women; and that of a master-buck in a numerous herd. Temple's Miscel.
VALUABLE. adj. [valable, Fr. from value.]
 1. Precious; being of great price.
 2. Worthy; deserving regard.
 A just account of that valuable person, whose remains lie before us. F. Atterbury's Sermon.
 The value of several circumstances in story, lessens very much by distance of time; though some minute circumstances are very valuable. Swift's Thoughts.
VALUATION. n. f. [from value.]
 1. Value set upon any thing.
 No reason I, since of your lives you set
 So slight a valuation, should reserve
 My crack'd one to more care. Shakesp. Cymbeline.
 Take out of men's minds false valuations, and it would leave the minds of a number of men, poor shrunken things. Bacon.
 The writers expressed not the valuation of the denarius, without regard to its present valuation. Arbutnot on Coins.
 2. The act of setting a value; appraisement.
 Humility in man consists not in denying any gift that is in him, but in a just valuation of it, rather thinking too meanly than too highly. Ray on the Creation.
VALUA'TOR. n. f. [from value.] An appraiser; one who sets upon any thing its price.
 What valuators will the bishops make use of? Swift.
VALUE. n. f. [value, Fr. valor, Lat.]
 1. Price; worth.
 Ye are physicians of no value. Job xiii.
 2. High rate.
 Caesar is well acquainted with your virtues,
 And therefore sets this value on your life:
 Let him but know the price of Cato's friendship,
 And name your terms. Addison's Cato.
 3. Rate; price equal to the worth of the thing bought.
 He sent him money; it was with this obliging testimony, that his design was not to pay him the value of his pictures, because they were above any price. Dryden.
 To

VAN

- To VALUE. v. a. [valoir, Fr. from the noun.]
 1. To rate at a certain price.
 When the country grows better inhabited, the tithes and other obventions will be more augmented, and better valued. Spenser.
 A mind valuing his reputation at the due price, will repute all dishonest gain much inferior thereunto. Carew's Survey.
 God alone values right the good. Milton.
 2. To rate highly; to have in high esteem.
 Some of the finest treatises in dialogue, many very valued pieces of French, Italian, and English appear. Addison.
 He values himself upon the compassion with which he relieved the afflicted. Atterbury's Sermons.
 To him your orchard's early fruits are due,
 A pleasing off'ring, when 'tis made by you;
 He values these. Pope.
 3. To appraise; to estimate.
 If he be poorer than estimation, the priest shall value him. Lev. xxvii. 8.
 4. To be worth; to be equal in worth to.
 The peace between the French and us not values
 The cost that did conclude it. Shakespeare's Hen. VIII.
 5. To take account of.
 If a man be in sickness, the time will seem longer without a clock than with; for the mind doth value every moment. Bacon.
 6. To reckon at, with respect to number or power.
 The queen is valued thirty thousand strong;
 Her faction will be full as strong as ours. Shakespeare.
 7. To consider with respect to importance; to hold important.
 The king must take it ill,
 So slightly valued in his messenger. Shakespeare's K. Lear.
 Neither of them valued their promises, according to rules of honour or integrity. Clarendon, b. viii.
 8. To equal in value; to countervail.
 It cannot be valued with the gold of ophir. Job. xxviii. 16.
 9. To raise to estimation.
 She ordered all things, resisting the wisdom of the wisest, by making the possessor thereof miserable; valuing the folly of the most foolish, by making the success prosperous. Sidney.
 Some value themselves to their country by jealousies of the crown. Temple.
 Vanity, or a desire of valuing ourselves by shewing others faults. Temple.
VALUELESS. adj. [from value.] Being of no value.
 A counterfeit
 Resembling majesty; which, touch'd and tried, Proves valueless. Shakespeare's K. John.
VALUER. n. f. [from value.] He that values.
VALVE. n. f. [valva, Latin.]
 1. A folding door.
 Swift through the valves the visionary fair
 Repas'd. Pope's Odys. b. iv.
 2. Any thing that opens over the mouth of a vessel.
 This air, by the opening of the valves, and forcing up of the sucker, may be driven out. Boyle's Works.
 3. [In anatomy.] A kind of membrane, which opens in certain vessels to admit the blood, and shuts to prevent its reflux.
 The arteries, with a contractile force, drive the blood still forward; it being hindered from going backward by the valves of the heart. Arbutnot on Aliments.
VALVULE. n. f. [valvule, Fr.] A small valve.
VAMP. n. f. The upper leather of a shoe. Ainsworth.
 To VAMP. v. a. [This is supposed probably enough by Skinner to be derived from avant, Fr. before; and to mean laying on a new outside.] To piece an old thing with some new part.
 You with
 To vamp a body with a dangerous physick,
 That's sure of death without. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
 This opinion hath been vamped up by Cardan. Bentley.
 I had never much hopes of your vamp play. Swift.
VAMPER. n. f. [from vamp.] One who pieces out an old thing with something new.
VAN. n. f. [from avant, French.]
 1. The front of an army; the first line.
 Before each van prick forth the airy knights. Milton.
 The foe he had survey'd,
 Arrang'd, as to him they did appear,
 With van, main battle, wings and rear. Hudibras.
 Van to van the foremost squadrons meet,
 The midmost battles hatching up behind. Dryden.
 2. [Van. vannus, Latin.] Any thing spread wide by which a wind is raised; a fan.
 The other token of their ignorance of the sea was an oar, they call it a corn-van. Notes on Odys.
 3. A wing with which the air is beaten.
 His sail-broad vans
 He spreads for flight, and in the surging smoke
 Up-lifted, spins the ground. Milton's Par. Lost.
 A fiery globe
 Of angels on full sail of wing drew nigh,

VAN

- Who on their plumed vans receiv'd him soft
 From his uneasy station, and upbore,
 As on a floating couch, through the blithe air. Milton.
 His disabled wing unfurled;
 He wheel'd in air, and stretch'd his vans in vain;
 His vans no longer could his flight sustain. Dryden.
 The vans are broad on one side, and narrower on the other;
 both which minister to the progressive motion of the bird. Derb.
VANCOURIER. n. f. [avantcourier, French.] A harbinger; a precursor.
VANE. n. f. [vaene, Dutch.] A plate hung on a pin to turn with the wind.
 A man she wou'd spell backward;
 If tall, a lance ill-headed;
 If speaking, why a vane blown with all winds. Shakespeare.
VANGUARD. n. f. [avant garde, French.] The front, or first line of the army.
 The king's vant-guard maintained fight against the whole power of the enemies. Bacon.
 Vanguard to right and left the front unfold. Milton.
VANTILLA. n. f. [vanille, French.] A plant. It hath an anomalous flower, consisting of six leaves, five of which are placed in a circular order, and the middle one is concave; the enlacement becomes an horned, soft, fleshy fruit, filled with very small seeds. The fruit of those plants is used to scent chocolate. Müller.
 When mixed with vanillas, or spices, it acquires the good and bad qualities of aromatic oils. Arbutnot on Aliments.
VANISH. v. n. [vanes, Latin. evanescit, Fr.]
 1. To lose perceptible existence.
 High honour is not only gotten and born by pain and danger, but must be nursed by the like, or else vanish as soon as it appears to the world. Sidney.
 Whether are they vanish'd?
 — Into the air; and what vanish'd corporal
 Melted as breath into the wind. Shakespeare.
 While fancy brings the vanish'd piles to view,
 And builds imaginary Rome anew. Pope.
 2. To pass away from the sight; to disappear.
 Now I have taken heart, thou vanishest. Shakespeare.
 He cut the cleaving sky,
 And in a moment vanish'd from her eye. Pope's Odys.
 3. To pass away; to be lost.
 All these delights will vanish. Milton.
 That spirit of religion and seriousness, by which we had distinguished ourselves, vanish'd all at once, and a spirit of insiduity and prophaneness started up. Atterbury.
VANITY. n. f. [vanitas, Lat. vanité, Fr.]
 1. Emptiness; uncertainty; inanity.
 2. Fruitless desire; fruitless endeavour.
 Vanity possesseth many, who are desirous to know the certainty of things to come.
 Thy pride,
 And wand'ring vanity, when least was safe,
 Rejected my forewarning. Milton.
 3. Trifling labour.
 To use long discourse against those things which are both against scripture and reason, might rightly be judged a vanity in the answerer, not much inferior to that of the inventor. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
 4. Falshood; untruth.
 Here I may well shew the vanity of that which is reported in the story of Walsingham. Sir J. Davies.
 5. Empty pleasure; vain pursuit; idle shew; unsubstantial enjoyment; petty object of pride.
 Were it not strange if God should have made such store of glorious creatures on earth, and leave them all to be consumed in secular vanity, allowing none but the baser sort to be employed in his own service. Hooker.
 I must Bestow upon the eyes of this young couple
 Some vanity of mine art. Shakespeare's Temp.
 Cast not her serious wit on idle things;
 Makes her free will slave to vanity. Davies.
 Sin, with vanity, had fill'd the works of men. Milton.
 The eldest equal the youngest in the vanity of their dress;
 and no other reason can be given of it, but that they equal, if not surpass them, in the vanity of their desires. South.
 Think not when woman's transient breath is fled,
 That all her vanities at once are dead;
 Succeeding vanities the still regards,
 And though she plays no more, o'erlooks the cards. Pope.
 6. Ostentation; arrogance.
 The ground-work thereof is true, however they, through vanity, whilst they would not seem to be ignorant, do thereupon build many forged histories of their own antiquity. Spenser.
 Whether it were out of the same vanity, which possessed all those learned philosophers and poets, that Plato also published, not under the right authors names, those things which he had read in the scriptures; or fearing the severity of the Areopagite, and the example of his master Socrates, I cannot judge. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

VAP

7. Petty pride; pride exerted upon slight grounds; pride operating on small occasions.
 Can you add guilt to vanity, and take A pride to hear the conquests which you make. Dryden.
 'Tis an old maxim in the schools,
 That vanity's the food of fools;
 Yet now and then your men of wit
 Will condescend to take a bit. Swift's Miscel.
 To VAN. v. a. [from vannus, Lat. vanner, Fr.] To fan; to winnow. Not in use.
 The corn, which in vanning lieth lowest is the best. Bacon.
 To VANQUISH. v. a. [vaincre, French.]
 1. To conquer; to overcome; to subdue.
 Wert not a shame, that, whilst you live at jar,
 The fearful French, whom you late vanquished,
 Should make a start o'er seas, and vanquish you? Shakespeare.
 They subdued and vanquished the rebels in all encounters. Clarendon, b. viii.
 The gods the victor, Cato the vanquish'd chose:
 But you have done what Cato could not do,
 To chuse the vanquish'd, and restore him too. Dryden.
 2. To confute.
 This bold assertion has been fully vanquished in a late reply to the bishop of Meaux's treatise. F. Atterbury.
VANQUISHER. n. f. [from vanquish.] Conqueror; subduer.
 He would pawn his fortunes
 To hopeless restitution, so he might Be call'd your vanquisher. Shakespeare.
 I shall rise victorious, and subdue
 My vanquisher; spoil'd of his vaunted spoil. Milton.
 Troy's vanquisher, and great Achilles' son. A. Phillips.
VANTAGE. n. f. [from advantage.]
 1. Gain; profit.
 What great vantage do we get by the trade of a pastor? Syd.
 2. Superiority; state in which one had better means of action than another.
 With the vantage of mine own excuse,
 Hath he excepted most against my love. Shakespeare.
 He had them at vantage, being tired and harrassed with a long march. Bacon.
 The pardoned person must not think to stand upon the same vantage of ground with the innocent. South.
 3. Opportunity; convenience.
 Be assur'd, Madam, 'twill be done
 With his next vantage. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
 To VANTAGE. v. a. [from advantage.] To profit.
 We yet of present peril be afraid;
 For needful fear did never vantage none. Fairy Queen.
VANTRASS. n. f. [avant bras, Fr.] Armour for the arm.
 I'll hide my silver beard in a gold beaver,
 And in my vantrass put this wither'd brawn. Shakespeare.
 Put on vantrass, and greaves, and gauntlet. Milton.
VAPID. adj. [vapulus, Latin.] Dead; having the spirit evaporated; spiritless; maudlin; flat.
 Thy wines let feed a-while
 On the fat refuse; left too soon disjoint'd,
 From spiritely it to sharp or vapid change. Phillips.
 The effects of a vapid and viscous constitution of blood, are stagnation, acrimony, and putrefaction. Arbutnot.
VAPIDNESS. n. f. [from vapid.] The state of being spiritless or maudlin; maudlinness.
VAPORATION. n. f. [evaporation, Fr. evaporation, Lat. from vapor.] The act of escaping in vapours.
VAPORER. n. f. [from vapor.] A boaster; a braggart.
 This shews these vaporers, to what scorn they expose themselves. Government of the Tongue.
VAPORISH. adj. [from vapor.] Vaporous; splenetic; humourfome.
 Pallas grew vaporish once and odd,
 She would not do the least right thing. Swift.
VAPOROUS. adj. [vaporosus, Fr. from vapor.]
 1. Full of vapours or exhalations; fume.
 The vaporous night approaches. Shakespeare.
 It proceeded from the nature of the vaporish place. Sandys.
 This shifting our abode from the warmer and more vaporous air of the vallies, to the colder and more subtle air of the hills, is a great benefit to the valetudinarian part. Dorham.
 2. Windy; flatulent.
 If the mother eat much beans, or such vaporous food, it endagereth the child to become lunatick. Bacon.
 Some more subtle corporeal element, may so equally bear against the parts of a little vaporous moisture, as to form it into round drops. More's Antidote against Atheism.
 The food which is most vaporous and perishable, is the most easily digested.
 A little tube, jetting out from the extremity of an artery, may carry off these vaporous steams of the blood. Cheyne.
VAPOUR. n. f. [vapour, Fr. vapor, Latin.]
 1. Any thing exhalable; any thing that mingles with the air.
 Vapour, and mist, and exhalation hot.
 When first the fun too pow'ful beams displays,
 It draws up vapours which obscure its rays: Milton.

VAR

- But ev'n those clouds at last adorn its way, Reflect new glories, and augment the day. Pope.
 2. Wind; flatulence.
 In the Theffalian witches, and the meetings of witches that have been recorded, great wonders they tell, of carrying in the air, transforming themselves into other bodies. These fables are the effects of imagination: for ointments, if laid on any thing thick, by stopping of the pores, shut in the vapours, and send them to the head extremely. Bacon.
 3. Fume; steam.
 The morning is the best, because the imagination is not clouded by the vapours of meat. Dryden.
 In distilling hot spirits, if the head of the still be taken off, the vapour which ascends out of the still will take fire at the flame of a candle, and the flame will run along the vapour from the candle to the still. Newton's Optics.
 For the imposthume, the vapour of vinegar, and any thing which creates a cough, are proper. Arbutnot on Diet.
 4. Mental fume; vain imagination; fancy unreal.
 If his sorrow bring forth amendment, he hath the grace of hope, though it be clouded over with a melancholy vapour, that it be not discernible even to himself. Hammond.
 5. [In the plural.] Diseases caused by flatulence, or by diseased nerves; hypochondriacal maladies; melancholy; spleen.
 To this we must ascribe the spleen, so frequent in studious men, as well as the vapours to which the other sex are so often subject. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 115.
 To VAPOUR. v. n. [vaporo, Latin.]
 1. To pass in a vapour, or fume; to emit fumes; to fly off in evaporations.
 When thou from this world wilt go,
 The whole world vapours in thy breath. Donne.
 Swift running waters vapour not so much as standing waters. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N<sup>o</sup>. 767.
 2. To bully; to brag;
 Not true, quoth he? Howe'er you vapour,
 I can what I affirm make appear. Hudibras.
 These are all the mighty powers
 You vainly boast, to cry down ours;
 And what in real value's wanting,
 Supply with vapouring and ranting. Hudibras.
 That I might not be vapour'd down by insignificant tediums, I used the name of your society to annihilate all such arguments. Glanville's Pref. to Scip.
 Be you to us but kind;
 Let Dutchmen vapour, Spaniards curse,
 No sorrow we shall find. E. Do-set's Song.
 To VAPOUR. v. a. To effuse, or scatter in fumes or vapour.
 Break off this last lamenting kiss,
 Which sucks two souls, and vapours both away. Donne.
 He'd laugh to see one throw his heart away,
 Another sighing vapour forth his soul,
 A third to melt himself in tears. B. Johnson.
 Opium loseth some of his poisonous quality, if vapoured out, and mingled with spirit of wine. Bacon.
 It must be helped by somewhat which may fix the silver, never to be restored, or vapoured away, when incorporated into such a mass of gold. Bacon.
VARIABLE. adj. [variabile, Fr. variabilis, Latin.] Changeable; mutable; inconstant.
 O swear not by th' inconstant moon,
 That monthly changes in her circled orb;
 Lest that thy love prove likewise variable. Shakespeare.
 Haply countries different,
 With variable objects, shall expel
 This something settled matter in his heart. Shakespeare.
 By the lively image of other creatures, did those ancients represent the variable passions of mortals; as by serpents were signified deceivers. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
 His heart I know how variable, and vain,
 Self-left. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi. l. 92.
VARIABLENESS. n. f. [from variable.]

 Was, from a variance, now a war become. Daniel's C. War.
 Not so as to set any one doctrine of the gospel at variance with others, which are all admirably consistent. S. rat.
 She runs, but hopes she does not run unseen:
 While a kind glance at her purser flies,
 How much at variance are her feet and eyes? Pope.

V A R

If the learned would not sometimes submit to the ignorant; the old to the weakness of the young; there would be nothing but everlasting variance in the world. Swift.

Many bleed,
By shameful variance betwixt man and man. Thomson.

VARIATION. n. f. [variatio, Lat. variation, French.]
1. Change; mutation; difference from itself.
After much variation of opinions, the prisoner was acquitted of treason, but by most voices found guilty of felony. Hayu.
The operation of agents will easily admit of intention and remission, but the effences of things are conceived not capable of any such variation. Locke.
The fame of our writers is confined to these two islands, and it is hard it should be limited in time as much as place, by the perpetual variations of our speech. Swift.
There is but one common matter, which is diversified by accidents; and the same numerical quantity, by variations of texture, may constitute successively all kinds of body. Bent.
2. Difference; change from one to another.
In some other places are more females born than males; which, upon this variation of proportion, I recommend to the curious. Grant's Bills of Mortality.
Each sea had its peculiar shells, and the same variation of soils; this tract affording such a terrestrial matter as is proper for the formation of one sort of shell-fish; that of another. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
3. Successive change.
Sir Walter Blunt,
Stain'd with the variation of each foil Betwixt that Holmedon and this seat of ours. Shakespeare.
4. [In grammar.] Change of termination of nouns.
The rules of grammar, and useful examples of the variation of words, and the peculiar form of speech, are often appointed to be repeated. Watt's Improv. of the Mind.
5. Change in natural phenomena.
The duke run a long course of calm prosperity, without any visible eclipse or wane in himself, amidst divers variations in others. Wotton's Life of Buckingham.
6. Deviation.
If we admit a variation from the state of his creation, that variation must be necessarily after an eternal duration, and therefore within the compass of time. Hale.
I may seem sometimes to have varied from his sense; but the greatest variations may be fairly deduced from him. Dryden.
7. Variation of the compass; deviation of the magnetick needle from an exact parallel with the meridian.
VARIATION. adj. [variatus, Latin.] Diseased with dilation.
There are instances of one vein only being various, which may be destroyed by tying it above and below the dilation. Sharpe.
8. TO VARIATE. v. a. [variatus, school Latin.] To diversify; to stain with different colours.
The shells are filled with a white spar, which variegates and adds to the beauty of the stone. Woodward on Fossils.
They had fountains of variegated marble in their rooms. Arch.
Ladies like variegated tulips show;
'Tis to the changes half the charms we owe:
Such happy spots the nice admirers take,
Fine by defect, and delicately weak. Pope's Epist.
VARIATION. n. f. [variatio, Latin.] Diversity of colours.
Plant your choice tulips in natural earth, somewhat impoverished with very fine sand; else they will soon lose their variations. Everlyn's Kalend.
VARIETY. n. f. [varietas, Fr. varietas, Latin.]
1. Change; succession of one thing to another; intermixture of one thing with another.
All sorts are here that all th' earth yields;
Variety without end. Milton's Par. Lost.
Variety is nothing else but a continued novelty. South.
If the sun's light consisted of but one sort of rays, there would be but one colour in the whole world, nor would it be possible to produce any new colour by reflections or refractions; and by consequence that the variety of colours depends upon the composition of light. Newton's Opticks.
2. One thing of many by which variety is made. In this sense it has a plural.
The inclosed warmth, which the earth hath in itself, stirred up by the heat of the sun, assisteth nature in the speedier procreation of those varieties, which the earth bringeth forth. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
3. Difference; dissimilitude.
There is a variety in the tempers of good men, with relation to the different impressions they receive from different objects of charity. F. Atterbury.
4. Variation; deviation; change from a former state.
It were a great vanity to reject those reasons drawn from the nature of things, or to go about to answer those reasons by suppositions of a variety in things, from what they now appear. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
VARIOUS. adj. [varius, Latin.]
1. Different; several; manifold.

V A R

VARLET. n. f. [varlet, old French, now valet.]
1. Anciently a servant or footman.
Such lords ill example do give,
Where varlets and drabs so may live. Tusser's Husbandry.
2. A scoundrel; a rascal. This word has deviated from its original meaning, as far in Latin.
I am the veriest varlet that ever chew'd. Shakespeare. Hen. IV.
Where didst thou leave these varlets? Shakespeare.
Thou, varlet, dost thy master's gains devour;
Thou milk'st his ewes, and often twice an hour. Dryden.
When the Roman legions were in a disposition to mutiny; an impudent varlet, who was a private centinel, resolv'd to try the power of his eloquence. Addison.
VARLETRY. n. f. [from varlet.] Rabble; croud; populace.
Shall they hoist me up,
And shew me to the shouting varletry
Of cent'ring Rome? Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleo.
VARNISH. n. f. [varnis, Fr. varnis, Latin.]
1. A matter laid upon wood, metal, or other bodies, to make them shine.
We'll put on those shall praise your excellence,
And set a double varnish on the fame. Shakespeare.
The fame of Cicero had not borne her age so well, if it had not been joined with some vanity? Like unto varnish, that makes ceilings not only shine, but last. Bacon.
This blue varnish that the green endears,
The sacred rust of twice ten hundred years. Pope.
2. Cover; palliation.
TO VARNISH. v. a. [varnisser, varnir, Fr. from the noun.]
1. To cover with something shining.
O vanity!
To set a pearl in steel so meanly varnished. Steele.
Clamber not you up to the casements;
Nor thrust your head into the publick street,
To gaze on christian fools with varnish'd faces. Shakespeare.
2. To cover; to conceal with something ornamental.
Specious deeds on earth, which glory excites;
Or close ambition varnish'd o'er with zeal. Milton.
His manly heart was still above
Dissembled hate, or varnish'd love. Dryden.
Men espouse the well-endow'd opinions in fashion, and then seek arguments to make good their beauty, or varnish over and cover their deformity. Locke's Works.
3. To palliate; to hide with colour of rhetoric.
To varnish all their errors, and secure
The ills they act, and all the world endure. Denham.
Cato's voice was ne'er employ'd
To clear the guilty, and to varnish crimes. Addison.
Speak the plain truth, and varnish not your crimes! Philips.
VARNISHER. n. f. [from varnish.]
1. One whose trade is to varnish.
An oil obtained of common oil, may probably be of good use to surgeons and varnishers. Boyle's Works.
2. A dissembler; an adorer.
Modest dulness lurks in thought's disguise;
Thou varnisher of fools, and cheat of all the wife. Pope.
VARY.

V A S

VARELS. n. f. [varrel, Fr.] Silver rings about the leg of a hawk, on which the owner's name is engraved. Dist.
TO VARY. v. a. [vario, Lat. varior, French.]
1. To change; to make unlike itself.
Let your ceaseless change
Vary to our great creator still new praise. Milton.
2. To change to something else.
Gods that never change their state,
Vary oft their love and hate. Waller.
We are to vary the customs, according to the time and country where the scene of action lies. Dryden.
The master's hand, which to the life can trace
The airs, the lines, and features of the face;
May, with a free and bolder stroke, express
A varied posture, or a flatt'ring dress. Sir J. Denham.
He varies ev'ry shape with ease,
And tries all forms that may Pomona please. Pope.
3. To make of different kinds.
God hath divided the genius of men according to the different affairs of the World; and varied their inclinations, according to the variety of actions to be performed. Brewster.
4. To diversify; to variegate.
God hath here
Vary'd his bounty so with new delights. Milton.
TO VARY. v. n.
1. To be changeable; to appear in different forms.
Darkling stands
The varying shore o' th' world. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleo.
So varied he, and of his tortuous train
Cur'd many a wanton wreath. Milton.
2. To be unlike each other.
Those who made laws, had their minds polished above the vulgar: and yet unaccountably the public constitutions of nations vary. Collier on Pride.
3. To alter; to become unlike itself.
He had a strange interchanging of large and unexpected pardons, with several executions; which could not be imputed to any inconsistency, but to a principle he had set unto himself, that he would vary and try both ways in turn. Bacon.
That each from other differs, first confess;
Next, that he varies from himself no less. Pope's Epist.
4. To deviate; to depart.
The crime consists in violating the law, and varying from the right rule of reason. Locke.

Paint in her breast, and vary in her face. Addison's Cato.
6. To disagree; to be at variance.
In judgment of her substance thus they vary,
And vary thus in judgment of her fest;
For some her chair up to the brain do carry,
Some sink it down into the stomach's heat. Sir J. Davies.
7. To shift colours.
Will the falcon stooping from above,
Smit with her varying plumage, spare the dove?
Admires the jay the insect's gilded wings? Pope.
VARY. n. f. [from the verb.] Change; alteration. Not in use.
Such smiling rogues as these sooth every passion;
Renege, affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks,
With every gale and vary of their masters. Shakespeare.
VASCULAR. adj. [from vasculum, Latin.]
1. Consisting of vessels; full of vessels.
Nutrition of the solids is performed by the circulating liquid in the smallest vascular solids. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
VASCULIFEROUS. adj. [vasculum and fero, Latin.] Such plants as have, besides the common calyx, a peculiar vessel to contain the seed, sometimes divided into cells; and these have always a monopetalous flower, either uniform or difform. Quincy.
VASE. n. f. [vas, Fr. vasa, Latin.] A vessel; generally a vessel rather for show than use.
The toilet stands unveil'd,
Each silver vase in mystick order laid. Pope.
VASSAL. n. f. [vassal, Fr. vassallo, Italian.]
1. One who holds by the will of a superior lord.
Every petty prince, vassal to the emperor, can coin what money he pleareth. Swift's Short View of Ireland.
The vassals are invited to bring in their complaints to the viceroys, who imprison and chastise their masters. Addison.
2. A subject; a dependant.
She cannot content the lord with performance of his discipline, that hath at her side a vassal, whom Satan hath made his vicegerent, to cross whatsoever the faithful should do. Hosker, b. viii. §. 34.
Such as they thought fit for labour, they received as vassals; but imputed not the benefit of laws, but every one made his will a law unto his own vassal. Spenser's State of Ireland.
The common people were free subjects to the king, not slaves and vassals to their pretended lords. Sir J. Davies.
The mind hath not reason to remember, that passions ought to be her vassals, not her masters. Raleigh.

V A T

Vassals of his anger, when the scourge
Inexorable, and the torturing hour
Calls us to penance. Milton.
As all his vassals eagerly desir'd;
With mind averse, he rather underwent
His people's will, than gave his own consent. Dryden.
He subjugated a king, and called him his vassal. Baker.
3. A servant; one who acts by the will of another.
I am his fortune's vassal, and I send him
The greatness he has got. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleop.
4. A slave; a low wretch.
Thou swear'st thy Gods in vain
O vassal! miscreant! Shakespeare. K. Lear.
VASSALLAGE. n. f. [vasselage, Fr. from vassal.] The state of a vassal; tenure at will; servitude; slavery; dependance.
He renounc'd the vassallage
Of Rome again. Fairy Queen.
All my pow'r do their bestowing lose,
Like vassallage at unawares encountering
The eye of majesty. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.
They would have brought the Achaeans from the condition of followers and dependents unto meer vassallage. Raleigh.
Let us not then pursue,
By force impossible, by leave obtain'd
Unacceptable, though in heav'n our state
Of splendid vassallage. Milton's Par. Lost.
Curs'd vassallage,
First idoliz'd till love's hot fire be o'er;
Then slaves to those who courted us before. Dryden.
VAST. adj. [vastus, Fr. vastus, Latin.]
1. Large; great.
What the parliament meant to attempt with those vast numbers of men, every day levied. Clarendon, book i.
That is an ample and capacious mind, which takes in vast and sublime ideas without pain. Watts.
His open stores,
Though vast, were little to his ampler heart. Thomson.
2. Viciously great; enormously extensive or capacious.
The vicious language is vast, and gaping, swelling, and irregular; when it contends to be high, full of rock, mountain, and pointedness. B. Johnson.
They view'd the vast unmeasurable abyss. Milton.
Others with vast Typhoean rage more fell,
Rend up rocks. Milton.
VAST. n. f. [vastum, Latin.] An empty waste.
They shook hands, as over a vast; and embrac'd, as from the ends of oppos'd winds. Shakespeare.
Through the vast of heav'n it founded. Milton.
The wat'ry vast,
Secure of storms, your royal brother past. Pope.
VASTATION. n. f. [vastatio, from vasto, Latin.] Waste; depopulation.
This wild-fire made the saddest vastations, in the many fatal outrages which these eager contentious occasion. Dexar of Piety.
VASTIDITY. n. f. [vastitas, Lat. from vastus.] Wideness; immensity. A barbarous word.
Perpetual durance,
Through all the world's vastidity. Shakespeare.
VASTLY. adv. [from vast.] Greatly; to a great degree.
Holland's resolving upon its own defence, without our share in the war, would leave us to enjoy the trade of the world, and thereby grow vastly both in strength and treasures. Temple.
It is vastly the concern of government, and of themselves too, whether they be morally good or bad. South.
VASTNESS. n. f. [from vast.] Immensity; enormous greatness.
Behemoth, biggest born of earth, upheav'd
His vastness. Milton's Par. Lost.
She by the rocks compell'd to stay behind,
Is by the vastness of her bulk confin'd. Waller.
When I compare this little performance with the vastness of my subject, methinks I have brought but a cockle-shell of water from the ocean. Clarendon.
Anioto observed not moderation in the vastness of his draught. Dryden.
Hence we may discover the cause of the vastness of the ocean. Bentley's Sermons.
VASTY. adj. [from vast.] Large; enormously great.
I can call spirits from the vasty deep. Shakespeare.
VAT. n. f. [vat, Dutch, fat, Saxon.] A vessel in which liquors are kept in the immature state.

V A U L T. n. f. [vaulte, Fr. voluta, Ital. voluta, low Latin.]
1. A continued arch.
O, you are men of stone:
Had I your tongues and eyes, I'd use them so That heaven's vault should crack. Shakefp. K. Lear.
The word signifies an orb or sphere. And this shews us both the form of the Mosaic abys, which was included within this vault: and the form of the habitable earth, which was the outward surface of this vault, or the cover of the abys. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
2. A cellar.
Creep into the kill-hole.
He will seek there; neither press, well, vault, but he hath an abstract for the remembrance of. Shakefp.
The wine of life is drawn, and the meer lees
Is left this vault to brag of. Shakefp.
Whether your fruitful fancy lies
To banish rats that haunt our vault. Swift.
3. A cave; a cavern.
The silent vaults of death, unknown to light,
And hell itself, lie naked to his sight. Sandys.
4. A repository for the dead.
Shall I not be stified in the vault,
To whose foul mouth no healthsome air breathes in. Shakefp.
To VAULT. v. a. [valliter, Fr. from the noun.]
To arch; to shape of a vault.
Hath nature given them eyes
To see this vaulted arch, and the rich cope
Of sea and land, which can distinguish 'twixt
The fiery orbs above, and the twinn'd stones
Upon th' humbl'd beach? Shakefp. Cymbeline.
2. To cover with an arch.
Over-head the dismal hiss
Of fiery darts in flaming volleys flew;
And flying vaulted either host with fire. Milton.
To VAULT. v. n. [valligare, Fr. valligare, Italian.]
1. To leap; to jump.
Vaulting ambition, which o'erleaps itself,
And falls on th' other. Shakefp. Macbeth.
The pretty vaulting sea refus'd to drown me,
Knowing that thou would'st have me drown'd on shore. Sh.
He is vaulting variable ramps
In your despite, upon your purse. Shakefp.
If I could win a lady by vaulting into my saddle with my armour on, I should quickly leap into a wife. Shakefp.
Leaning on his lance, he vaulted on a tree. Dryden.
If a man shou'd leap a garret, or vault down the monument, wou'd he leave the memory of a hero behind him? Colker on Duelling.
Lucan vaulted upon Pegasus with all the heat and intrepidity of youth. Addison.
2. To play the tumbler, or posture-master.
VAULT. n. f. [from the verb.] A leap; a jump.
VAULTAGE. n. f. [from vault.] Arched cellar. Not in use.
He'll call you to foot an answer for it,
That caves and wombly vaultages of France
Shall chide your trespass, and return your mock
In second accent to his ordinance. Shakefp. Hen. V.
VAULTED. adj. [from vault.] Arched; concave.
Restore the lock! she cries, and all around Rejoice the lock! the vaulted roofs rebound. Pope.
VAULTER. n. f. [from vault.] A leaper; a jumper; a tumbler.
VAULTY. adj. [from vault.] Arched; concave. A bad word.
I will kiss thy detestable bones,
And put my eye-balls in thy vaulty brows,
And ring these fingers with thy household worms. Shakefp.
I'll say that is not the lark, whose notes do beat
The vaulty heav'ns so high above our heads. Shakefp.
VAUNMURE. n. f. [avant mur, Fr.] A false wall; a work raised before the main wall.
With another engine named the warwolfe, he pierced with one stone, and cut, as even as a thread, two vaunmures.
This warlike captain, daily attempting the vaunmures, in the end by force obtained the fame; and so possessed of the place, desperately kept it till greater help came running in, who, with wonderful expedition, clapt up a strong covering betwixt the wall and the vaunmure. Knoller's Hist. of the Turks.
To VAUNT. v. a. [vanter, Fr.] To boast; to display with ostentation.
Not that great champion
Whom famous poets verse so much doth vaunt;
And hath for twelve huge labours high extoll'd,
So many furies and sharp hits did haunt. Fairy Queen.

U D D

Not any damsel which her vaunteth most,
In skillful knitting of soft filken twine.
My vanquisher spoil'd of his vaunted spoil. Spenser.
To VAUNT. v. n.
1. To play the braggart; to talk with ostentation; to make vain show; to boast.
You say, you are a better soldier;
Let it appear so; make your vaunting true. Shakefp.
The illusions of magick were put down, and their vaunting in wisdom reproved with disgrace. Wisdom xvii. 7.
So spake th' apostate angel, though in pain;
Vaunting aloud, but rack'd with deep despair.
Pride which prompts a man to vaunt and overvalue what he is, does incline him to disvalue what he has. Gov. of Tongue.
2. I scarcely know in what sense Dryden has used this word, unless it be miswritten for vaunts.
'Tis he: I feel him now in ev'ry part;
Like a new world he vaunts about my heart. Dryden.
VAUNT. n. f. [from the verb.] Brag; boast; vain ostentation.
Sir John Perrot bent his course not to that point, but rather quite contrary, in scorn, and in vain vaunt of his own counsels. Spenser.
Him I seduc'd with other promises and other vaunts. Milton.
Such vaunts who can with patience read,
Who thus describes his hero when he's dead?
In heat of action slain, he scorns to fall,
But still maintains the war, and fights at all. Granville.
VAUNT. n. f. [from vaunt, Fr.] The first part. Not used.
Our play
Leaps o'er the vaunt and firstlings.
VAUNTER. n. f. [vaunteur, Fr. from vaunt.] Boaster; braggart; man given to vain ostentation.
Some feign
To menage steeds, as did this vaunter; but in vain. Spenser.
Tongue-vallant hero, vaunter of thy might;
In threats the foremost, but the lag in fight. Dryden.
VAUNTEUL. adj. [from vaunt and full.] Boastful; ostentatious.
Whiles all the heavens on lower creatures smil'd,
Young Clarion, with vauntful lustihed,
After his guise did cast abroad to fare. Spenser.
VAUNTINGLY. adv. [from vaunting.] Boastfully; ostentatiously.
I heard thee say, and vauntingly thou spak'st it,
That thou wert cause of noble Glo'ster's death. Shakefp.
VA'WARD. n. f. [van and ward.] Foie part
Since we have the va'ward of the day,
My love shall hear the music of my hounds. Shakefp.
Marcius,
Their hands i' th' va'ward are the Antiates
Of their best trust. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
He desired nothing more than to have confirmed his authority in the minds of the vulgar, by the present and ready attendance of the va'ward. Knoller's Hist. of the Turks.
UBERTY. n. f. [ubertas, Latin.] Abundance; fruitfulness.
UBICATION. n. f. [from ubi, Latin.] Local relation; where-ness. A scholastic term.
Relations, ubications, duration, the vulgar philosophy admits to be something; and yet to enquire in what place they are, were gross. Glennville.
UBIQUITARY. adj. [from ubique, Latin.] Existing every where.
For wealth and an ubiquitous commerce, none can exceed her. Hew.
UBIQUITARY. n. f. [from ubique, Latin.] One that exists every where.
How far wide is Aquinas, which faith, by the same reason that an angel might be in two places, he might be in as many as you will? See now, either Xavier is every where, or else the carcass of a friar is more subtle than the nature of an angel. To conclude, either Aquinas is false, or the papists ubiquitous. Hall.
UBIQUITY. n. f. [from ubique, Latin.] Omnipresence; existence at the same time in all places.
In the one there is attributed to God death, whereof divine nature is not capable; in the other ubiquity unto man, which human nature admitteth not. Hooker.
Pern the light,
A solemn night,
As you should meet,
In any street,
In that ubiquity.
Could they think that to be infinite and immense, the ubiquity of which they could thrust into a corner of their closet. South.
UDDER. n. f. [uber, Saxon; uder, Dutch. uber, Lat.] The breast or dugs of a cow, or other large animal.
A hounds, with udders all drawn dry,
Lay couching head on ground. Shakefp.
Sithence the cow
Produc'd an ampler store of milk; the she-goat,
Not without pain, dragg'd her diffident udder. Prior.
UDDERED. adj. [from udder.] Furnished with udders.
Marian soft could stroke the udder'd cow. Gay.
VEAL.

VEG

VEAL. n. f. [veal, a calf, veeler, vefter, to bring forth a calf, old French; vitellus, Latin.] The flesh of a calf killed for the table.
Would'st thou with mighty beef augment thy meal?
Seek Leadenhall; St. James's sends thee veal. Gay.
Seek Leadenhall; St. James's sends thee veal. Gay.
VECTION. n. f. [vectio, vectio, Latin.] The act of carrying, or being carried.
VECTATION. n. f. [vectio, Latin.] A species of vegetation seldom used amongst the antients. Arbuthnot.
VECTURE. [vectura, Latin.] Carriage.
Three things one nation selleth unto another; the commodity as nature yieldeth it, the manufacture and the vecture or carriage. Bacon's Essays.
To VEER. v. n. [virer, French.] To turn about.
If a wild uncertainty prevail,
And turn your veering heart with ev'ry gale;
You lose the fruit of all your former care,
For the sad prospect of a just despair.
Nigh rivers mouth, where wind
Veers oft, as oft he fleers and shifts her fail. Milton.
I have no taste of the noisy praise
Of giddy crowds, as changeable as winds;
Servants to change, and blowing with the tide
Of swoll'n success; but veering with its ebb.
A-head the master pilot fleers
And as he leads, the following navy veers. Dryden.
It is a double misfortune to a nation given to change, when they have a sovereign that is prone to fall in with all the turns and veerings of the people. Addison's Freeholder.
The wind veered about to north-west. Derham.
To VEER. v. a.
1. To let out.
As it is a great point of art, when our matter requires it, to enlarge and veer out all fail; so to take it in and contract it, is of no less praise when the argument doth ask it. B. Japh.
2. To turn; to change.
I see the haven nigh at hand,
To which I mean my weary course to bend;
Veer the main-sheet, and bear up with the land. Spenser.
Sailing farther, it veers its lilly to the west, and regardeth that quarter, wherein the land is nearer or greater. Brown.
VEGETABILITY. n. f. [from vegetable.] Vegetable nature; the quality of growth without sensation.
The coagulating spirits of salts, and lapidifical juice of the sea, entering the parts of the plant, overcomes its vegetability, and converts it into a lapidaceous substance. Broome.
VEGETABLE. n. f. [vegetabilis, school Lat. vegetabile, Fr.] Any thing that has growth without sensation, as plants.
Vegetables are organized bodies consisting of various parts, containing vessels furnished with different juices; and taking in their nourishment from without, usually by means of a root, by which they are fixed to the earth, or to some other body, as in the generality of plants; sometimes by means of pores distributed over the whole surface, as in sub-marine plants. Hill's Materia Medica.
Let brutes and vegetables that cannot drink,
So far as drought and nature urges, think. Waller.
In vegetables it is the shape, and in bodies, not propagated by seed, it is the colour we most fix on. Locke.
Other animated substances are called vegetables, which have within themselves the principle of another sort of life and growth, and of various productions of leaves, flowers and fruit, such as we see in plants, herbs, trees. Watts.
VEGETABLE. adj. [vegetabilis, Latin.]
1. Belonging to a plant.
The vegetable world, each plant and tree,
From the fair cedar on the craggy brow,
To creeping moss. Prior.
Both mechanisms are equally curious, from one uniform juice to extract all the variety of vegetable juices; or from such variety of food to make a fluid very near uniform to the blood of an animal. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
The well shower'd earth
Is deep enrich'd with vegetable life. Thomson.
2. Having the nature of plants.
Amidst them stood the tree of life,
High eminent, blooming ambrosial fruit
Of vegetable gold. Milton's Par. Lost.
That vegetative terrestrial hath been ever the standing fund, out of which is derived the matter of all animal and vegetable bodies. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
To VEGETATE. v. n. [vegeto, Latin.] To grow as plants; to shoot out; to grow without sensation.
Rain-water may be endued with some vegetating or prolific virtue, derived from some saline or oleose particles. Ray.
As long as the seeds remained lodged in a natural soil, they would soon vegetate, and send forth a new set of trees. Woodward.
See dying vegetables life sustain;
See life dissolving vegetate again. Pope's Essay on Man.
VEGETATION. n. f. [from vegeto, Latin.]
1. The power of producing the growth of plants.
The exterior surface consisted of a terrestrial matter proper for the nourishment of plants, being little entangled with mere mineral matter, that was unfit for vegetation. Woodward.

VEH

The fun, deep-darting to the dark retreat
Of vegetation, sets the steaming power
At large. Thomson's Spring.
Love warbles through the vocal groves, Anonymous.
And vegetation paints the plain.
2. The power of growth without sensation.
Plants, though beneath the excellency of creatures endued with sense, yet exceed them in the faculty of vegetation and of fertility.
These pulsations I attribute to a plactic nature, or vital principle, as the vegetation of plants must also be. Ray.
VEGETATIVE. adj. [vegetativus, Fr. from vegetare.]
1. Having the quality of growing without life.
Creatures vegetative and growing, have their seeds in themselves. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
2. Having the power to produce growth in plants.
Homer makes deities of the vegetative faculties, and virtues of the field. Broome's Notes on Odyss.
VEGETATIVENESS. n. f. [from vegetative.] The quality of producing growth.
VEGETE. adj. [vegetus, Latin.] Vigorous; active; spritely.
The soul was vegete, quick and lively; full of the youthfulness and spriteliness of youth. South.
The faculties in age must be less vegete and nimble than in youth. Wallis.
VEGETIVE. adj. [from vegeto, Latin.] Vegetable; having the nature of plants.
Nor rent off, but cut off ripe bean with a knife,
For hindering stalks of his vegetive life. Tuff. Husbandry.
VEGETIVE. n. f. [from the adjective.] A vegetable.
Hence vegetives receive their fragrant birth,
And clothe the naked bosom of the earth. Sandys.
The tree still panted in th' unfinished part,
Not wholly vegetive; and heav'd her heart. Dryden.
VEHEMENCE. n. f. [vehementia, Latin.]
VEHEMENCY. n. f. [vehementia, Latin.]
1. Violence; force.
Universal hubbub wild,
Of stunning sounds and voices all confus'd,
Assaults his ear with loudest vehement. Milton.
2. Ardour; mental violence; terrour.
Think ye are men; deem it not impossible for you to err: sift impartially your own hearts, whether it be force of reason, or vehemency of affection, which hath bred, and still doth feed these opinions in you. Hooker's Pref.
The best persuasions
Fail not to use; and with what vehemency
Th' occasion shall instruct you. Shakefp. Hen. VIII.
Would it apply well to the vehemency of your affection, that I should win what you would enjoy?
The extremity of the condition produced some earnestness and vehemency of expression more than ordinary. Clarendon.
This pure cause would kindle my rap'd spirits
To such a flame of sacred vehement,
That dumb things wou'd be mov'd to sympathize. Milton.
He hurries on his action with variety of events, and ends it in less compass than two months. This vehement of his is most suitable to my temper. Dryden.
Marcus is over-warm; his fond complaints
Have so much earnestness and passion in them,
I hear him with a secret kind of horror,
And tremble at his vehement of temper. Addison's Cato.
VEHEMENT. adj. [vehement, Fr. vehemens, Latin.]
1. Violent; forcible.
A strong imagination hath more force upon light and subtle motions, than upon motions vehement or ponderous. Bacon.
Gold will endure a vehement fire for a long time, without any change. Grew.
2. Ardent; eager; fervent.
By their vehement instigation,
In this just suit come I to move your grace. Shakefp.
I find
In all things else delight indeed; but such,
As us'd or not, works in the mind no change,
Nor vehement desire. Milton's Par. Lost.
VEHEMENTLY. adv. [from vehement.]
1. Forcibly.
2. Pathetically; urgently.
The christian religion inculcates kindness more vehemently, and forbids malice and hatred more strictly than any religion did before. Tillotson.
VEHICLE. n. f. [vehiculum, Latin.]
1. That in which any thing is carried.
Evil spirits might very properly appear in vehicles of flame, to terrify and surprize. Addison's Guardian.
2. That part of a medicine which serves to make the principal ingredient potable.
That the meat descends by one passage; the drink, or moistening vehicle by another, is a popular tenet. Brown.
3. That by means of which any thing is conveyed.

VEI

The gaiety of a diverting word, serves as a vehicle to convey the force and meaning of a thing. L'Estrange.
To VEIL, v. n. [velo, Lat. See VAIL.]
1. To cover with a veil, or any thing which conceals the face.

Her face was veil'd; yet to my fancied sight,
Love, sweetness, goodness in her person shin'd. Milton.
It became the Jewish fashion when they went to pray, to veil their heads and faces. Boyle.

2. To cover; to invest.
I decry,
From yonder blazing cloud that veils the hill,
One of the heav'nly host. Milton.

3. To hide; to conceal.
Of darkness visible so much be lent,
As half to shew, half veil the deep intent. Pope's Dunciad.

VEIL, n. f. [velum, Latin.]
1. A cover to conceal the face.

To feed his fiery lustful eye,
He snatch'd the veil that hung her face before. Fairy Queen.
The Paphian queen from that fierce battle borne,
With gored hand, and veil so rudely torn,
Like terror did among the immortals breed. Waller.

The famous painter could allow no place
For private sorrow in a prince's face:
Yet, that his piece might not exceed belief,
He cast a veil upon supposed grief. Waller.

As veils transparent cover, but not hide,
Such metaphors appear when right apply'd.
When through the phrase we plainly see the sense,
Truth with such obvious meanings will dispense. Granville.

She accepts the hero, and the dame
Wraps in her veil, and frees from sense of shame. Pope.

2. A cover; a disguise.
I will pluck the borrow'd veil of modesty from the so seeming Mrs. Page; divulge Page himself for a secure and wifful Acton. Shakspeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.

Knock on my heart; for thou hast skill to find
If it sound solid, or be fill'd with wind;
And thro' the veil of words thou view'st the naked mind. Dry.

The ill-natured man exposes those failings in human nature, which the other would cast a veil over. Addison.

VEIN, n. f. [veine, Fr. vena, Latin.]
The veins are only a continuation of the extreme capillary arteries reflected back again towards the heart, and uniting their channels as they approach it, till at last they all form three large veins; the cava descendens, which brings the blood back from all the parts above the heart; the cava ascendens, which brings the blood from all the parts below the heart; and the porta, which carries the blood to the liver. The coats of the veins are the same with those of the arteries, only the muscular coat is as thin in all the veins, as it is in the capillary arteries; the pressure of the blood against the sides of the veins being less than that against the sides of the arteries. In the veins there is no pulse, because the blood is thrown into them with a continued stream, and because it moves from a narrow channel to a wider. The capillary veins unite with one another, as the capillary arteries. In all the veins perpendicular to the horizon, excepting those of the uterus and of the porta, are small membranes or valves; like so many half thimbles stuck to the side of the veins, with their mouths towards the heart. In the motion of the blood towards the heart, they are pressed close to the side of the veins; but if blood should fall back, it must fill the valves; and they being distended, stop up the channel, so that no blood can repass them. Quincy.

When I did first impart my love to you,
I freely told you all the wealth I had Ran in my veins; I was a gentleman. Shakspeare.

Horror chill
Ran through his veins, and all his joints relax'd. Milton.

2. Hollow; cavity.
Found where casual fire
Had wasted woods, on mountain, or in vale,
Down to the veins of earth. Milton's Par. Lost.

Let the glass of the prism be free from veins, and their sides be accurately plane, and well polished, without those numberless waves or curls, which usually arise from sand-holes. Newton's Opticks.

3. Course of metal in the mine.
There is a vein for the silver. Job xxviii. 1.
Part hidden veins digg'd up, nor hath this earth
Entrails unlike, of mineral and stone. Milton.

It is in men as in soils, where sometimes there is a vein of gold which the owner knows not of. Swift's Thoughts.

4. Tendency or turn of the mind or genius.
We ought to attempt no more than what is in the compass of our genius, and according to our vein. Dryden.

5. Favourable moment; time when any inclination is predominant.
Artizans have not only their growths and perfections, but likewise their veins and times. Watson's Architecture.

VEL

6. Humour; temper.
I put your grace in mind
Of what you promis'd me.
I am not in the giving vein to-day. Shakspeare. Rich. III.

Certainly he that hath a satirical vein, as he maketh others afraid of his wit, so he had need to be afraid of others. Bacon.

They among themselves in pleasant vein
Stood scoffing. Milton's Par. Lost.
Speak't thou in earnest or in jesting vein? Dryden.

7. Continued disposition.
The carrier struck the usurer upon the right vein. L'Estrange.

8. Current; continued production.
The vein I have had of running into speculations of this kind, upon a greater scene of trade, have cost me this present service. Temple.

9. Strain; quality.
He can open a vein of true and noble thinking. Swift.

Now somewhat sings, whose endless founation
Among the shepherds may aye remain;
Whether thee list, thy loved lass advance,
Or honour Pan with higher hymns of praise. Spenfer.

10. Streak; variegation, as the veins of the marble VEINED. adj. [veineux, Fr. from vein.]
VEINY. adj. [veineux, Fr. from vein.]

1. Full of veins.
2. Streaked; variegated.
The root of an old white thorn will make very fine boxes and combs, and many of them are very finely veined. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Effulgent, hence the veiny marble shines. Thomson.
VELLITY, n. f. [velletis, Fr. velletis, from velle, Latin.]
VELLITY is the school-term used to signify the lowest degree of desire. Locke.

The wishing of a thing is not properly the willing of it;
but it is that which is called by the schools an imperfect vellity, and imports no more than an idle, un-operative complacency in, and desire of the end, without any consideration of the means. Smith.

To VELLICATE, v. a. [vellico, Latin.] To twitch; to pluck; to act by stimulation.
Those smells are all strong, and do pull and vellicate the sense. Bacon.

Convulsions arising from something vellicating a nerve in its extremity, are not very dangerous. Arundel.

VELLICATION, n. f. [vellicatio, Lat.] Twitching; stimulation.
All purgers have a kind of twitching and vellication, besides the griping, which cometh of wind. Bacon.

There must be a particular motion and vellication impart upon the nerves, else the sensation of heat will not be produced. Watson's Improvement of the Mind.

VELLUM, n. f. [velin, Fr. velamen, Latin; rather vitulinum, low Latin.] The skin of a calf dressed for the writer.

The skull was very thin, yielding to the least pressure of my finger, as a piece of vellum. Wifeman.

VELOCTY, n. f. [velocité, Fr. velocitas, Latin.] Speed; swif-tness; quick motion.

Had the velocities of the several planets been greater or less than they are now, at the same distances from the sun; or had their distances from the sun, or the quantity of the sun's matter, and consequently his attractive power, been greater or less than they are now, with the same velocities; they would not have revolved in concentric circles, but moved in hyperbola's or parabola's, or in ellipses very eccentric. Bentley's Sermon.

VELVET, n. f. [veluto, Ital. villos, Latin. velours, Fr.] Silk with a short fur or pile upon it.

Clad in white velvet all their troop they led,
With each an oaken chaplet on his head. Dryden.

The different ranging the superficial parts of bodies, as of velvet, watered silk, we think probably is nothing but the different refraction of their insensible parts. Locke.

VELVET, adj.
1. Made of velvet.
This was moulded on a porringer,
A velvet dish. Shakspeare. Taming of the Shrew.

2. Soft; delicate.
Through the velvet leaves the wind,
All unseen, 'gan passage find. Shakspeare.

Poor deer, quoth he, thou mak'st a testament
As worldlings do, giving thy sum of more
To that which had too much. Then being alone Left and abandon'd of his velvet friends;
'Tis right, quoth he; thus misery doth part
The flux of company. Shakspeare.

To VELVET, v. n. To paint velvet.
Verdure, ground with a weak gum arabic water, is the palest green that is, but good to velvet upon black in any drapery. Pacham on Drawing.

VELVURE, n. f. [velours, Fr.] Velvet. An old word.
His horse with one girth fix times pieced, and a woman's crupper of velours, pieced with packthread. Shakspeare.

VENAL.

VEN

VENAL, adj. [vena, Fr. venalis, Latin.]

1. Mercenary; prostitute.

This verb be thine, my friend, nor thou refuse
This, from no venal or ungrateful mule. Pope.

2. [from vein.] Contained in the veins. A technical word.

It is unreasonable to affirm, that the cool venal blood should be heated so high in the interval of two pulses. Ray.

VENALITY, n. f. [venalité, Fr. from venal.] Mercenariness;
prostitution.

VENATICK, adj. [venaticus, Latin.] Used in hunting.

VENATION, n. f. [venatio, Latin.] The act or practice of hunting.

The manner of their venation we shall find to be other-ways than by sawing away of trees. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To VEND, v. a. [vendre, Fr. vendo, Lat.] To sell; to offer to sale.

He had a great parcel of glasses packed up, which not having the occasion he expected to vend, and make use of, lay by him. Boyle.

VENDER, n. f. [from vend.] One to whom any thing is sold.

If a vicar sows his globe, or if he sells his corn, and the vendeur cuts it, he must pay the fines to the parson. Ayliffe.

VENDER, n. f. [vendeur, Fr. from vend.] A seller.

Where the consumption of commodity is, the venders seat themselves. Graunt.

Those make the most noise who have the least to sell, which is very observable in the venders of card-matches. Addison.

VENDIBLE, adj. [vendibilis, Latin.] Saleable; marketable.

Silence only is commendable

In a neat tongue dried, and a maid not vendible. Shakspeare.
This so profitable and vendible a merchandise, riseth not to a proportionable enhancement with other less beneficial commodities. Carew.

The ignorant mine-man, aiming only at the obtaining a quantity of such a metal as may be vendible under such a de-terminate name, has neither the design nor skill to make nice separations of the heterogeneous bodies. Boyle.

VENDIBLNESS, n. f. [from vendible.] The state of being saleable.

VENDICATION, n. f. [venditatio, from vendit, Latin.] Boastful display.

Some, by a cunning protestation against all readings, and vendication of their own naturals, think to divert the sagacity of their readers from themselves, and cool the scent of their own fox-like thefts; when yet they are so rank as a man may find whole pages together usurped from one author. B. Johnson.

VENDITION, n. f. [venditio, Fr. vendition, Latin.] Sale; the act of selling.

To VENER, v. a. [among cabinet-makers.] To make a kind of marquetry or inlaid work, whereby several thin slices of fine woods of different sorts are fastened or glued on a ground of some common wood. Bailey.

VENERICE, n. f. [veneficium, Latin.] The practice of poisoning.

VENERICIAL, adj. [from veneficium, Latin.] Acting by poison;
bewitching.

The magical virtues of misletoe, and conceived efficacy unto veneficial intentions, seemeth a Pagan relique derived from the ancient Druids. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

VENERICIOUSLY, adv. [from veneficium, Latin.] By poison or witchcraft.
Left witches should draw or prick their names therein, and veneficiously mischief their persons, they broke the shell. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

VENEMOUS, adj. [from venin, Fr.] Poisonous. Commonly, though not better, venomous.

The barbarians saw the venemous beast hang on his hand. Acts xxviii. 4.

To VENENATE, v. a. [veneno, Latin.] To poison; to infect with poison.
These miasms entering the body, are not so energetic, as to venenate the entire mass of blood in an instant. Harvey.

By giving this in fevers after calcination, whereby the venenate parts are carried off. Woodward on Fevers.

VENENATION, n. f. [from venenate.] Poison; venom.
This venenation shoots from the eye; and this way a bati-stik may impossibly. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

VENESE, adj. [veneneus, Fr. from venenum, Latin.] Poisonous; venomous.

Dry air opens the surface of the earth to disincarcerate venese bodies, or to attract or evacuate them hence. Harvey.

Malphigi, in his treatise of galls, under which he comprehends all preternatural and morbose tumours of plants, demonstrates that all such tumours, where any insects are found, are raised up by some venense liquor, which, together with their eggs, such insects shed upon the leaves. Ray.

VENERABLE, adj. [venerabilis, Fr. venerabilis, Latin.] To be regarded with awe; to be treated with reverence.
As by the ministry of saints, it pleased God there to shew some rare effect of his power; or in regard of death, which those saints have suffered for the testimony of Jesus Christ, did thereby make the places where they died venerable. Hooker.

To make the passage easy, safe, and plain,
That leads us to this venerable wall. Fairfax.

VEN

Ye lamps of heav'n! he said, and lifted high
His hands, now free. Thou venerable sky!
Inviolable pow'rs, ador'd with dread,
Be all of you adur'd. Dryden's Æn. II.

VENERABLY, adj. [from venerable.] In a manner that excites reverence.

The Palatine, proud Rome's imperial seat,
An awful pile! stands venerably great.
Thither the kingdoms and the nations come. Addison.

To VENERATE, v. a. [venerar, Fr. veneror, Latin.] To reverence; to treat with veneration; to regard with awe.

When baseness is exalted, do not bate
The place its honour for the person's sake:
The shrine is that which thou dost venerate,
And not the beast that bears it on its back. Herbert.

The lords and ladies here approaching paid
Their homage, with a low obeisance made;
And seem'd to venerate the sacred shade. Dryden.

A good clergyman must love and venerate the gospel that he teaches, and prefer it to all other learning. Clarissa.

VENERATION, n. f. [veneration, Fr. veneratio, Lat.] Reverend regard; awful respect.

Theology is the comprehension of all other knowledge, directed to its true end, i. e. the honour and veneration of the creator, and the happiness of mankind. Locke.

We find a secret awe and veneration for one who moves above us in a regular and illustrious course of virtue. Addison.

VENERATOR, n. f. [from venerare.] Reverencer.

If the state of things, as they now appear, involve a re-pugnancy to an eternal existence, the arguments must be conclusive to those great priests and venerators of nature. Hale.

VENEREAL, adj. [venereus, Latin.]

1. Relating to love.
These are no venereal signs;
Vengeance is in my heart, death in my hand. Shakspeare.

Then twol'n with pride, into the snare I fell,
Of fair fallacious looks, venereal trains,
Softend with pleasure and voluptuous life. Milton.

2. Consisting of copper, called venus by chemists.
Blue vitriol, how venereal and unpolished soever, rubbed upon the whetted blade of a knife, will not impart its latent colour. Boyle.

VENEROUS, adj. [from venery.] Libidinous; lustful.

The male is lesser than the female, and very venereus, Derb.
VENERY, n. f. [venerie, from venere, Fr.]

1. The sport of hunting.
To the woods she goes to serve her turn,
And seek her spouse, that from her still does fly,
And follows other game and venery. Fairy Queen.

Describing beasts of venery and fishes, he hath sparingly inserted the vulgar conditions thereof. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

The Norman demolished many churches and chapels in New Forest, to make it fitter for his pleasure and venery. Howell.

2. [From Venus.] The pleasures of the bed.
Contentment, without the pleasure of lawful venery, is continence; of unlawful, chastity. Grew's Cosmol.

VENERY, n. f. A bout; a turn.
I bruis'd my shin with playing at sword and dagger, three venerys for a dish of stewed prunes. Shakspeare.

VENERECTION, n. f. [vena and ectis, Latin.] Blood-letting;
the act of opening a vein; phlebotomy.

If the inflammation be sudden, after evacuation by lenient purgatives, or a clyster and venesection, have recourse to anodynes. Wifeman's Surgery.

To VENGE, v. a. [venge, French.] To avenge; to punish.
You are above,
You justices, that these our nether crimes,
So speedily can venge. Shakspeare.

VENGEABLE, adj. [from venge.] Revengeful; malicious.
A thrillant dart he threw,
Headed with ire, and vengeable despite. Spenfer.

VENGEANCE, n. f. [vengeance, French.]
1. Punishment; penal retribution; avengement.

The right conceit which they had, that to perjury vengeance is due, was not without good effect as touching their lives, who feared the wilful violation of oaths. Hooker.

All the stor'd vengeances of heaven fall
On her ingrateful top!
The souls of all that I had murder'd
Came to my tent, and every one did threat
To-morrow's vengeance on the head of Richard. Shakspeare.

Let me see thy vengeance on them. Jer. xi. 20.
Resolutions of future reforming do not always satisfy thy justice, nor prevent thy vengeance for former miscarriages. K. Charles.

Jove's and Latona's son his wrath express'd,
In vengeance of his violated priest. Dryden.
The chorus interceded with heaven for the innocent, and implored its vengeance on the criminal. Addison's Spectator.

VEN

2. It is used in familiar language. To do with a vengeance, is to do with vehemence; what a vengeance, emphatically what?
Till the day appear, of respiration to the just,
And vengeance to the wicked. Milton.
When the same king adventured to murmur, the pope could threaten to teach him his duty with a vengeance. Raleigh.
Afnodous the fifty fume
Drove, though enamour'd, from the spouse
Of Tobit's son, and with a vengeance sent From Medea post to Egypt, there fast bound. Milton.
But what a vengeance makes thee fly
From me too, as thine enemy? Hudibras.
VENGEFUL. adj. [from vengeance and full.] Vindictive; revengeful; retributive.
Doubt not but God
Hath wifelier arm'd his vengeful ire. Milton.
Dissembling for her sake his rising cares,
And with wife silence pond'ring vengeful wars. Prior.
VENIABLE. adj. [from venia, Fr. from venia, Latin.]
VENIAL. adj. [from venia, Fr. from venia, Latin.]
1. Pardonable; susceptible of pardon; excusable.
If they do nothing 'tis a venial slip. Shakespeare.
More venial is a dependence upon potable gold, whereof Paracelsus, who died himself at forty-seven, gloried that he could make other men immortal. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
What horror will invade the mind,
Shall have few venial faults to find? Rowson.
While good men are in extirpating mortal sins, I should rally the world out of indecencies and venial transgressions. Addison.
2. Permitted; allowed.
No more of talk where God, or angel-guest,
With man, as with his friend, familiar us'd
To sit indulgent, and with him partake
Rural repast; permitting him the while Venial discourse unblam'd. Milton's Par. Lost.
VENIALNESS. n. f. [from venial.] State of being excusable.
VENISON. n. f. [from venison, French.] Game; beast of chase;
the flesh of deer.
Shall we kill us venison?
And yet it irks me, the poor dappled fools
Shou'd have their round haunches gor'd. Shakespeare.
We have a hot venison patty to dinner. Shakespeare.
In the records of Ireland, no mention is made of any park, though there be vert and venison within this land. Davies's Hist. of Ireland.
He for the feast prepar'd,
In equal portions with the venison shar'd. Dryden.
VENOM. n. f. [from venia, French.] Poison.
Your eyes, which hitherto hatch borne in them
The fatal balls of murdering basilisks:
The venom of such looks we fairly hope
Have lost their quality. Shakespeare. Hon. V.
Beware of yonder dog;
Look, when he fawns, he bites; and, when he bites,
His venom tooth will rankle to the death. Shakespeare. Rich. III.
Like some tall tree, the monster of the wood,
O'erhanging all that under him would grow,
He sheds his venom on the plants below. Dryden.
TO VENOM. v. a. To infect with venom.
VENOMOUS. adj. [from venom.]
1. Poisonous.
Thy tears are sifter than a younger man's,
And venomous to thy eyes. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
2. Malignant; mischievous.
A posterity not unlike their majority of mischievous progenitors; a venomous and destructive progeny. Brown.
This falsity was broached by Cocheus, a venomous writer;
one careless of truth or falsehood. Addison.
VENOMOUSLY. adv. [from venomous.] Poisonously; mischievously; malignantly.
His unkindness,
That strip'd her from his benediction, turn'd her
To foreign casualties. These things sting him
So venomously, that burning shame detains him
From his Cordelia. Shakespeare. K. Lear.
His praise of foes is venomously nice;
So touch'd, it turns a virtue to a vice. Dryden.
VENOMOUSNESS. n. f. [from venomous.] Poisonousness; malignity.
VEN'T. n. f. [from vente, French.]
1. A small aperture; a hole; a spiracle; passage at which any thing is let out.
On her breast
There is a vent of blood, and something blown;
The like is on her arm. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.
They at once their seeds
Put forth, and to a narrow vent apply'd
With nicest touch. Milton's Par. Lost.
Have near the bung-hole a little vent-hole stopp'd with a stopple. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Scarce any countries that are much annoyed with earthquakes, that have not one of these fiery vents, disgorging that fire, whereby it gains an exit. Woodward.
To draw any drink, be not at the trouble of opening a vent;
or if you take out the vent, stay not to put it in.
Full o'er their heads the swelling bag he rent,
And all the furies issued at the vent. Pope.
2. Passage out of secrecy to public notice.
It failed by late setting-out, and some contrariety of weather, whereby the particular design took vent beforehand. Wotton.
3. The act of opening.
The farmer's cadres mature,
Now call for vent; his lands exhaust, permit
T' indulge a-while. Philips.
4. Emission; passage.
The smother'd fondness burns within him;
When most it swells and labours for a vent,
The sense of honour, and desire of fame,
Drive the big passion back into his heart. Addison's Cato.
5. Discharge; means of discharge.
Had, like grief, been dew'd in tears,
Without the vent of words. Milton.
Land-floods are a great improvement of land, where a vent can be had. Mortimer's Husbandry.
6. [from vente, Fr. ventitia, Lat.] Sale.
For the mart, it was alledged that the vent for English cloaths would hereby be open in all times of war. Hayward.
By this war there is no vent for any commodity but of wool. Temple's Miscellany.
He drew off a thousand copies of a treatise, which not one in threefore can understand, can hardly exceed the vent of that number. Pope's Letters.
TO VENT. v. a. [from venter, French, from the noun; venter, Italian.]
1. To let out at a small aperture.
Hunger broke stone walls; that the gods sent not Corn for the rich men only: with these shreds
They vented their complainings. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
When men are young, and have little else to do, they might vent the overflowings of their fancy that way. Denham.
Lab'ring still, with endless discontent,
The queen of heav'n did thus her fury vent. Dryden.
2. To utter; to report.
Had it been vented and imposed in some of the most learned ages, it might then, with some pretence of reason, have been said to be the invention of some crafty statesman. Stephens.
3. To emit; to pour out.
Revoke thy doom,
Or whilst I can vent clamour from my throat,
I'll tell thee thou dost evil. Shakespeare's K. Lear.
4. To publish.
Their sectators did greatly enrich their inventions, by venting the stolen treasures of divine letters, alter'd by profane additions, and disguised by poetical conversions. Raleigh.
5. To sell; to carry to sale.
This profitable merchandize not rising to a proportionable enhancement with other less beneficial commodities, they impute to the owners not venting and venturing the same. Carew.
Therefore did those nations vent such spice, sweet gums and pearls, as their own countries yielded. Raleigh.
TO VENT. v. n. To snuff. As he venteth into the air. Spenser.
VENTAIL. n. f. [from vantail, Fr.] That part of the helmet made to lift up. Spenser.
VENTANNA. n. f. [Spanish.] A window.
What after pals'd
Was far from the ventanna, when I fate;
But you were near, and can the truth relate. Dryden.
VENTER. n. f. [Latin.]
1. Any cavity of the body, chiefly applied to the head, breast and abdomen, which are called by anatomists the three venters.
2. Womb; mother.
A has issue B a son, and C a daughter, by one venter; and D a son by another venter. If B purchases in fee, and dies without issue, it shall descend to the sister, and not to the brother of the half blood. Hale.
VENTIDUCT. n. f. [from ventus and ductus, Latin.] A passage for the wind.
Having been informed of divers ventiducts, I wish I had had the good fortune, when I was at Rome, to take notice of these organs. Boyle.
TO VENTILATE. v. a. [from ventilo, Latin.]
1. To fan with wind.
In close, low, and dirty alleys, the air is penn'd up, and obstructed from being ventilated by the winds. Harvey.
Miners, by perforations with large bellows, letting down tubes, and sinking new shafts, give free passage to the air, which ventilates and cools the mines. Woodward.
2. To winnow; to fan.
3. To examine; to discuss. Not

Nor is the right of the party, nor the judicial process in right of that party so far peremptory; but that the same may be begun again, and ventilated de novo. Ayliffe.
VENTILATION. n. f. [from ventilatio, Lat. from ventilare.]
1. The act of fanning; the state of being fanned.
The foul, worn with too frequent culture, must lie fallow, fill it has recruited its exhausted salts, and again enriched itself by the ventilations of the air. Addison.
2. Vent; utterance. Not in use.
To his secretary Doctor Mason, whom he let lie in a pal-let near him, for natural ventilation of his thoughts, he would break out into bitter eruptions. Wotton's Buckingham.
3. Refrigeration.
Procure the blood a free course, ventilation and transpira-tion by suitable and ephraic purges. Harvey.
VENTILATOR. n. f. [from ventilare.] An instrument contrived by Dr. Hale to supply close places with fresh air.
VENTRICLE. n. f. [from ventriculus, Fr. ventriculus, Latin.]
1. The stomach.
Whether I will or not, while I live, my heart beats, and my ventricle digests what is in it. Hale.
2. Any small cavity in an animal body, particularly those of the heart.
Know'st thou how blood, which to the heart doth flow,
Doth from one ventricle to the other go? Donne.
The heart being a muscular part, the sides are composed of two orders of fibres running spirally from base to top, contrarily one to the other; and so being drawn or contracted, constricting the ventricles, and strongly force out the blood. Ray.
The mixture of blood and chyle, after its circulation through the lungs, being brought back into the left ventricle of the heart, is drove again by the heart into the aorta, through the whole arterial system. Arbutnot.
VENTRICULOQUIST. n. f. [from ventriculus, Fr. venter and loquor, Lat.]
One who speaks in such a manner as that the sound seems to issue from his belly.
VENTURE. n. f. [from aventure, Fr.]
1. A hazard; an undertaking of chance and danger.
When he reads
Thy personal venture in the rebel's fight,
His wonders and his praises do contend
Which should be thine or his. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
For a man to doubt whether there be any hell, and thereupon to live so as if absolutely there were none; but when he dies to find himself confuted in the flames, this must be the height of woe and disappointment, and a bitter conviction of an irrational venture, and absurd choice. South.
I, in this venture, double gains pursue,
And laid out all my stock to purchase you. Dryden.
When infinite happiness is put in one scale, against infinite misery in the other; if the worst that comes to the pious man, if he mistakes, be the best that the wicked can attain to, if he be in the right, who can, without madness, run the venture? Lodge.
2. Chance; hap.
The king resolved with all speed to assail the rebels, and yet with that providence and surety, as should leave little to venture or fortune. Bacon.
3. The thing put to hazard; a stake.
My ventures are not in one bottom trusted,
Nor to one place. Shakespeare. Mer. of Venice.
On such a full sea are we now afloat:
And we must take the current when it serves,
Or lose our ventures. Shakespeare. Julius Caesar.
Thrice happy you, that look as from the shore,
And have no venture in the wreck to see. Daniel.
4. At a venture. At hazard; without much consideration; without any thing more than the hope of a lucky chance.
You have made but an estimate of those lands at a venture, so as it should be hard to build any certainty of charge upon it. Spenser.
A bargain at a venture made,
Between two partners in a trade. Hudibras.
A covetous and an envious man joined in a petition to Jupiter, who ordered Apollo to tell them that their desire should be granted at a venture.
Here was no scampering away at a venture, without fear or wit.
If Ahab be designed for death, though a soldier in the enemy's army draws a bow at a venture, yet the sure, unerring directions of providence shall carry it in a direct course to his heart. South.
TO VENTURE. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To dare.
A man were better rise in his suit; for he that would have ventured at first to have lost the suit, will not in the conclusion lose both the suit and his own former favour. Bacon.
Origen mentioning their being cast out of Jerusalem, ventures to assure them that they would never be re-established, since they had committed that horrid crime against the favour of the world. Addison on the Christian Religion.

2. To run a hazard.
Nor is indeed that man less mad than these,
Who freights a ship to venture on the seas,
With one frail interposing plank to save
From certain death, roll'd on by every wave. Dryden.
I am so overjoy'd, I can scarce believe I am at liberty; like a bird that has often beaten her wing in vain against her cage, dare hardly venture out, though she see it open. Dryden.
3. To venture at.
To engage in; or make attempts
To venture on or upon. } without any security of success, upon mere hope.
That slander is found a truth now; and held for certain,
The king will venture at it. Shakespeare.
It were a matter of great profit, save that it is too conjectural to venture upon, if one could discern what corn, herbs, or fruits are like to be in plenty and scarcity, by some signs in the beginning of the year. Bacon.
I never yet the tragic strain essay'd,
Deter'd by that inimitable maid:
And when I venture at the comic stile,
Thy scornful lady seems to mock my toil. Waller.
Though they had ideas enough to distinguish gold from a stone, yet they but timorously ventured on such terms as anxietas and fœticitas. Lodge.
Turco-Papissimus I would desire him to read, before he ventures at capping of characters. Alterbury.
TO VENTURE. v. a.
1. To expose to hazard.
In my school-days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight;
By vent'ring both, I oft found both. Shakespeare.
2. To put or send on a venture.
The fifth ventured for France, they pack in staunch hogheads, so as to keep them in their pickle. Carew.
VENTURER. n. f. [from venture.] He who ventures.
VENTUROUS. adj. [from venture.] Daring, bold, fearless;
ready to run hazards.
Charles was guided by mean men, who would make it their master-piece of favour to give venturous counsels, which no great or wise man would. Bacon.
He paus'd not, but with vent'rous arm
He pluck'd, he tasted. Milton's Par. Lost.
The vent'rous humour of our mariners costs this island
many brave lives every year. Temple.
Savage pirates seek through seas unknown,
The lives of others, vent'rous of their own. Pope.
VENTUROUSLY. adv. [from venturous.] Daringly; fearlessly; boldly.
Siege was laid to the fort by the Lord Gray, then deputy, with a smaller number than those were within the fort; ven-turously indeed; but haste was made to attack them before the rebels came in to them. Bacon.
VENTUROUSNESS. n. f. [from venturous.] Boldness; willingness to hazard.
Her coming into a place where the walls and ceilings were whited over, much offended her fight, and made her repent her vent'rousness. Boyle on Colours.
VENUS. n. f.

VERACITY. n. f. [from verax, Latin.]
1. Moral truth; honesty of report.
2. Physical truth; consistency of report with fact. Less proper.
When they submitted to the most ignominious and cruel deaths, rather than retract their testimony, there was no reason to doubt the veracity of those facts which they related. Addison.
VERACIOUS. adj. [from verax, Latin.] Observant of truth.
VERB. n. f. [from verbe, Fr. verbum, Lat.] A part of speech signifying existence, or some modification thereof, as action, passion. And withal some disposition or intention of the mind relating thereto, as of affirming, denying, interrogating, commanding.
Men usually talk of a noun and a verb.
VERBAL. adj. [from verbalis, Fr. verbalis, Latin.]
1. Spoken, not written.
2. Oral; uttered by mouth.
Made she no verbal quest? —
Yes; once or twice she heav'd the name of father
Pantingly forth, as if it prest her heart. Shakespeare.
3. Consisting in mere words.
If young African for fame,
His wasted country freed from Punick rage,
The deed becomes unprais'd, the man at least;
And loses, though but verbal, his reward. Milton.
Being at first out of the way to science, in the progress of their inquiries they must lose themselves, and the truth, in a verbal labyrinth. Glanville.
It was such a denial or confession of him as would appear in preaching: but this is managed in words and verbal profession. South.

By being to verbal. Shakespeare.

5. Minutely exact in words.

6. Literal; having word answering to word.
Neglect the rules each verbal critic lays,
For not to know some trifles is a praise. Pope.
Whoever offers at verbal translation, shall have the misfortune of that young traveller, who lost his own language abroad, and brought home no other instead of it. Denham.
The verbal copier is incumber'd with so many difficulties at once, that he can never disentangle himself from all. Dryden.

7. [verbal, Fr. in grammar.] A verbal noun is a noun derived from a verb.

VERBALITY. n. f. [from verbal.] Mere bare words.
Sometimes he will seem to be charmed with words of holy scripture, and to fly from the letter and dead verbality, who must only start at the life and animated materials thereof. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

VERBALLY. adv. [from verbal.]

1. In words; orally.
The manner of our denying the deity of Christ here prohibited, was by words and oral expressions verbally to deny it. South's Sermons.

2. Word for word.
This almost impossible to translate verbally, and well, at the same time. Dryden.

VERBATIM. adv. [Latin.] Word for word.
Think not, although in writing I prefer'd
The manner of thy vile outrageous crimes,
That therefore I have forg'd, or am not able
Verbatim to rehearse the method of my pen. Shakespeare.
See the transcripts of both charters verbatim in Mat. Paris. Hale.

VERBERATION. n. f. [verberation, Fr. from verberate.] Blows; beating.
Riding or walking against great winds is a great exercise, the effects of which are redness and inflammation; all the effects of a fast press or verberation. Auburn.

VERBOSE. adj. [verbosus, Lat.] Exuberant in words; prolix; tedious by multiplicity of words.
Let envy
Ill-judging and verbosus, from Lethe's lake,
Draw tuns unmeasurable. Prior.
They ought to be brief, and not too verbosus in their way of speaking; and to propound the matter of their argument in a mild and gentle manner. Ayliffe's Paragon.

VERBOSETY. n. f. [verbositas, Fr. from verbosus.] Exuberance of words; much empty talk.
He draweth out the thread of his verbosity
Finer than the staple of his argument. Shakespeare.
To give an hint more of the verbosities of this philosophy, a short view of a definition or two will be sufficient evidence. Glanville.
Homer is guilty of verbosity, and of a tedious prolix manner of speaking; he is the greatest talker of all antiquity. Broome.

VERDANT. n. f. [verdant, Fr. viridans, Lat.] Green. This word is so lately naturalized, that Skinner could find it only in a dictionary.
Each odorous bushy shrub
Fenc'd up verdant wall. Milton.

VERDERER. n. f. [verder, Fr. viridarius, low Lat.] An officer in the forest.

VERDICT. n. f. [verum dictum, Latin.]

1. The determination of the jury declared to the judge.
Before the jury go together, 'tis all to nothing what the verdict shall be. Spenser.

2. Declaration; decision; judgment; opinion.
Deceived greatly they are, who think that all they whose names are cited amongst the favourers of this cause, are on any such verdict agreed. Hooker.
These were enormities condemned by the most natural verdict of common humanity; and so very gross and foul, that no man could pretend ignorance avoided. South.

VERDIGRISE. n. f. The rust of brass, which in time being consumed and eaten with fallow, turneth into green; in Latin verugo; in French vert de gris, or the hoary green. Peachment.
Brass turned into green, is called verdigrise. Bacon.

VERDITURE. n. f.
Verditure ground with a weak gum arabic water, is the faintest and palest green. Peachment.

VERDURE. n. f. [verdure, Fr.] Green; green colour.
Its verdure clad
Her universal face with pleasant green. Milton.
Twice livid olive bind those laurels fast,
Whose verdure must for ever last. Prior.

VERDURIOUS. adj. [from verdure.] Green; covered with green; greened with green.

V E R

Higher than their tops

The word vous will of paradise up-sprung;
Which to our general fire gave prospect large.

There the lowlands herd verdurous pasture.

VERECUND, adj. [verecund, old French; verecundus, Latin.] Modest; bashful. Milton. Philip. DiG.

VERGE, n. f. [verge, Fr. virga, Latin.]

1. A rod, or something in form of a rod, carried as an emblem of authority. The mace of a dean.

Suppose him now a dean compleat,
Devoutly lolling in his seat;
The silver verge, with decent pride,
Stuck underneath his cushion side.

2. [verge, Latin.] The brink; the edge; the utmost border.

Would the inclusive verge
Of golden metal, that must round my brow,
Were red-hot steel to fear me to the brain,
I lay, and will in battle prove,

Or here, or elsewhere, to the furthest verge,
That ever was survey'd by English eye.

You are old,
Nature in you stands on the very verge

Of her confines.

Serve them as a flow'ry verge to bind

The fluid skirts of that fame wat'ry cloud,
Left it again dissolve and show'r the earth.

Let fortune empty her whole quiver on me,
I have a soul, that, like an ample field,
Can take in all, and verge enough for more.

Every thing great, within the verge of nature, or out of it, has a proper part assign'd it in this poem.

Then let him chuse a damsel young and fair,
To bless his age, and bring a worthy heir,
To tooth his care, and, free from noise and strife,
Conduct him gently to the verge of life.

3. In law.

Verge is the compass about the king's court, bounding the jurisdiction of the lord steward of the king's household, and of the coroner of the king's house, and which seems to have been 12 miles round. Verge hath also another signification, and is used for a stick, or rod, whereby one is admitted tenant, and, holding it in his hand, sweareth fealty to the lord of a manor; who, for that reason, is called tenant by the verge.

Fear not; whom we raise,
We will make fast within a hallow'd verge.

To VERGE, v. n. [verge, Lat.] To tend; to bend downwards.

They serve indifferently for vowels in respect of the aperture, and for consonants in respect of the pene-aperture; and so much the more verging either way, according to the respective occasions.

The nearer I find myself verging to that period of life which is to be labour and sorrow, the more I prop myself upon those few supports that are left.

Such are indicated, when the juices of a human body verge to putrefaction.

Man,
Perhaps acts second to some sphere unknown;
Touches some wheel, or verges to some goal;
'Tis but a part we feel, and not the whole.

VERGER, n. f. [from verge.] He that carries the mace before the dean.

I can tip the verger with half a crown, and get into the best feat.

VERIDICAL, adj. [veridicus, Latin.] Telling truth.

VERIFICATION, n. f. [from verify.] Confirmation by argument or evidence.

In verification of this we will mention a phenomenon of our engine.

To VERIFY, v. n. [verifier, Fr.] To justify against charge of falsehood; to confirm; to prove true.

What seemeth to have been uttered concerning sermons, and their efficacy or necessity, in regard of divine matter, must consequently be verified in sundry other kinds of teaching, if the matter be the same in all.

This is verified by a number of examples, that whatsoever is gained by an abusive treaty, ought to be restored:

So flath thou best fulfill, best verify

The prophets old, who sung thy endless reign.

So spake this oracle, then verifi'd.

Whoe Jesus, son of Marys, second Eve,
Saw Satan fall.

Though you may mistake a year;
Though your prognosticks run too fast,
They must be verifi'd at last.

Spain shall have three kings; which is now wonderfully verified; for besides the king of Portugal, there are now two rivals for Spain.

VERILY, adv. [from verify.]

I, in truth; certainly.

Verily is better to be lowly born,
Than to be peris'd up in a glitt'ring grief.

V E R

2. With great confidence.
It was verily thought, that had it not been for four great disfavours of that voyage, the enterprize had succeeded. Bacon
By repelling the sacramental test, we are verily persuaded the consequence will be an entire alteration of religion among us. Swift on the Sacramental Test
VERISIMILAR. adj. [verisimilis, Latin.] Probably; likely.
VERISIMILITUDE. n. f. [verisimilitudo, Latin.] Probability; VERISIMILITY. n. f. likelihood; resemblance of truth.
Touching the verisimilitude or probable truth of this relation, several reasons seem to overthrow it. Brown
A noble nation, upon whom if not such verities, at least such verisimilitudes of fortune were placed. Brown's Vul. Er.
Verisimilitude and opinion are an easy purchase; but true knowledge is dear and difficult. I like a point, it requires as accurate to its discovery: while verisimilitude, like the expanded superficies, is obvious, sensible, and affords a large and easy field for loose enquiry. Glaville
The plot, the wit, the characters, the passions, are exalted as high as the imagination of the poet can carry them, with proportion to verisimilitude. Dryden's Essay on Dramatick Poetry
Though Horace gives permission to painters and poets to dare every thing, yet he encourages neither to make things out of nature and verisimilitude. Dryden VERITABLE. adj. [veritable, Fr.] True; agreeable to fact. Indeed! is't true?
— Most veritable; therefore look to't well. Shaksf.
The preface of the year succeeding made from insects in oak-apples, is I doubt too indistinct, nor veritable from event. Brown's Vulgar Errors
VERITY. n. f. [verité, Fr. veritas, Latin.]
1 Truth; consonance to the reality of things.
If any refuse to believe us disputing for the verity of religion established, let them believe God himself thus miraculously working for it. Hosker
I saw their weapons drawn; there was a noise; That's verity. Shakespeare's Tempest
The precipitancy of disputation, and the stir and noise of passions that usually attend it, must needs be prejudicial to verity; its calm intimations can no more be heard in such a bustle, than a whistle among a croud of sailors in a storm. Glaville
It is a proposition of eternal verity, that none can govern while he is defied. We may as well imagine that there may be a king without majesty, a supreme without sovereignty. South
2. A true assertion; a true tenet.
And that age, which my grey hairs make seem more than it is, hath not diminished in me the power to protect an undemiable verity. Sidney
Wherefore should any man think, that that reading itself is one of the ordinary means, whereby it pleases God, of his gracious goodness, to inflat that celestial verity, which being but to received, is nevertheless effectual to save souls. Hosker
If there come truth from them,
Why by the verities on thee made gods,
May they not be my oracles as well? Shaksf.
Must virtue be preferred by a lie?
Virtue and truth do ever best agree;
By this it seems to be a verity,
Since the effects so good and virtuous be. Davies
3. Moral truth; agreement of the words with the thoughts.
VERJUICE. n. f. [verjus, French.] Acid liquor expressed from crab-apples. It is vulgarly pronounced warges.
Hang a dog upon a crab-tree, and he'll never love verjuice. LEStrange
The barley-pudding comes in place;
Then bids fall on; himself, for faving charges,
A peed's sic'd onion eats, and tipples verjuice. Dryden
The native verjuice of the crab, deriv'd
Through th' infix'd grass, a grateful mixture forms
Of tart and sweet. Philips
VERMICELLI. n. f. [Italian.] A paste rolled and broken in the form of worms.
With oysters, eggs, and vermicelli,
She let him almost burst his belly. Prior VERMICULAR. adj. [vermicularis, Latin.] Acting like a worm; continued from one part to another of the same body.
By the vermicular motion of the intestines, the grosser parts are derived downwards, while the finer are squeezed into the narrow orifices of the lacteal vessels. Cheyne
TO VERMICULATE. v. a. [vermiculatus, Fr. vermiculatus, Lat.] To inlay; to work in chequer work, or pieces of divers colours. Bailey
VERMICULATION. n. f. [from vermiculate.] Continuation of motion from one part to another.
My heart moves naturally by the motion of palpitation; my guts by the motion of vermiculation. Hale
VERMICULE. n. f. [vermiculus, vermis, Latin.] A little grub, worm.

V E R

I saw the flining oak-ball ichneumon strike its teretra into an oak-apple, to lay its eggs therein : and hence are many vermicules teen towards the outside of these apples. Derham.

VERMICULOUS. adj. [vermiculosus, Lat.] Full of grubs.

VERMIFORM. n. f. [vermiforme, Fr. vermis and forma, Lat.] Having the shape of a worm.

VERMIL.

VERMILION. n. f. [vermeil, vermillon, Fr.]

1. The cochineal ; a grub of a particular plant.

2. Factitious or native cinabar ; sulphur mixed with mercury.

This is the usual, though not primitive signification.

The imperfect metals are subject to rust, except mercury, which is made into vermillion by solution or calcination. Bacon.

The fairest and most principal red is vermillion, called in Latin minium. It is a poison, and found where great store of quicksilver is. Peacham.

3. Any beautiful red colour.

How the red roses flush up in her cheeks,
And the pure snow with goodly vermil stain,
Like crimson dy'd in grain. Spenser.

There grew a goodly tree him fair beside,
Loaden with fruit and apples rofie red,
As they in pure vermillion had been dy'd,
Whereof great virtues ower all were read. Fairy Queen.

Simple colours are strong and sensible, though they are clear as vermillion. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

TO VERMILION. v. a. [from the noun.] To die red.

A brightly red vermilion all her face,
And her eyes languish with unufual gear. Granville.

VERMINE. n. f. [vermine, Fr. vermis, Latin.] Any noxious animal. Used commonly for small creatures.

What is your study ? —
— How to prevent the hend, and to kill vermin. Shakefp.

The head of a wolf, dried and hanged up in a dove-house, will scare away vermin, such as weazels and polecats. Bacon.

An idle perfon only lives to fpend his time, and eat the fruits of the earth, like a vermin or a wolf. Taylor.

The flars determine

You are my prifoners, bale vermin. Hudibras.

A weazle taken in a trap, was charg'd with middlemcancers, and the poor vermin flood much upon her innocence. L'Eſſr.

Great injuries thefe vermin, mice and rats, do in the field. Mortimer's Husbandry.

He that has fo little wit

To nourifh vermin, may be bit. Swift.

TO VERMINE. v. n. [from vermin] To breed vermine.

VERMINATION. n. f. [from verminate] Generation of vermine.

Redi difcarding anomalous generation, tried experiments relating to the vermination of ferpents and flefh. Derham.

VERMINOUS. adj. [from vermine] Tending to vermine ; difpofed to breed vermine.

A waiting of childrens flefh depends upon fome obftruction of the entrails, or verminous difpofition of the body. Harvey.

VERMIPAROUS. adj. [vermis and pario, Lat.] Producing worms.

Herbey they confound the generation of vermiparous animals with oviparous. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

VERNAacular. adj. [vernaculus, Latin.] Native ; of one's own country.

London weekly bills number deep in confumptions ; the fame likewife proving infeparable accidents to moſt other difeafes ; which inſtances do evidently bring a confumption under the notion of a vernacular difeafe to England. Harvey.

The hiftories of all our former wars are tranſmitted to us in our vernacular idiom. I do not find in any of our chronicles, that Edward the third ever reconnoiter'd the enemy, though he often difcovered the poſture of the French, and as often vanquifhed them. Addifon.

VERNAL. adj. [vernus, Latin.] Belonging to the ſpring.

With the year

Seasons return ; but not to me returns,
Or light of vernal-bloom, or fummer's rofe. Milton.

VERNANT. n. f. [vernans, Lat.] Flourishing as in the ſpring.

Elfe had the ſpring

Perpetual ſmild on earth, with vernant flow'rs,
Equal in days and nights. Milton's Par. Loſt.

VERNILITY. n. f. [verna, Lat.] Servile carriage ; the ſubmiſſive fawning behaviour of a flave. Bailey.

VERREL. SEE FERRULE.

VERSABILITY. n. f. [versabilis, Lat.] Aptnefs to be turn'd.

VERSABLENESS. n. f. or wound any way. Diſt.

VERSAL. adj. [A cant word for univerſal.] Total ; whole.

Some for brevity,

Have caſt the verſal world's nativity. Hudibras.

VERSATILE. adj. [verſatilis, Lat.]

Playing on pipes of corn, and versing love. Shakef.
To be VERSED. v. n. [verser, Lat.] To be skilled in; to be acquainted with.
She might be ignorant of their nations, who was not versed in their names, as not being present at the general survey of animals, when Adam assigned unto every one a name concordant unto its nature. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
This, vers'd in death, th' infernal knight relates,
And then for proof fulfill'd their common fates. Dryden.
VERSEMAN. n. f. [verse and man.] A poet; a writer in verse.
The god of us versemen, you know, child, the sun. Prior.
VERSCLE. n. f. [versculus, Lat.] A little verse.
VERSIFICATION. n. f. [versification, Fr. from versify.] The art or practice of making verses.
Dome alone had your talent, but was not happy to arrive at your versification. Dryden.
Some object to his versification; which is in poetry, what colouring is in painting, a beautiful ornament. But if the proportions are just, though the colours should happen to be rough, the piece may be of inestimable value. Glanville.
VERSIFICATION. n. f. [versificateur, Fr. versificateur, Lat.]
VERSIFIER. n. f. A versifier; a maker of verses with or without the spirit of poetry.
Statius, the best versificator next Virgil, knew not how to design after him. Dryden.
In Job and the Psalms we shall find more sublime ideas, more elevated language, than in any of the heathen versifiers of Greece or Rome. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
To VERSIFY. v. n. [versifier, Fr. versifieur, Latin.] To make verses.
You would wonder to hear how soon even children will begin to versify. Sidney.
To follow rather the Goths in rhyming, than the Greeks in true versifying, were even to eat acorns with swine, when we may freely eat wheat bread among men. Ascham.
I'll versify in spite, and do my best,
To make as much waste paper as the rest. Dryden.
To VERSIFY. v. a. To relate in verse.
Unintermix'd with fictitious fantasies, Daniel.
I'll versify the truth, not poetize.
VERSION. n. f. [version, Fr. versio, Latin.]
1. Change; transformation.
Springs, the antients thought to be made by the version of air into water. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
2. Change of direction.
Comets are rather gazed upon, than wisely observed in their effects; that is, what kind of comet, for magnitude, colour, version of the beams, produceth what kind of effects. Bacon.
3. Translation.
This exact propriety of Virgil I particularly regarded; but must confess, that I have not been able to make him appear wholly like himself. For where the original is close, no version can reach it in the same compass. Dryden.
4. The act of translating.
VERT. n. f. vert, Fr.
Vert, in the laws of the forest, signifies every thing that grows, and bears a green leaf within the forest; that may cover and hide a deer. Cowel.

- VERTEBRAL.* adj. [from vertebra, Lat.] Relating to the joints of the spine.
The carotid, vertebral, and splenick arteries are not only variously contorted, but here and there dilated, to moderate the motion of the blood. Ray on the Creation.
- VERTEBRE.* n. f. [vertebre, Fr. vertebra, Latin.] A joint of the back.
The several vertebres are so elegantly compacted together, that they are as strong as if they were but one bone. Reg.
- VERTEX.* n. f. [Latin.]
1. Zenith; the point over head.
These keep the vertex; but betwixt the bear
And shining zodiack, where the planets err,
A thousand figur'd constellations roll. Creech.
2. A top of a hill.
Mountains especially abound with different species of vegetables; every vertex or eminence affording new kinds. Derham.
- VERTICAL.* adj. [vertical, Fr. from vertex.]
1. Placed in the zenith.
'Tis raging noon; and vertical the sun
Darts on the head direct his forceful rays. Thomson.
2. Placed in a direction perpendicular to the horizon.
From these laws, all the rules of bodies ascending or descending in vertical lines may be deduced. Chymer.
- VERTICALITY.* n. f. [from vertical.] The state of being in the zenith.
Unto them the sun is vertical twice a year; making two distinct summers in the different points of the verticality. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- VERTICALLY.* adv. [from vertical.] In the zenith.
Although it be not vertical unto any part of Asia, yet it vertically passeth over Peru and Brasilia. Brown.
- VERTICILLATE.* adj. [from verticillum, Latin.]
Verticillate plants are such as have their flowers intermixt with small leaves growing in a kind of whorls about the joints of a stalk, as penny-royal, horchound, &c. Quincy.
- VERTICITY.* n. f. [from vertex.] The power of turning; circumvolution; rotation.
Those stars do not peculiarly glance on us, but carry a common regard unto all countries, unto whom their verticity is also common. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
We believe the verticity of the needle, without a certificate from the days of old. Glanville.
Whether they be globules, or whether they have a verticity about their own centers, that produce the idea of whiteness in us, the more particles of light are reflected from a body, the whiter does the body appear. Lacke.
- VERTIGINOUS.* adj. [vertiginosus, Latin.]
1. Turning round; rotatory.
This vertiginous motion gives day and night successively over the whole earth, and makes it habitable all around. Bentley.

These extinguish candles, make the workmen faint and vertiginous; and, when very great, suffocates and kills them. Woodward.
- VERTIGO.* n. f. [Latin.] A giddiness; a sense of turning in the head.
Vertigo is the appearance of visible objects that are without motion, as if they turned round, attended with a fear of falling, and a dimness of sight. Quincy.
The forerunners of an apoplexy are dulness, vertigos, tremblings. Arbutnot.
That old vertigo in his head,
Will never leave him till he's dead. Swift.
- VERVAIN.* n. f. [verveine, Fr. verbena, Lat.] A plant.
VERVINE. n. f. [verveine, Fr. verbena, Lat.] A plant.
It hath a labiate flower, consisting of one leaf, whose upper lip is upright, and commonly divided into two; but the under lip is cut into three parts; so that at first sight it appears like a flower with five leaves. The flowers generally grow in spikes, but not in whorles, round the stalks. Miller.
The nightshade grows to work him ill,
Therewith the vervain, and her dill, Drayton.
That hindred witches of their will.
Some scatt'ring pot-herbs here and there he found,
Which cultivated with his daily care,
And bruis'd with vervain, were his frugal fare. Dryden.
- VERVAIN.* n. f. A plant.
It hath the whole habit of the mallow or althaea; but differs from it in having its leaves deeply divided. Miller.
- VERVELES.* n. f. [vervulle, Fr.] Labels tied to a hawk. Ains.
- VERVY.* adj. [vervy, or orais, French; whence vervy in ancient English.]
1. True; real.
Why do I pity him,
That with his vervy heart despotheth me. Shakepeare.
In vervy deed, as the Lord liveth. Sam. xxv. 34.
O that

VES

- O that in very deed we might behold it. Dryd. and Lee.

These signs are black Vesper's pagaments. Shakef.
- VE'SPERS.* n. f. [without the singular, from vesperus, Latin.] The evening service of the Romish church.
- VE'SPERTINE.* adj. [vespertinus, Latin.] Happening or coming in the evening; pertaining to the evening.
- VE'SSEL.* n. f. [vaselle, Fr. vas, Lat.]
1. Any thing in which liquids, or other things, are put.
For Banquo's issue have I fill'd my mind;
Put rancours in the vesSEL of my peace,
Only for them. Shakef. Macbeth.
If you have two vesSEL to fill, and you empty one to fill the other, there still remains one vesSEL empty. Burnet.- 2. The containing parts of an animal body.
Of these elements are constituted the smallest fibres; of those fibres the vesSels; of those vesSels the organs of the body. Arbutnot on Aliments.
- 3. Any vehicle in which men or goods are carried on the water.
The sons and nephews of Noah, who peopled the isles, had vesSels to transport themselves. Raleigh's Essays.
The vesSEL is represented as stranded. The figure before it seems to lift it off the shallows. Addison on Medals.
From storms of rage, and dangerous rocks of pride,
Let thy strong hand this little vesSEL guide;
It was thy hand that made it: through the tide
Impetuous of this life, let thy command
Direct my course, and bring me safe to land. Prior.
Now secure the painted vesSEL glides;
The fun-beams trembling on the floating tides. Pope.
- 4. Any capacity; any thing containing.
I have my fill
Of knowledge, what this vesSEL can contain. Milton.
To VE'SSEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To put into a vessel; to barrel,

- Take earth, and vesSEL it; and in that set the seed. Bacon.
- VE'SSETS.* n. f. A kind of cloth commonly made in Suffolk. Bailey.
- VE'SSICKNON.* n. f. [among horsemen.] A windgall, or soft swelling on the inside and outside of a horse's hoof. Didt.
- VEST.* n. f. [vestis, Lat.] An outer garment.
Over his lucid arms Milton's Par. Lost.
A military vest of purple flow'd.
When the queen in royal habit's dress,
Old mystick emblems grace th' imperial vest. Smith.
- To VEST. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To dress; to deck; to enrobe.
The verdant fields with those of heav'n may vie,
With ether vested, and a purple sky. Dryden.
Light! Nature's resplendent robe;
Without whose vesting beauty all were wrapt
In gloom. Thomson.- 2. To dress in a long garment.
Just Simeon; and prophetic Anna spoke,
Before the altar and the vested priest. Milton.
- 3. To make possessor of; to invest with.
To settle men's consciences, 'tis necessary that they know the person, who by right is vested with power over them. Locke.
Had I been vested with the monarch's pow'r,
Thou must have sigh'd, unlucky youth! in vain. Prior.
- 4. To place in possession.
The militia their commissioners positively required to be entirely vested in the parliament. Clarendon.
Empire and dominion was vested in him, for the good and behoof of others. Locke.

VE'STAL. n. f. [vestalis, Latin.] A virgin consecrated to Vesta; a pure virgin.
Women are not
In their best fortunes strong; but want will perjure
The ne'er-touch'd vestal. Shakepeare.
How happy is the blameless vestal's lot?
The world forgetting, by the world forgot. Pope.

VE'STAL. adj. [vestalis, Latin.] Denoting pure virginity.
Her vestal livery is but sick and green,
And none but fools do wear it. Shakepeare.

VE'STIBULE. n. f. [vestibulum, Lat.] The porch or first entrance of a house.

VE'STRIGE. n. f. [vestigium, Lat.] Footstep; mark left behind in passing.
The truth passes so slightly through men's imaginations, that they must use great subtilty to track its vestiges. Harvey.

VE'STMENT. n. f. [vestimentum, Latin.] Garment; part of dress.
Were it not better that the love which men bear unto God, should make the least things that are employed in his service amiable, than that their over-scrupulous dislike of so mean a thing as a vestment, should from the very service of God withdraw their hearts and affections. Hooker.
Heaven then would seem thy image, and reflect Those sable vestments, and that bright aspect. Waller.
The sculptors could not give vestments suitable to the quality of the persons represented. Dryden.

VE'STRY. n. f. [vestiare, Fr. vestiarium, Latin.]
1. A room appendant to the church, in which the sacerdotal garments, and consecrated things are deposited.
Bold Amycus, from the robb'd vestry brings
The chalices of heav'n; and holy things
Of precious weight. Dryden.
2. A parochial assembly commonly convened in the vestry.
The common-council are chosen every year, so many for every parish, by the vestry, and common convention of the people of that parish. Clarendon.
Go with me where paltry constables will not summon us to vestries. Blount to Pope.

VE'STURE. n. f. [vesture, old Fr. vestura, Italian.]
1. Garment; robe.
Her breasts half hid, and half were laid to show;
Her envious vesture greedy light repelling. Paisfax.
What, weep you when you but behold
Our Caesar's vesture wounded? Shakef. Julius Caesar.
To bear my lady's train, lest the base earth
Should from her vesture chance to steal a kiss. Shakef.
Here ruddy braes, and gold resplendent blaz'd;
There polish'd chests embroider'd vestures grac'd. Pope.- 2. Dress; habit; external form.
There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st,
But in his motion like an angel sings,
But this muddy vesture of decay
Doth grossly close us in, we cannot hear it. Shakef.
Rocks, precipices, and gulfs, apparell'd with a vesture of plants, would resemble mountains and vallies. Bentley.

VE'TCH. n. f. [vicia, Lat.] A plant with a papilionaceous flower; from the empalement arises the pointal, which becomes a pod full of roundish or angular seeds: to which must be added, that the leaves grow by pairs on a middle rib, ending in a tendril.

UGL

Where vetches, pulfe, and tares have flood,
And stalks of lupines grew. Dryden.
An erum is a fort of vetch, or small pea. Arbutnot.
VE'TCHY. n. f. [from vetch.] Made of vetches; abounding in vetches; consisting of vetch or pease-straw.
If to my cottage thou wilt resort,
There may'st thou liege in a vetchy bed,
Till fairer fortune shew forth his head. Spenser.
VE'TERAN. n. f. [veteranus, Latin.] An old soldier; a man long practised in any thing.
We were forced to uncover, or be regarded as veterans in the beau monde. Addison.
The Arians, for the credit of their faction, took the eldest,
the best experienced, the most wary, and the longest-practised veterans they had amongst them. Hooker.
If king Charles II. had made war upon France, he might have conquered it by the many veterans, which had been inured to service in the civil wars. Addison.
Ensigns that pierc'd the foe's remotest lines,
The hardy veteran with tears resigns. Addison.
VE'TERAN. adj. Long practised in war; long experienced.
There was a mighty strong army of land-forces, to the number of fifty thousand veteran soldiers. Bacon.
The British youth shall hail thy wife command;
Thy temper'd ardour, and thy veteran skill. Thomson.
VETERINARIAN. n. f. [veterinarius, Lat.] One skilled in the diseases of cattle.
That a horse has no gall, is not only swallowed by common farriers, but also receiv'd by good veterinarians, and some who have laudably discours'd upon horses. Brown.
TO VEX. v. a. [vexo, Latin.]
1. To plague; to torment; to harass.
Do you think
The king will suffer but the little finger
Of this man to be vex'd? Shakefp. Hen. VIII.
Do poor Tom some charity, whom the foul fiend vexes. Shak.
When she press'd him daily, so that his soul was vexed unto death, he told her all his heart. Judges xvi. 16.
Still may the dog the wand'ring troops constrain
Of airy ghosts, and vex the guilty train. Dryden.
You are the cause of all my care;
Your eyes ten thousand dangers dart;
Ten thousand torments vex my heart;
I love, and I despair. Prior.
2. To disturb; to disquiet.
Alack, 'tis he; why, he was met even now,
As mad as the vex sea; singing aloud. Shakefp.
Rang'd on the banks beneath our equal oars,
White curl the waves, and the vex'd ocean roars. Pope.
3. To trouble with slight provocations.
VEXA'TION. n. f. [from vex.]
1. The act of troubling.
O that husband,
My supreme crown of grief, and those repeated vexations of it. Shakefp. Cymbeline.
2. The state of being troubled; uneasiness; sorrow.
Vexation almost stops my breath.
That fondred friends greets in the hour of death. Shakefp.
Passions too violent, instead of heightening our pleasures, afford us nothing but vexation and pain. Temple.
3. The cause of trouble or uneasiness.
Your children were vexation to your youth;
But mine shall be a comfort to your age. Shakefp.
4. An act of harassing by law.
Albeit the party grieved thereby, may have some reason to complain of an untrue charge, yet may he not well call it an unjust vexation. Bacon.
5. A slight teasing trouble.
VEXA'TIOUS. adj. [from vexation.]
1. Afflictive; troublesome; causing trouble.
Consider him maintaining his usurped title, by continual vexations wars against the kings of Judah. South.
Vexations thought still found my flying mind,
Nor bound by limits, nor to place confin'd;
Haunted my nights, and terrify'd my days;
Stalk'd through my gardens, and pursu'd my ways;
Nor shut from artful bow'r, nor lost in winding maze. Prior.
2. Full of trouble; full of uneasiness.
He leads a vexations life, who in his noblest actions is togored with scruples, that he dares not make a step without the authority of another. Digby.
3. Teasing; slightly troublesome.
VEXA'TIOUSLY. adv. [from vexations.] Troublesomely; uneasily.
VEXA'TIOUSNESS. n. f. [from vexations.] Troublesomeness; uneasiness.
VEXER. [from vex.] He who vexes.
UGLY. adv. [from ugly.] Filthily; with deformity; in such a manner as to raise dislike.
UGLINESS. n. f. [from ugly.]
1. Deformity; contrariety to beauty.

VIB

All that else seem'd fair and fresh in sight,
Was turned now to dreadful ugliness. Spenser.
She takes her topicks from the advantages of old age and ugliness. Dryden.
2. Turpitude; loathsomeness; moral depravity.
Their dull ribaldry cannot but be very nauseous and offensive to any one, who does not, for the sake of the fin itself, pardon the ugliness of its circumstances. South.
UGLY. adj. [This word was antiently written ugly; whence Mr. Dier ingeniously deduces it from exphlike; that is, like an ouph, elf, or goblin. In Saxon oga is terror; and in Gothic ogan is to fear.] Deformed; offensive to the sight;
contrary to beautiful.
If Cassio do remain,
He hath a daily beauty in his life,
That makes me ugly. Shakefp.
O, I have pass'd a miserable night,
So full of ugly fights, of ghastly dreams.
Was this the cottage, and the safe abode
Thou toldst me of? What grim aspects are these,
These ugly-headed monsters? Milton.
VIAL. n. f. [Phiala.] A small bottle.
Edward's seven sons
Were as sev'n vials of his sacred blood. Shakefp.
You Gods! look down,
And from your sacred vials pour your grace
Upon my daughter's head. Shakefp.
Take thou this vial, being then in bed,
And this distilled liquor drink thou off.
Another lamp burnt in an old marble sepulchre belonging to some of the antient Romans inclosed in a glass
vial. Watkins.
I placed a thin vial, well stopp'd up, within the smoke of the vapour, but nothing followed.
Chemical waters, that are each transparent, when separate, ferment into a thick troubled liquor, when mixed in the same vial. Addison.
TO VIAL. v. a. To inclose in a vial.
This she with precious vial'd liquors heals;
For which the shepherds at the festivals
Carol her goodness loud in rustic lays. Milton.
VIANDE. n. f. [vianada, Fr. vianada, Ital.] Food; meat dressed.
The belly only like a gulf remain'd,
T' th' midst of the body idle and unactive,
Still cupboarding the vianad. Shakefp.
No matter, since
They've left their vianads behind, for we have stomachs.
Wilt please you taste of what is here?
These are not fruits forbidden; no interdict
Defends the touching of these vianads pure;
Their taste no knowledge works, at least of evil. Milton.
From some sorts of food less pleasant to the taste, persons in health, and in no necessity of using such vianads, had better to abstain.
The tables in fair order spread;
Vianads of various kinds allure the taste,
Of choicest sort and favour; rich repast! Pope.
VIBRATUM. n. f. [Latin.]
1. Provision for a journey.
2. The last rites used to prepare the passing soul for its departure.
TO VIBRATE. v. a. [vibro, Latin.]
1. To brandish; to move to and fro with quick motion.
2. To make to quiver.
Breath vocalized, that is vibrated or undulated, may differently affect the lips, and impress a swift tremulous motion, which breath passing smooth doth not. Holder.
TO VIBRATE. v. n.
1. To play up and down, or to and fro.
The air, compressed by the fall and weight of the quick-silver, would repel it a little upwards, and make it vibrate a little up and down. Boyle.
Do not all fixed bodies, when heated beyond a certain degree, emit light, and shine? And is not this emission performed by the vibrating motions of their parts? Newton.
2. To quiver.
The whisper, that to greatness still too near,
Perhaps, yet vibrates on his sovereign's ear. Pope.
VIBRATION. n. f. [from vibro, Latin.] The act of moving, or being moved with quick reciprocations, or returns; the act of quivering.
It sparkled like the coal upon the altar, with the fervours of piety, the heats of devotion, and the sallies and vibrations of an harmless activity. South.
Do not the rays of light, in falling upon the bottom of the eye, excite vibrations in the tunica retina? Which vibrations being propagated along the solid fibres of the optic nerves into the brain, cause the sense of seeing. Newton.
Mild vibrations sooth the parted soul,
New to the dawning of celestial day. Thomson.
VFCAR.

VIC

VICAR. n. f. [vicarius, Latin.]
1. The incumbent of an appropriated or impropriated benefice.
Procure the vicar
To stay for me at church, 'twixt twelve and one,
To give our hearts united ceremony. Shakefp.
Yours is the prize;
The vicar my defeat, and all the village see. Dryden.
A landed youth, whom his mother would never suffer to look into a book for fear of spoiling his eyes, upon hearing the clergy decry'd, what a contempt must he entertain, not only for his vicar at home, but for the whole order. Swift.
2. One who performs the functions of another; a substitute.
An archbishop may not only excommunicate and interdict his suffragans, but his vicar-general may do the same. Ayliffe.
VICARAGE. n. f. [from vicar.] The benefice of a vicar.
This gentleman lived in his vicarage to a good old age, and having never deserted his flock, died vicar of Bray. Swift.
VICARIOUS. adj. [vicarius, Latin.] Deputed; delegated; acting in the place of another.
The soul in the body is but a subordinate efficient, and vicarious and instrumental in the hands of the Almighty, being but his substitute in this regiment of the body. Hale.
What can be more unnatural, than for a man to rebel against the vicarious power of God in his soul. Norris.
VICARSHIP. n. f. [from vicar.] The office of a vicar.
VICE. n. f. [vitium, Latin.]
1. The course of action opposite to virtue; depravity of manners; inordinate life.
No spirit more grofs to love
Vice for itself. Milton.
The foundation of error will lie in wrong measures of probability; as the foundation of vice in wrong measures of good. Locke.
2. A fault; an offence. It is generally used for an habitual fault, not for a single enormity.
No vice, so simple, but assumes
Some mark of virtue on its outward parts. Shakefp.
Yet my poor country
Shall have more vices than it had before;
More suffer by him that shall succeed. Shakefp.
Ungovern'd appetite, a brutish vice. Milton.
I cannot blame him for inveighing so sharply against the vices of the clergy in his age. Dryden.
3. The fool, or punchinello of old shows.
I'll be with you again
In a trice, like to the old vice,
Your need to sustain;
Who with dagger of lath, in his rage and his wrath,
Cries, ah, ha! to the devil. Shakefp.
His face made of brains, like a vice in a game. Tusser.
4. [Vice, Dutch.] A kind of small iron press with screws, used by workmen.
He found that marbles taught him percussion; bottle-screws,
the vice; whirlingigs, the axis in peritrochio. Arbutn. and Pope.
5. Gripe; grasp.
If I but fist him once; if he come but within my vice. Shakefp.
6. [Vice, Latin.] It is used in composition for one, qui vicem gerit, who performs, in his stead, the office of a superior, or who has the second rank in command: as a viceroi; vice-chancellor.
TO VICE. v. a. [from the noun.] To draw.
With all confidence he swears,
As he had seen't, or been an instrument
To vice you to't, that you have touch'd his queen Forbiddenly. Shakefp.
VICED. adj. [from vice.] Vitious; corrupt.
Be as a planetary plague, when Jove
Will o'er some high-wie'd city hang his poison
In the sick air. Shakefp.
VICEROY. n. f. [vicem gerens, Lat.] A lieutenant;
one who is intrusted with the power of the superior, by whom he is deputed.
All precepts concerning kings are comprehended in these;
remember thou art a man; remember thou art God's viceroi. Bacon.
Employ it in unfeigned piety towards God; in unshaken duty to his viceroi; in hearty obedience to his church. Spier.

Great Father of the gods, when for our crimes
Thou send'st some heavy judgment on the times;
Some tyrant king, the terror of his age,
The type and true viceroi of thy rage,
Thus punish. Dryden.
Thou great viceroi of the king;
In all affairs thou sole director. Swift.
VICEROY. adj. [vicereus, Lat.] Having a delegated power; acting by substitution.
Whom send I to judge thee? Whom but thee,
Viceroi son! To thee I have transfer'd
All judgment, whether in heav'n, or earth, or hell. Milton.
VICEROY. n. f. [from viceroi.] The office of a vicegerent; lieutenant; deputed power.
The authority of confidence stands founded upon its vicegerency and deputation under God. South.
VICEROY. n. f. [vicereus, Latin.] The second magistrate of the universities.
VICEROY. adj. [vicereus, Lat.] Belonging to twenty. Bailey.
VICEROY. n. f. [viceroi, French.] He who governs in place of the king with regal authority.
Shall I, for lucre of the rest unvanquish'd,
Detract so much from that prerogative,
As to be call'd but viceroi of the whole? Shakefp.
Mendoza, viceroi of Peru, was wont to say, that the government of Peru was the best place the king of Spain gave, save that it was somewhat too near Madrid. Bacon.
We are so far from having a king, that even the viceroi is generally absent four fifths of his time. Swift.
VICEROYALTY. n. f. [from viceroi.] Dignity of a viceroi.
These parts furnish out vice-royalties for the grantees; but in war are incumbances to the kingdom. Addison.
VICEROY. n. f. [Of this word I know not well the meaning or original: a vice thing is now called in vulgar language, point vice, from the French perhaps, point de vice; whence the barbarous word vicety may be derived.] Nicety; exactness.
A word not used.
Here is to the fruit of Pem,
Grafted upon Stub his stem;
With the peakish nicety. B. Johnson.
VICINITY. n. f. [vicinus, Latin.]
1. Nearness; state of being near.
The position of things is such, that there is a vicinity between agents and patients, that the one incessantly invades
the other. Hale.
The abundance and vicinity of country seats. Swift.
2. Neighbourhood.
He shall find out and recall the wandering particles home,
and fix them in their old vicinity. Rogers.
Gravity alone must have carried them downwards to the vicinity of the sun. Bentley.
VICINAGE. n. f. [vicinia, Lat.] Neighbourhood; places adjoining.
VICINAL. adj. [vicinus, Lat.] Near; neighbouring.
Opening other vicine passages might obliterate any track;
as the making of one hole in the yielding mud, defaces the print of another near it. Glenville.
VICIOUS. adj. [from vice.] See VITIOUS. Devoted to vice;
not addicted to virtue.
He heard this heavy curse,
Servants of servants on his vicious race. Milton.
VICISSITUDE. [vicissitudo, Latin.]
1. Regular change; return of the same things in the same succession.
It makes through heav'n
Grateful vicissitudes, like day and night. Milton.
The rays of light are alternately disposed to be reflected or refracted for many vicissitudes. Newton.
This succession of things upon the earth, is the result of the vicissitude of seasons, and is as constant as is the cause of that vicissitude, the sun's declination. Woodward.
2. Revolution; change.
During the course of the war, did the vicissitudes of good and bad fortune affect us with humility or thankfulness. Atterb.
Verle sweetens toil, however rude the found,
All at her work the village maiden sings;
Nor as she turns the giddy wheel around,
Revolves the sad vicissitude of things. Giffard.
VICINTI. In law vicintial rents are certain farms, for which the sheriff pays a rent to the king, and makes what profit he can of them. Vicintial writs are such writs as are triable in the county court, before the sheriff. Bailey.
VICTIM. n. f. [victima, Latin.]
1. A sacrifice; something slain for a sacrifice.
All that were authors of so black a deed,
Be sacrific'd as victims to his ghost. Denham.
And on the victim pour the ruddy wine. Dryden.
Clitumnus' waves, for triumphs after war,
The victim ox, and snowy sheep prepare. Addison.

See his head trembling, and his half-clos'd eyes. Prior.
VICTOR. n. f. [Victor, Lat.] Conqueror; vanquisher; he that gains the advantage in any contest. Victor is seldom used with a genitive, and never but with regard to some single action or person. We rarely say Alexander was victor of Darius, though we say he was victor at Arbela; but we never say he was victor of Persia.
This strange race more strange conceits did yield;
Who victor seem'd, was to his ruin brought;
Who seem'd o'erthrown, was mistress of the field. Sidney.
Some time the flood prevails, and then the wind,
Both tugging to be victors, breast to breast,
Yet neither conqueror, nor conquered. Shakefp.
Although the victor, we submit to Caesar. Shakefp.
Say where and when
Their fight; what stroke shall bruise the victor's heel. Milt.
Our Hebrew songs and harps in Babylon,
That pleas'd to well our victors ear, declare That rather Greece from us these arts deriv'd. Milton.
Their hearts at last the vanquish'd re-assume,
And now the victors fall. Denham.
In love the victors from the vanquish'd fly;
They fly that wound, and they pursue that die. Waller.
Fortune's unjust; the ruins oft the brave,
And him who should be victor, makes the slave. Dryden.
Lose not a thought on me, I'm out of danger;
Heaven will not leave me in the victor's hand. Addison.
VICTORIOUS. adj. [Victoriosus, Fr.]
1. Conquering; having obtained conquest; superiour in contest. Victory doth more often fall by error of the vanquish'd, than by the valour of the victorious. Hayward.
The great son return'd victorious with his pains. Milton.
That happy fun, said he, will rise again,
Who twice victorious did our navy see:
And I alone must view him rise in vain,
Without one ray of all his star for me. Dryden.
2. Producing conquest.
Sudden these honours shall be snatch'd away,
And curs'd for ever this victorious day. Pope.
3. Betokening conquest.
Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths;
Our bruised arms hung up for monuments. Shakefp.
VICTORIOUSLY. adv. [from victorious.] With conquest; successfully; triumphantly.
That grace will carry us, if we do not wilfully betray our succours, victoriously through all difficulties. Hammond.
VICTORIOUSNESS. n. f. [from victorious.] The state or quality of being victorious.
VICTORY. n. f. [Victoria, Lat.] Conquest; success in contest; triumph.
At his nurse's tears
He whin'd and roar'd away your victory,
That pages blush'd at him. Shakefp.
Then to the heav'n of heav'n's he shall ascend
With victory, triumphing o'er his foes. Milton.
Obedience is a complicated act of virtue, and many graces are exercised in one act of obedience. It is an act of humility, of mortification and self-denial, of charity to God, of care of the publick, of order and charity to ourselves. It is a great instance of a victory over the most refractory passions. Taylor.
VICTRESS. n. f. [from victor.] A female that conquers.
I'll lead thy daughter to a conqueror's bed;
And she shall be sole victress; Caesar's Caesar. Shakefp.
VICTUAL. n. f. [victualles, Fr. vittuaglia, Ital.] Provision
VICTUALS. n. f. of food; stores for the support of life; meat; sustenance.
He landed in these islands, to furnish himself with victuals and fresh water. Abbot's Descrip. of the World.
You had musty victuals, and he hath help to eat it: he hath an excellent stomach. Shakefp.
He was not able to keep that place three days for lack of victual. Knolles.
They, unprovided of tackling and victual, are forced to sea by a storm. K. Charles.
To VICTUAL. v. a. [from the noun.] To store with provision for food.
Talbot, farewell;
I must go victual Orleans forthwith. Shakefp.
VICTUALLER. n. f. [from victuals.] One who provides victuals.
They planted their artillery against the haven, to impeach supply of victuals; yet the English victuallers furcated not to bring all things necessary. Hayward.
Their conquest half is to the victualler due. King.
VIDELICET. adv. [Latin.] To wit; that is. This word is generally written viz.
VIDUITY. n. f. [from viduus, Lat.] Widowhood.
To VIE. v. a. [Of this word the etymology is very uncertain.]
1. To show, or practice in competition.
They vie power and expence with those that are too high. L'Estrange.

VIE

You vie happiness in a thousand easy and sweet diversions.
2. In this passage the meaning seems to be, to add; to accumulate.
She hung about my neck, and kiss on kiss
She vied to fast,
That in a twink she won me to her love. Shakefp.
To VIE. v. n. To contest; to contend; to strive for superiority.
In a trading nation, the younger sons may be placed in such a way of life, as may enable them to vie with the best of their family. Addison.
The wool, when shaded with Ancona's dye,
May with the proudest Tyrian purple vie. Addison.
Now voices over voices rise;
While each to be the loudest vies. Swift.
To VIEW. v. a. [veu, Fr. from voir, or voir.]
1. To survey; to look on by way of examination.
Go, and view the country. Jos. vii. 2.
Th' almighty father bent down his eye,
His own works and their works at once to view. Milton.
View not this spire, by measures giv'n,
To buildings mis'd by common hands. Prior.
Where'er we view some well-proportion'd dome;
No single parts unequally surprize;
All comes united to th' admiring eyes. Pope.
2. To see; to perceive by the eye.
With eyes aghast
View'd first their lamentable lot.
No more I hear, no more I view,
The phantom flies me, as unkind as you, Pope.
VIEW. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Prospect.
You should tread a course
Pretty, and full of view; yea, haply, near
The residence of Pothumus. Shakefp. Cymbeline.
Vast and indefinite views, which drown all apprehensions of the uttermost objects, are condemned by good authors. Watson.
The walls of Pluto's palace are in view. Dryden.
Cut wide views through mountains to the plain,
You'll wish your hill, or shelter'd hill again. Pope.
2. Sight; power of beholding.
Some safer resolution I've in view. Milton.
I go, to take for ever from your view,
Both the lov'd object, and the hated too. Dryden.
These things duly weigh'd, will give us a clear view into the state of human liberty. Locke.
Instruct me other joys to prize,
With other beauties charm my partial eyes;
Full in my view let all the bright abode,
And make my soul quit Abelard for God. Pope.
3. Act of seeing.
Th' unexpected found
Of dogs and men, his wakeful ear does wound;
Rous'd with the noise, he scarce believes his ear,
Willing to think th' illusions of his fear
Had giv'n this false alarm; but straight his view
Confirms that more than all he fears is true. Denham.
Objects near our view are thought greater than those of a larger size, that are more remote. Locke.
4. Sight; eye.
She was not much struck with those objects that now presented themselves to her view. Female Quixote.
5. Survey; examination by the eye.
Time never will renew,
While we too far the pleasing path pursue,
Surveying nature with too nice a view. Dryden.
6. Intellectual survey.
If the mind has made this inference by finding out the intermediate ideas, and taking a view of the connection of them, it has proceeded rationally. Locke.
7. Space that may be taken in by the eye; reach of sight.
The fame through all the neighb'ring nations flew,
When now the Trojan navy was in view. Dryden.
8. Appearance; show.
In that accomplish'd mind,
Helpt by the night, new graces find;
Which, by the splendour of her view,
Dazzl'd before we never knew. Waller.
9. Display; exhibition to the sight or mind.
To give a right view of this mistaken part of liberty, would any one be a changeling, because he is less determined by wife considerations than a wife man? Locke.
10. Prospect of interest.
No man sets himself about any thing, but upon some view or other, which serves him for a reason. Locke.
11. Intention; design.
He who sojourns in a foreign country, refers what he sees to the state of things at home; with that view he makes all his reflections. Atterbury.
With a view to commerce, in returning from his expedition against the Parthians, he passed through Egypt. Arabianist.
VIEWS.

VIG

VIEWSLESS. adj. [from view.] Unseen; not discernible by the sight.
To be imprison'd in the viewsless winds,
And blown with restless violence about
The pendant world
Each stair mysteriously was meant, nor stood
There always, but drawn up to heav'n sometimes Viewsless. Milton's Par. Lost.
Swift through the valves the visionary fair
Repas'd, and viewsless mix'd with common air. Pope.
Light-bounding from the earth, at once they rise;
Their feet half viewsless quiver in the skies. Pope.
VIGESIMATION. n. f. [vegesimus, Latin.] The act of putting to death every twentieth man.
VIGIL. n. f. [vigilia, Latin.]
VIGILANCE. n. f. devotion performed in the customary hours of rest.
So they in heaven their odes and vigils tun'd. Milton.
Shrines I, where their vigils pale-cy'd virgins keep,
And pitying faints, whose statues learn to weep. Pope.
2. A fast kept before a holiday.
He that out-lives this day, and fees old age,
Will yearly on the vigil feast his neighbours,
And say to-morrow is St. Crispian. Shakefp.
3. Service used on the night before a holiday.
No altar is to be consecrated without reliques, which placed before the church door, the vigils are to be celebrated that night before them. Stillington.
The rivals call my muse another way,
To sing their vigils for th' ensuing day. Dryden.
4. Watch; forbearance of sleep.
Though Venus and her ion shou'd spare
Her rebel heart, and never teach her care;
Yet Hymen may perforce her vigils keep,
And for another's joy suspend her sleep. Waller.
Nothing wears out a fine face like the vigils of the card-table, and those cutting passions which attend them. Addison.
VIGILANCE. n. f. [vigilance, Fr. vigilantia, Lat.]
VIGILANCY. n. f. [from vigilance.]
1. Forbearance of sleep.
Ulysses yielded unseasonably to sleep, and the strong passion for his country should have given him vigilance. Brome.
2. Watchfulness; circumspection; incessant care.
Shall Henry's conquest, Bedford's vigilance,
Your deeds of war, and all our counsel die? Shakefp.
No post is free, no place,
That guard and most unusual vigilance
Does not attend my taking. Shakefp. K. Lear.
In their military care, there were few remarkable occasions under the duke, saving his continual vigilance, and voluntary hazard of his person. Watson.
Of these the vigilance
I dread; and to elude, thus wrapp'd in mist
Of midnight vapour, glide obscure. Milton.
We are enabled to subdue all other creatures; and use for our behoof the strength of the ox, the sagacity and vigilance of the dog. Ray.
3. Guard; watch.
In at this gate none pass
The vigilance here plac'd, but such as come
Well known from heav'n. Milton.
VIGILANT. adj. [vigilans, Latin.] Watchful; circumspect; diligent; attentive.
They have many prayers, but every of them very short, as if they were darts thrown out with a kind of sudden quickness; lest that vigilant and erect attention of mind, which in prayer is very necessary, should be wasted or dulled through continuance. Hooker.
Take your places, and be vigilant:
If any noise or soldier you perceive,
Let us have knowledge. Shakespeare.
The treasurer, as he was vigilant in such cases, had notice of the clerk's expiration so soon, that he procured the king to send a message to the master of the rolls. Clarend.
VIGILANTLY. adv. [from vigilant.] Watchfully; attentively; circumspectly.
Thus in peace, either of the kings to vigilantly observed every motion of the others, as if they had lived upon the alarm. Hayward.
VIGOROUS. adj. [from vigor, Latin.] Forcible; not weakened; full of strength and life.
Fam'd for his valour young;
At sea successful, vigorous and strong! Waller.
Their appetite is not dull'd by being gratified, but returns always fresh and vigorous. Atterbury.
VIGOROUSLY. adv. [from vigorous.] With force; forcibly; without weakness.
The prince had two giant ships;
With his one to vigorously he press'd,
And flew so home, they could not rise again. Dryden.
If the fire burns bright and vigorously, it is no matter by what means it was at first kindled. South.

VIL

That prince whose cause you espouse so vigorously, is the principal in the war, and you but a second. Swift.
VIGOROUSNESS. n. f. [from vigor.] Force; strength.
He hath given excellent sufferance and vigorousness to the sufferers, arming them with strange courage, heroic fortitude, invincible resolution, and glorious patience. Taylor.
VIGOUR. n. f. [vigor, Lat.]
1. Force; strength.
Sometimes went and sometimes ran,
With supple joints, as lively vigour led. Milton.
Shame to be overcome,
Wou'd utmost vigour raise, and rais'd unite. Milton.
Pernicious fire wither'd all their strength,
And of their wonted vigour left them drain'd. Milton.
The mind and spirit remains Invincible, and vigour soon returns. Milton.
No deep within her gulf can hold Immortal vigour. Milton.
The vigour of this arm was never vain:
Witness these heaps of slaughter. Dryden.
2. Mental force; intellectual ability.
3. Energy; efficacy.
In the fruitful earth
His beams, unactive else, their vigour find. Milton.
How does Cartesius all his finews strain,
The earth's attractive vigour to explain? Blackmore.
VILE. adj. [vil, Fr. vilis, Lat.] Base; mean; worthless; sordid; despicable.
Our case were miserable, if that wherewith we most endeavour to please God, were in his sight so vile and despicable as men's disdainful speech would make it. Hooker.
I disdainful scorn'd, and craved death,
Rather than I would be so vile esteem'd. Shakefp.
He to-day that sheds his blood with me,
Shall be my brother; he he ne'er so vile,
This day shall gentle his condition. Shakefp.
The inhabitants account gold but as a vile thing. Abbot.
That sinful creature man elected is,
And in our place the heavens possess he must;
Vile man, begot of clay, and born of dust. Fairfax.
A spontaneous production is against matter of fact; a thing without example not only in man, but the vilest of weeds. Bentl.
2. Morally impure; wicked.
Restor'd by thee, vile as I am, to place
Of new acceptance. Milton.
VILED. adj. [from vile, whence revile.] Abusive; scurrilous; defamatory.
He granted life to all except to one, who had used vil'd speeches against king Edward. Hayward.
VILELY. adv. [from vile.] Basely; meanly; shamefully.
The Volicians vilely yielded the town. Shakefp.
How can I
Forget my Hector, treated with dishonour,
Depriv'd of funeral rites, and vilely dragg'd,
A bloody corse, about the walls of Troy. A. Philips.
VILENESS. n. f. [from vile.]
1. Baseness; meanness; despicableness.
His vileness us shall never awe:
But here our sports shall be:
Such as the golden world first saw,
Most innocent and free. Drayton.
Reflect on the essential vileness of matter, and its impotence to conserve its own being. Creech.
Considering the vileness of the clay, I wondered that no tribune of that age durst ever venture to ask the potter, what dost thou make? Swift.
2. Moral or intellectual baseness.
Then, vileness of mankind!
Could one, alas! repeat me good or great,
Wash my pale body, or bewail my fate? Prior.
To VILIFY. v. a. [from vile.] To debase; to defame; to make contemptible.
Tomalin could not abide,
To hear his sovereign vilify'd. Drayton.
Their maker's image
Forlook them, when themselves they vilify'd
To serve ungovern'd appetite; and took His image whom they serv'd. Milton.
The displeasure of their prince, those may expect, who would put in practice all methods to vilify his person. Addison.
Many passions dispose us to deprecate and vilify the merit of one rising in the esteem of mankind. Addison.
VILL. n. f. [vill, Fr. villa, Latin.] A village; a small collection of houses. Little in use.
This book gives an account of the manurable lands in every manor, town, or vill. Hale.
VILLA. n. f. [villa, Lat.] A country seat.
The antient Romans lay the foundations of their villas and palaces within the very borders of the sea. Addison.
All vast possessions; just the same the case,
Whether you call them villa, park, or chase. Pope.
29 F VILLAGE.

VIL

VILLAGE. n. f. [village, Fr.] A small collection of houses in the country, less than a town.
Beggars, with roaring voices, from low farms,
Or pelting villages, sheep coats, and mills,
Inforce their charity. Shakespeare.
The early village cock
Hath twice done salutation to the morn.
You have many enemies, that know not
Why they are for; but, like the village curs,
Bark when their fellows do. Shakespeare.
The country villages were burnt down to the ground. Knolles.
Those village-words give us a mean idea of the thing. Dryd.
Seam'd o'er with wounds which his own fabre gave,
In the vile habit of a village slave. Pope.
VILLAGER. n. f. [from village.] An inhabitant of the village.
Brutus had rather be a villager,
Than to repute himself a son of Rome
Under such hard conditions. Shakespeare.
When once her eye
Hath met the virtue of this magick dust,
I shall appear some harmless villager,
Whom thrift keeps up about his country gear. Milton.
If there are conveniences of life, which common use reaches not, it is not reason to reject them, because every villager doth not know them. Locke.
VILLAGERY. n. f. [from village.] District of villages.
Robin Goodfellow, are you not he,
That fright the maidens of the villagery? Shakespeare.
VILLAIN. n. f. [villain, Fr. villanus, low Latin.]
1. One who held by a base tenure.
The Irish inhabiting the lands fully conquered, being in condition of slaves and villains, did render a greater revenue, than if they had been made the king's free subjects. Davies.
2. A wicked wretch.
We were prevented by a dozen armed knights, or rather villains, who, using this time of their extreme feebleness, all together set upon them.
O villain! villain! his very opinion in the letter. Abhorred villain! unnatural, detested, brutish villain! Shakespeare.
What in the world,
That names me traitor, villain-like he lies. Shakespeare.
He was stabbed to the heart by the hand of a villain, upon the mere impious pretence of his being odious to the parliament. Clarendon.
Calm thinking villains, whom no faith could fix;
Of crooked counsels, and dark politicks. Pope.
VILLANAGE. n. f. [from villain.]
1. The state of a villain; base servitude.
They exercise most bitter tyranny,
Upon the parts brought into their bondage:
No wretchedness is like to sinful villanage. Fairy Queen.
Upon every such surrender and grant, there was but one freholder, which was the lord himself; all the rest were but tenants in villanage, and were not fit to be sworn in juries. Davies.
2. Baseness; infamy.
If in thy smoke it ends, their glories shine;
But infamy and villanage are thine. Dryden.
To VILLANIZE. v. a. [from villain.] To debase; to degrade;
to defame.
Were virtue by descent, a noble name
Could never villanize his father's fame;
But, as the first, the last of all the line,
Would, like the sun, ev'n in descending shine. Dryden.
These are the fools, whose stolidity can baffle all arguments; whose glory is in their shame, in the debasing and villanizing of mankind to the condition of beasts. Bentley.
VILLANOUS. adj. [from villain.]
1. Base; vile; wicked.
2. Sorry.
Thou art my son; I have partly thy mother's word, partly my own opinion; but chiefly a villanous trick of thine eye doth warrant me. Shakespeare.
3. It is used by Shakespeare to exaggerate any think detestable.
We shall lose our time,
And all be turn'd to barnacles or apes,
With foreheads villanous low. Shakespeare. Tempest.
VILLANOUSLY. adv. [from villainous.] Wickedly; basely.
The wandering Numidian falsified his faith, and villanously flew Selymes the king, as he was bathing himself. Knolles.
VILLANOUSNESS. n. f. [from villanous.] Baseness; wickedness.
VILLANY. n. f. [from villain; villannie, old French.]
1. Wickedness; baseness; depravity.
Trust not those cunning waters of his eyes;
For villany is not without such a rheum:
And he, long traded in it, makes it seem Like rivers of remorse and innocence. Shakespeare.
He is the prince's jester; and the commendation is not in his wit, but in his villany. Shakespeare.
2. A wicked action; a crime.

VIN

No villany, or flagitious action was ever yet committed;
but a lie was first or last the principal engine to effect it. South.
Such villanies rous'd Horace into wrath;
And 'tis more noble to pursue his path,
Than an old tale. Dryden.
VILLA'TICK. adj. [villaticus, Lat.] Belonging to villages.
Evening dragon came,
Affailant on the perched roofs,
And nests in order rang'd,
Of tame villatick fowl. Milton.
VILLI. n. f. [Latin.]
In anatomy, are the same as fibres; and in botany, small hairs like the grain of plush or flag, with which, as a kind of excrecence, some trees do abound. Quincy.
VILLOUS. adj. [villosus, Lat.] Shaggy; rough.
The liquor of the stomach, which with fasting grows sharp, and the quick sensation of the inward villous coat of the stomach, seem to be the cause of the sense of hunger. Arb.
VIMINEOUS. adj. [vimineus, Latin.] Made of twigs.
As in the hive's vimineous dome,
Ten thousand bees enjoy their home;
Each does her studious action vary,
To go and come, to fetch and carry. Prior.
VINCIBLE. adj. [from vincere, Lat.] Conquerable; supe-rable.
He not vincible in spirit, and well assured that shortness of provision would in a short time draw the feditious to shorter limits, drew his sword. Hayward.
Because 'twas absolutely in my power to have attended more heedfully, there was liberty in the principle, the mistake which influenced the action was vincible. Norris.
VINCIBLENESS. n. f. [from vincible.] Liableness to be overcome. Ditt.
VINCTURE. n. f. [vinctura, Lat.] A binding. Baile.
VINDEMIAL. adj. [vindemia, Latin.] Belonging to a vintage.
To VINDEMIATE. v. n. [vindemia, Latin.] To gather the vintage.
Now vindemiate, and take your bees towards the expiration of this month. Boeyn.
VINDEMIATION. n. f. [vindemia, Lat.] Grape-gathering. Baile.
To VINDICATE. v. a. [vindicare, Lat.]
1. To justify; to support; to maintain.
Where the respondent denies any proposition, the opponent must directly vindicate and confirm that proposition; i. e. he must make that proposition the conclusion of his next syl-logism. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
2. To revenge; to avenge.
We ought to have added, how far an holy war is to be pursued; whether to enforce a new belief, and to vindicate or punish infidelity? Bacon.
Man is not more inclinable to obey God than man; but God is more powerful to exact subjection, and to vindicate rebellion. Pearson on the Creed.
The more numerous the offenders are, the more his justice is concerned to vindicate the affront. Tiltsen.
Assamble ours, and all the Theban race,
To vindicate on Athens thy disgrace. Dryden.
3. To assert; to claim with efficacy.
Never any touch'd upon this way, which our poet justly has vindicated to himself. Dryden's Pref. to Ovid.
The beauty of this town, without a fleet,
From all the world shall vindicate her trade. Dryden.
4. To clear; to protect.
God's ways of dealing with us, are by proposition of terrors and promises. To these is added the authority of the commander, vindicated from our neglect by the interposition of the greatest signs and wonders, in the hands of his prophets, and of his son. Hammond.
I may assert eternal providence,
And vindicate the ways of God to man. Milton.
VINDICATION. n. f. [vindication, Fr. from vindicare.] Defence; assertion; justification.
This is no vindication of her conduct. She still acts a mean part, and, through fear, becomes an accomplice, in endeavouring to betray the Greeks. Brown.
VINDICATIVE. adj. [from vindicare.] Revengeful; given to revenge.
He, in heat of action,
Is more vindicative than jealous love. Shakespeare.
Publick revenges are for the most part fortunate; but in private revenges it is not so. Vindicative persons live the life of witches, who, as they are mischievous, so end they unfortunate. Bacon.
The fruits of adust choler, and the evaporations of a vindicative spirit. Howel.
Do not too many believe no zeal to be spiritual, but what is censorious or vindicative? Whereas no zeal is spiritual, that is not also charitable. Sprat's Sermon.
Distinguish betwix a passion purely vindicative, and those counsels where divine justice avenges the innocent. L'Estrange.

VINDICATOR.

VIN

VINDICATOR. n. f. [from vindicare.] One who vindicates;
an assertor.
He treats tyranny, and the vices attending it, with the utmost rigour; and consequently a noble soul is better pleas'd with a jealous vindicator of Roman liberty, than with a temperizing poet. Dryden.
VINDICATORY. adj. [from vindicare.]
1. Punitory; performing the office of vengeance.
The afflictions of Job were no vindictory punishments to take vengeance of his sins, but probatory chastisements to make trial of his graces. Bramhall's Answer to Hobbs.
2. Defensory; justificatory.
VINDICTIVE. adj. [from vindicta, Latin.] Given to revenge;
revengeful.
I am vindictive enough to repel force by force. Dryden.
Augustus was of a nature too vindictive, to have contented himself with so small a revenge. Dryden.
VINE. n. f. [vinca, Latin.] The plant that bears the grape.
The flower consists of many leaves placed in a regular order, and expanding in form of a rose; the ovary, which is situated in the bottom of the flower, becomes a round fruit, full of juice, and contains many small stones in each.
The tree is climbing, sending forth claspers at the joints, by which it fastens itself to what plant stands near it, and the fruit is produced in bunches. The species are, 1. The wild vine, commonly called the claret grape. 2. The July grape. 3. The Corinth grape, vulgarly called the currant grape. 4. The parley leav'd grape. 5. The miller's grape. This is called the Burgundy in England; the leaves of this sort are very much powdered with white in the spring, from whence it had the name of miller's grape. 6. Is what is called in Burgundy Pineau, and at Orleans, Auverna: it makes very good wine. 7. The white chasselas, or royal muscadine: it is a large white grape; the juice is very rich. 8. The black chasselas, or black muscadine; the juice is very rich. 9. The red chasselas, or red muscadine. 10. The burlake grape.
11. The white muscat, or white Frontinac. 12. The red Frontinac. 13. The black Frontinac. 14. The damask grape. 15. The white sweet water. 16. The black sweet water. 17. The white muscadine. 18. The raisin grape.
19. The Greek grape. 20. The pearl grape. 21. The St. Peter's grape, or helperian. 22. The malmsey grape.
23. The malmsey muscadine. 24. The red Hamburg grape. 25. The black Hamburg, or warmer grape. 26. The Switzerland grape. 27. The white muscat, or Frontinac of Alexandria; called also the Jerusalem muscat and gros muscat. 28. The red muscat, or Frontinac of Alexandria.
29. The white melie grape. 30. The white morillon.
31. The Alicante grape. 32. The white Auvernat. 33. The grey Auvernat. 34. The raisin muscat. The late duke of Tuscany, who was very curious in collecting all the sorts of Italian and Greek grapes into his vineyards, was possided of upwards of three hundred several varieties. Miller.
The vine-prop elm, the poplar never dry. Fairy Queen.
In her days every man shall eat in safety,
Under his own vine, what he plants. Shakespeare.
The captain left of the poor to be vine-dressers. 2 Kings xxv.
Depending vines the shelving cavern screen,
With purple clusters blushing through the green. Pope.
VINEGAR. n. f. [vinagre, Fr.]
1. Wine grown sour.
Vinegar is made by setting the vessel of wine against the hot sun; and therefore vinegar will not burn, much of the finer parts being exhaled. Bacon.
Heav'n's blest beam turns vinegar more four. Pope.
2. Any thing really or metaphorically sour.
Some laugh like parrots at a bag-piper,
And others of such vinegar aspect,
That they'll not show their teeth in way of smile. Shakespeare.
VINNEVED, or VINNEY. adj. Mouldy. Ainsworth.
VINEYARD. n. f. [vinetarius, Saxon.] A ground planted with vines.
Let us not live in France; let us quit all,
And give our vineyards to a barbarous people. Shakespeare.
Though some had so forfeited in the vineyards, and with the wines, that they had been left behind, the generosity of the Spaniards sent them all home again. Clarendon.
VINOUS. adj. [from vinum, Latin.] Having the qualities of wine; consisting of wine.
The motion of the oily drops may be in part due to some partial solution made by the vinous spirit. Boyle.
Water will imbibe
The small remains of spirit, and acquire
A vinous flavour. Philips.
VINTAGE. n. f. [vinage, Fr.] The produce of the vine for the year.
The best wines are in the driest vintages. Bacon.
Our first succels in war make Bacchus crown,
And half the vintage of the year our own. Wallr.
VINTAGER. n. f. [from vintage.] He who gathers the vintage. Ainsworth.
VINTNER. n. f. [from vinum, Lat.] One who sells wine.

VIO

The vintner may draw what religion he pleases. Howel.
The vintner, by mixing poison with his wines, destroys more lives than any malignant disease. Swift.
VINTRY. n. f. The place where wine is sold. Ainsworth.
VIOL. n. f. [violle, Fr. viola, Ital.] A fringed instrument of music.
My tongue's use is to me no more,
Than an untringed viol, or a harp. Shakespeare.
To strain a string, stop it with the finger, as in the necks of lutes and viols. Bacon.
Loud o'er the rest Cremona's trumpet doth sound;
Me softer airs befit, and softer strings
Of lute, or viol, still more apt for mournful things. Milton.
VIOLABLE. adj. [from violabilis, Lat.] Such as may be violated or hurt.
VIOLACEOUS. adj. [from viola, Lat.] Resembling violets.
To VIOLATE. v. a. [violare, Lat.]
1. To injure; to hurt.
I question thy bold entrance,
Employ'd to violate the sleep of those Whose dwelling God hath planted here in bliss. Milton.
Kindness for man, and pity for his fate,
May mix with bliss, and yet not violate. Dryden.
Cease
To know what known will violate thy peace. Pope.
2. To infringe; to break any thing venerable.
Some of violated vows
Twixt the souls of friend and friend. Shakespeare.
Those offences which are by their special qualities breaches of supernatural laws, do also, for that they are generally evil, violate in general that principle of reason, which willett universally to fly from evil. Hooker.
3. To injure by irreverence.
I would violate my own arm rather than a church. Brown.
Forbid to violate the sacred fruit. Milton.
4. To ravish; to deflower.
The Sabines violated charms
Obscur'd the glory of his rising arms. Prior.
VIOLATION. n. f. [violatio, Lat.]
1. Infringement or injury of something sacred.
Their right conceit that to perjury vengeance is due, was not without good effect, as touching the course of their lives, who feared the wilful violation of oaths. Hooker.
Men, who had no other guide but their reason, considered the violation of an oath to be a great crime. Addison.
2. Rape; the act of deflowering.
If your pure maidens fall into the hand
Of hot and forcing violation. Shakespeare.
VIOLATOR. n. f. [violator, Lat.]
1. One who injures or infringes something sacred.
May such places, built for divine worship, derive a blessing upon the head of the builders, as lasting as the curse that never fails to rest upon the sacrilegious violators of them. South.
2. A ravisher.
Angelo is an adul'trous thief,
An hypocrite, a virgin violator. Shakespeare.
How does the subject herself to the violator's upbraidings and insults. Clarissu.
VIOLENCE. n. f. [violencia, Latin.]
1. Force; strength applied to any purpose.
To be imprison'd in the viewless wind,
And blown with restless violence about. Shakespeare.
All the elements
At least had gone to wreck, disturb'd and torn
With violence of this conflict, had not soon
Th' eternal hung his golden scales. Milton.
2. An attack; an assault; a murder.
A noise did scare me from the tomb;
And she, too desperate, would not go with me:
But, as it seems, did violence on herself. Shakespeare.
3. Outrage; unjust force.
Grieved at his heart, when looking down he saw
The whole earth fill'd with violence; and all flesh Corrupting each their way. Milton's Par. Lost.
4. Eagerness; vehemence.
That seal
You ask with such violence, the king
With his own hand gave me. Shakespeare.
5. Injury; infringement.
We cannot, without offering violence to all records, divine and human, deny an universal deluge. Burnet.
6. Forcible deforation.
VIOLENT. adj. [violentus, Lat.]
1. Forcible; acting with strength.
A violent cross wind blows. Milton.
2. Produced or continued by force.
The posture we find them in, according to his doctrine, must be look'd upon as unnatural and violent; and no violent state can be perpetual. Burnet.
3. Not natural, but brought by force.
Conqueror death discovers them scarce men;
Violent or shameful death their due reward. Milton.
4. Un-

VIR

4. Unjustly assailant; murderous.
Some violent hands were laid on Humphry's life. Shakefp.
A foe subtle or violent. Milton.
5. Unfeanably vehement.
We might be reckoned fierce and violent, to tear away that, which, if our mouths did condemn, our consciences would form and repine thereat. Hooker.
The covetous extortioner should remember, that such violents shall not take heaven, but hell by force. Decay of Piety.
6. Extorted; not voluntary.
Vows made in pain, are violent and void. Milton.
VIOLENTLY, adv. [from violent.] With force; forcibly; vehemently.
Temp'rately proceed to what you would Thus violently redress. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
Flame burneth more violently towards the sides, than in the midst. Bacon.
Ancient privileges must not, without great necessities, be revoked, nor forfeitures be exacted violently, nor penal laws urged rigorously. Taylor's Rule of living holy.
- VIOLET, n. f. [viollette, Fr. viola, Lat.] A plant.
It hath a polypetalous anomalous flower, somewhat resembling the papilionaceous flower; for its two upper petals represent the standard, the two side ones the wings; but the lower one, which ends in a tail, resembles the iris. Out of the empalement arises the pointal, which becomes a three-cornered fruit opening into three parts, and full of roundish seeds. There are nine species. Miller.
When daisies pied, and violets blue,
Do paint the meadows much bedight. Shakefp.
Sweet echo, sweetest nymph that liv'st unseen,
By flow Meander's margent green,
And in the violet-embroider'd vale. Milton.
It alters not our simple idea, whether we think that blue be in the violet itself, or in our mind only; and only the power of producing it by the texture of its parts, to be in the violet itself. Locke.
- VIOLIN, n. f. [violon, Fr. from viol.] A fiddle; a stringed instrument of musick.
Praise with timbrels, organs, flutes;
Praise with violins, and lutes. Sandys.
Sharp violins proclaim
Their jealous pangs, and desperation,
For the fair disdainful dame. Dryden.
- VIOLINIST, n. f. [from viol.] A player on the viol.
- VIOLOCE'LLO, n. f. [Italian.] A stringed instrument of musick.
- VIPER, n. f. [vipera, Lat.]
1. A serpent of that species which brings its young alive, of which most are poisonous.
A viper came out of the heat, and fastened on his hand. Acts xxviii. 3.
He'll gall of asps with thirly lips suck in;
The viper's deadly teeth shall pierce his skin. Sandys.
Viper-catchers have a remedy, in which they place such great confidence, as to be no more afraid of the bite of a viper, than of a common puncture. This is no other than axungia viperina, presently rubbed into the wound. Derham.
2. Any thing mischievous.
Where is this viper,
That would depopulate the city, and
Be every man himself? Shakefp. Coriolanus.
- VIPERINE, n. f. [viperinus, Lat.] Belonging to a viper.
- VIPEROUS, adj. [viperous, Lat. from viper.] Having the qualities of a viper.
My tender years can tell,
Civil dissention is a viperous worm,
That gnaws the bowels of the commonwealth. Shakefp.
We are peremp'ry to dispatch
This viperous traitor. Shakefp.
Some viperous critick may bereave
Th' opinion of thy worth for some defect. Daniel's Musaph.
- VIPER'S BUGLOSS, n. f. [echium, Lat.] A plant.
The characters are, the cup of the flower is large, and divided into five long slender segments; the flower consists of one leaf, is shaped like a funnel, and somewhat inflected, having its upper part stretched, but in a greater length than the lower: the upper part, or galea of the flower, is divided into two; and the lower part, or beard, into three parts: in the middle of the flower are produced five stamina (or threads) which are reflexed. Each flower is succeeded by four seeds, which are in form of a viper's head. Miller.
- VIPER'S GRASS, n. f. [scorzonera, Lat.] A plant.
It hath a semi-flosculous flower, consisting of many half florets, which rest upon the embryos, which are included in one common empalement, which is scaly: the embryos afterwards become oblong seeds, which are furnished with down. Miller.
- VIRAGO, n. f. [Latin.]
1. A female warrior; a woman with the qualities of a man.
Melpomene represented like a virago or manly lady, with a majestic and grave countenance. Peacham.

VIR

- To arms! to arms! the fierce virago cries,
And swift as lightning to the combat flies. Pope.
2. It is commonly used in detestation for an impudent turbulent woman.
VIR'ELAY, n. f. [viurelay, viurelai, Fr.] A sort of little ancient French poem, that consisted only of two rhymes and short verses, with strops. L'Acad.
The mournful muse in mirth now lift ne mask,
As she was wont in youth and summer days;
But if thou algate lust like viurelays,
And looser songs of love to underlong,
The band of flutes began to play,
To which a lady sung a viurelay. Spenser.
And still at ev'ry close she would repeat
The burden of the song, the daisy is so sweet. Dryden.- VIRENT, adj. [virens, Lat.] Green; not faded.
In these, yet fresh and virent, they carve out the figures of men and women. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- VIRGE, n. f. [virga, Lat. better verge, from verge, French.] A dean's mace.
Suppose him now a dean compleat,
Devoutly lolling in his seat;
The silver virge, with decent pride,
Stuck underneath his cushion side. Swift.
- VIRGIN, n. f. [virgo, Fr. virgo, Lat.]
1. A maid; a woman unacquainted with men.
This aspect of mine hath fear'd the valiant;
The best regarded virgins of our clime
Have lov'd it too. Shakefp.
Senseless bauble!
Art thou a sedary for this act, and look't
So virgin-like without? Shakefp. Cymbeline.
The damsel was very fair, and a virgin. Gen. xxiv. 16.
Angelo is an adulterous thief,
An hypocrite, a virgin violator.
Much less can that have any place,
At which a virgin hides her face. Shakefp.
- 2. A woman not a mother. Unusual. Cowley.
Liket to Ceres in her prime,
Yet virgin of Proserpina from Jove. Milton.
- 3. Any thing untouched or unmingled.

I carried from thee, my dear; and my true lip
Hath virgin'd it e'er since. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
- VIRGINAL, adj. [from virgin.] Maiden; maidenly; pertaining to a virgin.
On the earth more fair was never seen,
Of chastity and honour virginal. Fairy Queen.
Tears virginal
Shall be to me even as the dew to fire;
And beauty, that the tyrant oft reclaims,
Shall to my flaming wrath be oil and flax. Shakefp.
Purity is a special part of this superstructure, restraining of all desires of the flesh within the known limits of conjugal or virginal chastity. Hammond's Fundamentals.
- To VIRGINAL, v. n. To pat; to strike as on the virginal.
A cant word.
Still *virginal*ling upon thy palm. Shakefp.
- VIRGINAL, n. f. [more usually virginals.] A musical instrument so called, because commonly used by young ladies.
The musician hath produced two means of straining strings. The one is stopping them with the finger, as in the necks of lutes and viols; the other is the shortness of the string, as in harps and virginals. Bacon.
- VIRGINITY, n. f. [virginitas, Lat.] Maidenhead; unacquaintance with man.
You do impeach your modesty too much,
To trust the opportunity of night,
And the ill counsel of a desert place,
With the rich worth of your virginity. Shakefp.
Natural virginity of itself is not a state more acceptable to God; but that which is chosen in order to the conveniences of religion, and separation from worldly incumbrances. Taylor.
- VIRILE, n. f. [virilis, Lat.] Belonging to man; not puerile; not feminine. VIRILITY.

VIR

- VIRILITY, n. f. [virilité, Fr. virilitas, Lat. from virile.]
1. Manhood; character of man.
The lady made generous advances to the borders of virility. Rambler.- 2. Power of procreation.

I should not urge it half so faithfully. Shakefp. Cæsar.
Virtuous and holy, be thou conqueror. Shakefp.
What she wills to do or say,
Is wisest, virtuous, discreetest, best. Milton.
Favour'd of heav'n, who finds
One virtuous rarely found,
That in domestick good combines:
Happy that house! his way to peace is smooth. Milton.
  2. [Applied to women.] Chaste.
Mistress Ford, the modest wife, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous fool to her husband! Shakefp.
  3. Done in consequence of moral goodness.
Nor love is always of a vicious kind,
But oft to virtuous acts inflames the mind. Dryden.
  4. Efficacious; powerful.
With one virtuous touch, th' arch-chemic sun,
Produces, with terrestrial humour mix'd,
Here in the dark, so many precious things. Milton.
  5. Having wonderful or eminent properties.
Out of his hand,
That virtuous steel he rudely snatch'd away. Fairy Queen.
Lifting up his virtuous staff on high,
He smote the sea, which calmed was with speed. Spenser.
He own'd that virtuous ring and glass. Milton.
  6. Having medicinal qualities.
Some observe that there is a virtuous bezoar, and another without virtue; the virtuous is taken from the beast that feedeth where there are theriacal herbs; and that without virtue, from those that feed where no such herbs are. Bacon.
The ladies fought around
For virtuous herbs, which, gather'd from the ground,
They squeeze'd the juice; and cooling ointment made. Dryd.
  - VIR'TUOUSLY, adv. [from virtuous.] In a virtuous manner; according to the rules of virtue.
The Gods are my witnesses, I desire to do virtuously. Sidney.
In sum, they taught the world no less virtuously how to die, than they had done before how to live. Hooker.
They that mean virtuously, and yet do so,
The devil their virtue tempts not, they tempt heav'n. Shak.
Not from grey hairs authority doth flow,
Nor from bald heads, nor from a wrinkled brow;
But our past life, when virtuously spent,
Must to our age those happy fruits present. Denham.
The coffeeman has a little daughter four years old, who has been virtuously educated. Addison.
  - VIR'TUOUSNESS, n. f. [from virtuous.] The state or character of being virtuous.
Many other adventures are intermeddled; as the love of Britomert, and virtuousness of Belphebe; and the lasciviousness of Helenora. Spenser.
  - VIR'ULENCE, n. f. [from virulent.] Mental poison; malignity; acrimony of temper; bitterness.
Disputes in religion are managed with virulence and bitterness. Decay of Piety.
It infills into their minds the utmost virulence, instead of that charity which is the perfection and ornament of religion. Addison.
The whigs might easily have maintained a majority among the clergy, if they had not too much encouraged this intemperance of speech, and virulence of pen, in the most profane of their party. Swift.

VIS

VI'RU'LENT. adj. [virulent, Fr. virulentus, Lat.]

1. Poisonous; venomous.
2. Poisoned in the mind; bitter; malignant.

VI'RU'LENTLY. adv. [from virulent.] Malignantly; with bitterness.

VI'SAGE. n. f. [visage, Fr. visaggio, Italian.] Face; countenance; look. It is now rarely used but with some ideas of dislike or horroir.

Phebe doth behold
Her silver visage in the watry glafs,
Decking with liquid pearl the bladed grafs. Shakefp.
When she shall hear this of thee, with her nails
She'll flea thy wolfish visage. Shakefp. K. Lear.

Whereto serves mercy,
But to confront the visage of offence. Shakefp. Hamlet.
With hostile frown,
And visage all inflam'd, first thus began. Milton.

By the rout, that made the hideous roar,
His goary visage down the stream was sent;
Down the swift Hebrus to the Lesbian shore. Milton.
Love and beauty still that visage grace;

Death cannot fright 'em from their wonted place. Waller.
To VI'SCERATE. v. a. [viscera, Latin.] To embowel; to exentrate.

VI'SCID. adj. [viscidus, Latin.] Glutinous; tenacious.

VI'SCIDITY. n. f. [from viscid.] Glutinous; tenacious.

1. Glutinousness; tenacity; ropiness.

This motion in some human creatures may be weak, in respect to the viscid of what is taken, so as not to be able to propel it. Arbutnot.

2. Glutinous concretion.

Catharticks of mercurials precipitate the viscidities by their styplicity. Floyer.

VI'SCIDITY. n. f. [viscidus, Fr. from viscos.]

1. Glutinousness; tenacity.

The air being mixed with the animal fluids, determines their condition as to rarity, density, viscid, tenuity. Arbutnot.

2. A glutinous substance.

A tenuous emanation, or continued effluvia, after some distance, retracteth unto itself, as is observable in drops of syrops, and seminal viscidities. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

VI'SCOUNT. n. f. [vicecomes, Lat.]

Viscount signifies as much as sheriff; between which two words there is no other difference, but that the one comes from our conquerors the Normans, and the other from our ancestors the Saxons. Viscount also signifies a degree of nobility next to an earl, which is an old name of office, but a new one of dignity, never heard of amongst us, till Henry VI. his days. Cowel.

VI'SCOUNTESS. n. f. [from viscount.] Viscount and viscountess are pronounced vicount and vicountess.] The lady of a vic-count; a peeress of the fourth order.

VI'SCOUS. adj. [visqueux, Fr. viscosus, Lat.] Glutinous; sticky; tenacious.

The cause of the scouring virtue of nitre is, that it hath a subtle spirit, which severeth and divideth any thing that is foul and viscous. Bacon.

Holly is of so viscous a juice as they make bird-lime of the bark. Bacon.

VI'SIBILITY. n. f. [visibilitas, Fr. from visibile.]

1. The state or quality of being perceptible by the eye.

The colours of outward objects brought into a darkened room, do much depend for their visibility, upon the dimness of the light they are beheld by. Boyle.

2. State of being apparent, or openly discoverable; conspicuousness.

They produced this as an instance against the perpetual visibility of the church, and he brings it to prove that it ceased to be a true church. Stillingfleet.

In these, the visibility and example of our virtues will chiefly consist. Rogers's Sermons.

VI'SIBLE. n. f. [visibile, Fr. visibilis, Lat.]

1. Perceptible by the eye.

Visibles work upon a looking-glass, which is like the pupil of the eye; and audibles upon the places of echo, which resemble the cavern of the ear. Bacon.

On this mount he appeared; under this tree
Stood visible;
Here with him at this fountain talk'd. Milton.

Each thought was visible, that roll'd within,
As through a crystal case the figur'd hours are seen. Dryden.

A long series of ancestors shews the native lustre with great advantage; but if he degenerate from his line, the least spot is visible on ermine. Dryden.

2. Discovers to the eye.

If that the heavens do not their visible spirits
Send quickly down to tame the vile offences,
Humanity must perforce prey on itself,
Like monsters of the deep. Shakefp. K. Lear.

3. Apparent; open; conspicuous.

The factions at court were greater, or more visible than before. Clarendon.

VIS

VI'SIBLENESS. n. f. [from visibile.] State or quality of being visible.

VI'SIBLY. adv. [from visibile.] In a manner perceptible by the eye.

The day being visibly governed by the sun, is a little longer than the revolution of the equator; so much as is occasioned by the advance of the sun in his annual contrary motion along the ecliptick. Holder.

By the head we make known more visibly our supplications, our threatnings; enough to see the face, and to understand the mind at half a word. Dryden.

VISION. n. f. [visio, Fr. visio, Latin.]

1. Sight; the faculty of seeing.

Anatomists, when they have taken off from the bottom of the eye that outward and most thick coat called the dura mater, can then see through the thinner coats, the pictures of objects lively painted thereon. And these pictures, propagated by motion along the fibres of the optic nerves into the brain, are the cause of vision. Newton's Opticks.

These theorems being admitted into optics, there would be scope enough of handling that science voluminously, after a new manner; not only by teaching those things which tend to the perfection of vision, but also by determining mathematically all kinds of phenomena of colours which could be produced by refractions. Newton's Opticks.

2. The act of seeing.

Visio in the next life is the perfecting of faith in this;
or faith here is turned into vision there, as hope into enjoying. Hammond's Pract. Catechism.

3. A supernatural appearance; a spectre; a phantom.

The day seems long, but night is odious;
No sleep, but dreams; no dreams, but visions strange. Sidney.

Last night the very gods shew'd me a vision. Shakefp.
God's mother deigned to appear to me;

And, in a vision, full of majesty,
Will'd me to leave my base vocation. Shakefp. Hen. VI.

To call by vision, from his father's house,
Into a land which he will shew him. Milton's Par. Lost.

4. A dream; something shown in a dream. A dream happens to a sleeping, a vision may happen to a waking man. A dream is supposed natural, a vision miraculous; but they are confounded.

His dream returns; his friend appears again;
The murderers come; now help, or I am slain!
'Twas but a vision still, and visions are but vain. Dryden.

The idea of any thing in our mind, no more proves the existence of that thing, than the visions of a dream make a true history. Lect.

VI'SIONARY. adj. [visionnaire, Fr. from visio.]

1. Affected by phantoms; disposed to receive impressions on the imagination.

No more these scenes my meditation aid,
Or lull to rest the visionary maid. Pope's Eloisa to Alford.

2. Imaginary; not real; seen in a dream; perceived by the imagination only.

The hounds at nearer distance hoarsely bray'd;
The hunter close purst'd the visionary maid. Dryden.

If you have any skill in dreams, let me know whether I have the same place in the real heart, that I had in the visionary one. Addison.

Our victories only led us to further visionary prospects; advantage was taken of the sanguine temper which success had wrought the nation up to. Swift.

VI'SIONARY. n. f. [visionnaire, Fr.] One whose imagination is VI'SIONIST. s. disturbed.

The lovely visionary gave him perpetual uneasiness. Fem. Quix.

To VI'SIT. v. a. [visiter, Fr. visite, Lat.]

1. To go to see.

You must go visit the lady that lies in. — I visit her with my prayers; but I cannot go thither. Shakefp. Coriolanus.

Virgins visited by angel powers. Pope.

2. [In scriptural language.] To send good or evil judicially.

When God visiteth, what shall I answer him? Jeb xxxi. 14.
Thou shalt be visited of the Lord with thunder. Isa. xxix. 6.

When I visit, I will visit thee in upon them. Ex. xxxii. 34.
God visit thee in good things. Judith xiii. 20.

That venerable body is in little concern after what manner their mortal enemies intend to treat them, whenever God shall visit us with so fatal an event. Swift.

3. To salute with a present.

To come to a survey, with judicial authority.

The bishop ought to visit his diocese every year in person.

To VI'SIT. v. n. To keep up the intercourse of ceremonial salutations at the houses of each other.

VI'SIT. n. f. [visite, Fr. from the verb.] The act of going to see another.

In a designed or accidental visit, let some one take a book, which may be agreeable, and read in it. Watts.

VI-SIT

VIS

VI'SITABLE. adj. [from visit.] Liable to be visited.

All hospitals built since the reformation, are *visit*able by the king or lord chancellor. Ayliffe's Paragon.

VI'SITANT. n. f. [from visit.] One who goes to see another.

He alone
To find where Adam shelter'd, took his way,
Not unperceiv'd of Adam, who to Eve,
While the great *visit*ant approach'd, thus spake. Milton.

One visit begins an acquaintance; and when the *visit*ant comes again, he is no more a stranger. South.

Edward the first, who had been a *visit*ant in Spain, upon action in the holy land, fixed both our pounds by the measures of the East. Arbutnot on Coins.

Griev'd that a *visit*ant so long shou'd wait
Unmark'd, unhonour'd, at a monarch's gate,
Instant he flew. Pope's Odyssey. b. i. l. 160.

VI'SITATION. n. f. [visita, Latin.]

1. The act of visiting.

He comes not
Like to his father's greatness; his approach,
So out of circumstance and sudden, tells us,
'Tis not a visitation fram'd, but forc'd. Shakefp. Winter Tale.

By need and accident.
What would you with the prince's?

— Nothing but peace and gentle visitation. Shakespeare.

2. Object of visits.

O flow'rs,
My early visitation, and my last. Milton's Par. Lost.

3. [Visitation, Fr.] Judicial visit or perambulation.

The bishop ought to visit his diocese every year in person, unless he omits the same because he would not burthen his churches; and then ought to send his arch-deacon, which was the original of the arch-deacon's visitation. Ayliffe.

4. Judicial visit by God; state of suffering judicial evil.

That which thou dost not understand when thou reade'st, thou shalt understand in the day of thy visitation. For many secrets of religion are not perceived till they be felt, and are not felt but in the day of a great calamity. Taylor.

5. Communication of divine love.

The most comfortable visitations God hath sent men from above, have taken especially the times of prayer as their most natural opportunities. Hooker.

VI'SITATORIAL. adj. [from visitor.] Belonging to a judicial visitor.

Some will have it, that an archdeacon does of common right execute this visitation power in his archdeaconry; but others say that an archdeacon has a visitation power only of common right per modum simplicis servitutis, as being bishop's vicar. Ayliffe's Paragon.

VI'SITER. n. f. [from visit.]

1. One who comes to see another.

Here's ado to look up honesty and honour from the access of gentle visitors. Shakespeare.

You see this confluence, this great flood of visitors, Shakefp.
Consumptions of this degree entertain their visitors with strange rambling discourses of their intent of going here and there. Harvey.

I have a large house, yet I should hardly prevail to find one visitor, if I were not able to hire him with a bottle of wine. Swift to Gay.

2. [Visiteur, Fr.] An occasional judge; one who regulates the disorders of any society.

The visitors expell'd the orthodox; they, without scruple or shame, possess'd themselves of their colleges. Warton.

To him you must your sickly state refer;
Your charter claims him as your visitor. Garth.

Whatever abuses have crept into the universities, might be reformed by strict injunctions to the visitors and heads of houses. Swift's Project for the Advancement of Religion.

VI'SITOMY. n. f. [corrupted from physiognomy.] Face; countenance. Not in use.

Twelve gods do sit around in royal state,
And Jove in midst with awful majesty,
To judge the strife between them flur'd late:
Each of the gods by his like visitomy
Eath to be known, but Jove above them all,
By his great looks and pow'r imperial. Spenser.

VI'SIVE. adj. [visivus, Fr. visus, Lat.] Formed in the act of seeing.

This happens when the axis of the visive cones, diffused from the object, fall not upon the same plane; but that which is conveyed into one eye is more depressed or elevated than that which enters the other. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

VI'SOR. n. f. [This word is variously written visard, visar, visor, visard, visor. I prefer visor, as nearest the Latin visus, and concurring with visage, a kindred word; visiere, French.] A mask used to disguise and disguise.

I fear, indeed, the weakness of my government before, made you think such a mask would be grateful unto me;
and my weaker government since, makes you pull off the visor. Sidney.

VIT

This loutish clown is such that you never saw so ill-favoured a visor; his behaviour such, that he is beyond the degree of ridiculous. Sidney.

By which deceit doth mask in visor fair,
And cast her colours dyed deep in grain,
To seem like truth, whose shape she well can fain. Spenser.

But that thy face is, visor-like, unchanging,
Made impudent with use of evil deeds,
I wou'd essay, proud queen, to make thee blush. Shakefp.

One visor remains,
And that is Claudio; I know him by his bearing. Shakefp.

The Cyclops, a people of Sicily, remarkable for cruelty, might, perhaps, in their wars use a head-piece, or visor. Brown's Odyssey. Notes.

VI'SORED. v. n. [from visor.] Masked.

Hence with thy brew'd enchantments, foul deceiver!
Hast thou betray'd my credulous innocence
With visor'd falsehood, and base forgery. Milton.

VI'STA. n. f. [Italian.] View; prospect through an avenue.

In St. Peter's, when a man stands under the dome, if he looks upwards, he is astonished at the spacious hollow of the cupola, that makes one of the beautifullest vistas that the eye can pass through. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

The fifth'd garden to the view
Its vista's opens, and its alleys green. Thomson's Spring.

VI'SUAL. adj. [visuel, French.] Used in sight; exercising the power of sight; instrumental to sight.

An eye thrust forth so as it hangs a pretty distance by the visual nerve; hath been without any power of sight; and yet, after being replaced, recovered sight. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The air,
No where so clear, sharpen'd his visual ray
To objects distant far. Milton's Par. Lost.

Then purg'd with euphrasy and rue
The visual nerve; for he had much to see. Milton.

Inward light, alas,
Puts forth no visual beam! Milton's Agonistes.

VITAL. adj. [vitalis, Latin.]

1. Contributing to life; necessary to life.

His heart, broken with unkindness and affliction, stretched so far beyond his limits with this excess of comfort, as it was able no longer to keep fast his vital spirits. Sidney.

All nature laughs, the groves are fresh and fair;
The sun's mild lustre warms the vital air. Pope.

2. Relating to life.

Let not Bardolph's vital thread be cut
With edge of penny cord, and vile reproach. Shakespeare.

On the rock a scanty measure place
Of vital flax, and turn the wheel a-pace. Dryden.

3. Containing life.

Spirits that live throughout;
Vital in every part; not as frail man,
In intraits, heart, or head, liver, or reins,
Cannot but by annihilating die. Milton's Par. Lost.

On the watry calm,
His brooding wings the spirit of God outspreads;
And vital virtue infus'd, and vital warmth
Throughout the fluid mass. Milton's Par. Lost.

4. Being the seat of life.

The dart flew on, and pierc'd a vital part. Pope.

5. So disposed as to live. Little used, and rather Latin than English.

Pythagoras and Hippocrates not only affirm the birth of the seventh month to be vital, that of the eighth mortal; but the progression thereto to be measured by rule. Brown.

6. Essential; chiefly necessary.

Know grief's vital part Consists in nature, not in art. Bp. Corbet.

VITALITY. n. f. [from vital.] Power of subsisting in life.

Whether that motion, vitality and operation were by incubation, or how else, the manner is only known to God. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

For the security of species produced only by seed, providence hath endued all seed with a lasting vitality, that if by any accident it happen not to germinate the first year, it will continue its fecundity twenty or thirty years. Roy.

VI'TALLY. adv. [from vital.] In such a manner as to give life.

The organical structure of human bodies, whereby they are fitted to live and move, and be vitally informed by the soul, is the workmanship of a most wise, powerful, and beneficent maker. Bentley.

VI'TALS. n. f. [Without the singular.] Parts essential to life.

By fits my swelling grief appears,
In rising sighs,

VIT

A greater difficulty in the doctrine of eggs is, how the sperm of the cock attaineth into every egg; since the vitellary, or place of the yolk, is very high. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
TO VITIATE. v. a. [vitio, Latin.] To deprave; to spoil; to make less pure.
 The sun in his garden gives him the purity of visible objects, and of true nature, before she was vitiated by luxury. Evelyn's Kalend.
 The organs of speech are managed by so many muscles, that speech is not easily destroyed, though often somewhat vitiated as to some particular letters. Holder.
 Spirits encountering foul bodies, and exciting a fermentation of those vitiated humours, precipitate into putrid fevers. Harvey.
 This undistinguishing complaisance will vitiate the taste of the readers, and misguide many of them in their judgments, where to approve and where to censure. Gorb.
 A transposition of the order of the sacramental words, in some men's opinion, vitiates baptism. Ayliffe's Parergon.
VITIATION. n. f. [from vitiate.] Depravation; corruption.
 The foreaid extenuation of the body is imputed to the blood's vitiation by malign, putrid vapours smoking throughout the vessels. Harvey on Consumptions.
TO VITILIGATE. v. n. [vitiosus and litige, Lat.] To contend in law.
VITILIGATION. n. f. [from vitiligate.] Contention; cavillation.
 I'll force you by right ratiocination,
 To leave your vitiligation. Hudibras.
VITIOSITY. n. f. [from vitiosus, Lat.] Depravity; corruption.
 He charges it wholly upon the corruption, perverseness, and vitiosity of man's will, as the only cause that rendered all the arguments his doctrine came clothed with, unsuccessful. South's Sermons.
VITIOUS. adj. [vitiosus, Fr. vitiosus, Latin.]
 1. Corrupt; wicked; opposite to virtuous. It is rather applied to habitual faults, than criminal actions.
 Make known
 It is no vitious blot, murder, or foulness
 That hath depriv'd me of your grace. Shakesp. K. Lear.
 Witnes th' irreverent son
 Of him who built the ark; who, for the shame
 Done to his father, heard his heavy curse,
 'Servant of servants,' on his vitious race. Milton.
 Wit's what the vitious fear, the virtuous shun;
 By fools 'tis hated, and by knaves undone. Pope.
 No troops abroad are so ill disciplin'd as the English;
 which cannot well be otherwise, while the common soldiers have before their eyes the vitious example of their leaders. Swift.
 2. Corrupt; having physical ill qualities.
 When vitious language contends to be high, it is full of rock, mountain, and pointedness. B. Johnson.
 Here from the vitious air and sickly skies,
 A plague did on the dumb creation rise. Dryden.
VITIOUSLY. adv. [from vitious.] Not virtuously; corruptly.
VITIOUSNESS. n. f. [from vitious.] Corruptness; state of being vitious.
 When we in our vitiousness grow hard,
 The wife gods seal our eyes. Shakespeare.
 What makes a governor justly despised is vitiousness and ill morals. Virtue must tip the preacher's tongue, and the ruler's scepter with authority. South.
VITREOUS. adj. [vitreus, Fr. vitreus, Lat.] Glassy; consisting of glass; resembling glass.
 The hole answers to the pupil of the eye; the crystalline humour to the lenticular glass; the dark room to the cavity containing the vitreous humour, and the white paper to the retina. Ray on the Creation.
 When the phlegm is too viscous, or separates into too great a quantity, it brings the blood into a morbid state: this viscous phlegm seems to be the vitreous petuile of the an-tients. Arbutnot on Aliments.
VITREOUSNESS. n. f. [from vitreous.] Resemblance of glass.
VITRIFICABLE. adj. [from vitrificate.] Convertible into glass.
TO VITRIFICATE. v. a. [vitrum and facio, Lat.] To change into glass.
 We have metals vitrified, and other materials, besides those of which you make glass. Bacon.
VITRIFICATION. n. f. [from vitrification, Fr. from vitrificate.] Production of glass; act of changing, or state of being changed into glass.
 For vitrification likewise, what metals will endure it? Also, because vitrification is accounted a kind of death of metals, what vitrification will admit of turning back again, and what not? Bacon's Physical Remarks.
 If the heat be more fierce, it maketh the grosser part itself run and melt; as in the making of ordinary glass; and in the vitrification of earth in the inner parts of furnaces; and in the vitrification of brick and metals. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
 Upon the knowledge of the different ways of making minerals and metals capable of vitrification, depends the art of making counterfeit or fictitious gems. Boyle on Colours.

VIV

TO VITRIFY. v. a. [vitrifier, Fr. vitrum and facio, Lat.] To change into glass.
 Metals will vitrify; and perhaps some portion of the glass of metal vitrified, mixed in the pot of ordinary glass metal, will make the whole mass more tough. Bacon.
 Iron-slag, vitrified, has in it cortices encompassing one another, like those in agats. Woodward.
TO VITRIFY. v. n. To become glass; to be changed into glass.
 Chymists make vessels of animal substances calcined, which will not vitrify in the fire; for all earth which hath any salt or oil in it, will turn to glass. Arbutnot on Aliments.
VITRIOL. n. f. [vitriol, Fr. vitriolum, Lat.]
 Vitriol is produced by addition of a metallick matter with the fossil acid salt.
 I rubbed it with the vitriol-stone. Wise man's Surgery.
VITRIOLATE. adj. [vitriolus, Fr. from vitriolum, Lat.] Impregnated with vitriol; consisting of vitriol.
 Iron may be dissolved by any tart, salt, or vitriolated water. Bacon.
 The water having dissolved the imperfectly calcined body, the vitriolated corpuscles swimming in the liquor, by their occursions constituted little masses of vitriol, which gave the water they impregnated a fair vitriolated colour. Boyle.
VITRIOLICK. adj. [vitriolique, Fr. from vitriolum, Lat.] Resembling vitriol; containing vitriol.
 Copper of Mars, by some called salt of steel, made by the spirits of vitriol or sulphur, will, after abluion, be attracted by the loadstone: and therefore whether those flooring salts partake but little of steel, and be not rather the vi-triolous spirits fixed unto salt by the effluvia or odour of steel, is not without good question. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
 These salts have somewhat of a nitrous taste, but mix'd with a smatch of a vitriolick. Crew's Museum.
 By over-fermentation, or long-keeping, wine becomes sharp as in hock, like the vitriolick acidity. Floyer.
VITULINE. adj. [vitulinus, Lat.] Belonging to a calf, or to veal. Bailey.
VITUPERABLE. adj. [vituperabilis, Lat.] Blame worthy. Ainsl.
TO VITUPERATE. v. a. [vituperer, Fr. vituperer, Latin.] To blame; to censure.
VITUPERATION. n. f. [vituperatio, Lat.] Blame; censure.
 Such a writing ought to be clean, and free from any cavil or vituperation of nature. Ayliffe's Parergon.
VIVACIOUS. adj. [vivax, Lat.]
 1. Long-lived.
 Though we should allow them their perpetual calm and equability of heat, they will never be able to prove, that therefore men would be so vivacious as they would have us believe. Bentley.
 2. Spritely; gay; active; lively.
VIVACIOUSNESS. n. f. [from vivacitè, Fr. from vivacious.]
VIVACITY. n. f. [from vivacity, Fr. from vivacious.]
 1. Liveliness; spriteliness.
 They are esteemed very hot in operation, and will, in a convenient air, survive some days the loss of their heads and hearts; so vigorous is their vivacity. Boyle.
 He had a great vivacity in his countenance. Dryden.
 2. Longevity; length of life.
 Fables are rais'd concerning the vivacity of deer; for neither are their gestation nor increment such as may afford an argument of long life. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
VIVARY. n. f. [vivarium, Lat.] A warren. Ainsworth.
VIVE. adj. [vif, Fr. vivus, Latin.] Lively; forcible; presting.
 By a vive and forcible persuasion, he mov'd him to a war upon Flanders. Bacon.
VIVENCY. n. f. [vivus, Latin.] Manner of supporting or continuing life, or vegetation.
 Although not in a distinct and indisputable way of vivency, or answering in all points the property of plants, yet in inferior and descending constitutions, they are determined by feminilities. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
VIVES. n. f. A distemper among horses.
 Vives is much like the strangles; and the chief difference is, that for the most part the strangles happen to colts and young horses while they are at grass, by feeding with their heads downwards; by which means the swelling inclines more to the jaws; but the vives happens to horses at any age and time, and is more particularly seated in the glands and kernels under the ears. Farriers Dict.
VIVID. adj. [vividus, Latin.]
 1. Lively; quick; striking.
 The liquor, retaining its former vivid colour, was grown clear again. Boyle.
 To make these experiments the more manifest, such bodies ought to be chosen as have the fullest and most vivid colours, and two of those bodies compared together. Newton.
 Ah! what avail his glossy varying dyes?
 The vivid green his shining plumes unfolds,
 His painted wings, and breast that flames with gold. Pope.
 2. Spritely;

VIZ

2. Spritely; active.
 Body is a fit workhouse for sprightly, vivid faculties to excise and exert themselves in. South.
 Where the genius is bright, and the imagination vivid,
 the power of memory may lose its improvement. Watts.
VIVIDLY. adv. [from vivid.] With life; with quickness;
 with strength.
 In the moon we can with excellent telescopes discern many hills and vallies, whereof some are more, and some less vividly illustrated; and others have a fainter, others a deeper shade. Boyle on Colours.
 Sensitive objects affect a man, in the state of this present life, much more warmly and vividly than those which affect only his nobler part, his mind. South.
VIVIDNESS. n. f. [from vivid.] Life; vigour; quickness.
VIVIFIC. adj. [vivificus, Lat.] Giving life. Bailey.
TO VIVIFICATE. v. a. [vivifico, Lat.]
 1. To make alive; to inform with life; to animate.
 2. To recover from such a change of form as seems to destroy the essential properties.
VIVIFICATION. n. f. [from vivification, Fr. from vivifico.] The act of giving life.
 If that motion be in a certain order, there followeth vi-vification and figuration. Bacon.
VIVIFIC. adj. [vivifique, Fr. vivificus, Latin.] Giving life; making alive.
 Without the sun's salutary and vivific beams, all motion would cease, and nothing be left but darkness and death. Ray.
TO VIVIFY. v. a. [vivifier, Fr. vivus and facio, Lat.] To make alive; to animate; to endue with life.
 It hath been observed by the antients, that there is a worm that breedeth in old snow, of a reddish colour, and dull of motion; which would shew, that snow hath in it a secret warmth, else it could hardly vivify. Bacon.
 Sitting on eggs doth vivify, not nourish. Bacon.
 Gut-worms, as soon as vivified, creep into the stomach for nutriment. Harvey on Consumptions.
VIVIPAROUS. adj. [vivus and pario, Lat.] Bringing the young alive; opposed to viviparous.
 When we perceive that bats have teats, it is not unreasonable to infer, they give suck; but whereas no other flying animals have these parts, we cannot from them infer a vivi-parous exclusion. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 Their species might continue, though they had been vivi-parous; yet it would have brought their individuals to very small numbers. Merc's Antidote against Atheism.
 If birds had been viviparous, the burthen of their womb had been so great and heavy, that their wings would have failed them. Ray on the Creation.
VIXEN. n. f.
 Vixen or fixer is the name of a she-fox; otherwise applied to a woman whose nature and condition is thereby compared to a fox. Virflegan.
 O! when she's angry, she's keen and shrewd;
 She was a vixen, when she went to school;
 And though she be but little, she is fierce. Shakespeare.
 See a pack of spaniels, called lovers, in a hot pursuit of a two-legged vixen, who only flies the whole loud pack, to be singled out by one. Wycherly.
VIZ. n. f. [This word is videlicet, written with a contraction.]
 To wit; that is. A barbarous form of an unnecessary word.
 That which lo oft by sundry writers
 Has been apply'd t'almost all fighters,
 More justly may b' ascrib'd to this,
 Than any other warrior, viz.
 None ever acted both parts bolder,
 Both of a chieftain and a soldier. Hudibras.
 The chief of all signs which the Almighty endued man with,
 is humane voice, and the several modifications thereof by the organs of speech, viz. the letters of the alphabet, form'd by the several motions of the mouth. Holder.
 Let this be done relatively, viz. one thing greater or stronger, casting the rest behind, and rendering it less sensible by its opposition. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
VIZARD. n. f. [visiere, Fr. See VISOR.] A mask used for disguise.
 Let the suits of the maskers be graceful, and such as become the person when the vizards are off. Bacon.
 Brought vizards in a civil disguise. Roscommon.
 A lye is like a vizard, that may cover the face indeed,
 but can never become it. South.
 Ye shall know them by their fruits, not by their well or ill living; for they put on the vizard of seeming sanctity. Atterb.
 He mistook it for a very whimsical sort of mask, but upon a nearer view he found, that she held her vizard in her hand. Addison.
TO VIZARD. v. a. [from the noun.] To mask.
 Degree being vizarded, Shakespeare.
VIZIER. n. f. [properly Vizir.] The prime minister of the Turkish empire.

UMB

He made him vizier, which is the chief of all the bassas. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.
 This grand vizier presuming to invest
 The chief imperial city of the west;
 With the first charge compell'd in haste to rise,
 His treasure, tents and cannon left a prize. Waller.
ULCER. n. f. [ulcere, Fr. ulcus, Latin.] A fore of continuance; not a new wound.
 Thou answer'it, she is fair;
 Pour't in the open ulcer of my heart
 Her eyes, her hair, her cheek, her gait, her voice! Shakespeare.
 My ulcers swell,
 Corrupt and smell. Sandy's Paraphrase.
 Intestine stone and ulcer, colick pangs. Milton.
 While he was dressing that opening, other abscesses were raised, and from the several apostemations sinuous ulcers were made. Wise man's Surgery.
TO ULCERATE. v. a. [ulcerer, Fr. ulcere, Latin.] To disease with fores.
 Some depend upon the intemperament of the part ulcerated;
 others upon the continual afflux of lacerative humours. Harvey.
 An acrid and purulent matter mixeth with the blood, in such as have their lungs ulcerated. Arbutnot on Aliments.
ULCERATION. n. f. [ulceration, Fr. ulceratio, from ulcere, Lat.]
 1. The act of breaking into ulcers.
 2. Ulcer; fore.
 The effects of mercury on ulcerations are manifest. Arbut.
ULCEROUS. adj. [ulcerosus, Latin.] Afflicted with fores.
 Strangely visited people,
 All swollen and ulcerous he cures. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
 An ulcerous disposition of the lungs, and an ulcer of the lungs, may be appositely termed causes of a pulmonique consumption. Harvey on Consumptions.
ULCEROUSNESS. n. f. [from ulcerous.] The state of being ul-cerous.
ULCERED. adj. [ulcerè, Fr. from ulcer.] Grown by time from a hurt to an ulcer.
 Esculapius went about with a dog and a she-goat; the first for licking ulcered wounds, and the goat's milk for the diseases of the stomach. Temple.
ULGINOUS. adj. [uliginosus, Latin.] Slimy; muddy.
 The uliginous lacteous matter taken notice of in the coral fishings upon the coast of Italy, was only a collection of the coralline particles. Woodward.
ULTIMATE. adj. [ultimus, Latin.] Intended in the last resort; being the last in the train of consequences.
 I would be at the worst; worst is my port,
 My harbour, and my ultimate repose. Milton.
 Many actions apt to procure fame, are not conducive to this our ultimate happiness. Addison.
 The ultimate allotment of God to men, is really a consequence of their own voluntary choice, in doing good or evil. Rogers's Sermons.
ULTIMATELY. adv. [from ultimate.] In the last consequence.
 Charity is more extensive than either of the two other graces, which center ultimately in ourselves; for we believe, and we hope for our own sakes: but love, which is a more disinterested principle, carries us out of ourselves, into desires and endeavours of promoting the interests of other beings. Atterbury.
 Trust in our own powers, ultimately terminates in the friendship of other men, which their advantages assure to us. Rogers's Sermons.
ULTIMITY. n. f. [ultimus, Latin.] The last stage; the last consequence. A word very convenient, but not in use.
 Alteration of one body into another, from crudity to perfect concoction, is the ultimity of that process. Bacon.
ULTRAMARINE. n. f. [ultra and marinus, Latin.] One of the noblest blue colours used in paintings, produced by calcination from the stone called lapis lazuli. Hill.
 Others, notwithstanding they are brown, cease not to be soft and faint, as the blue of ultramarine. Dryden.
ULTRAMARINE. adj. [ultra marinus, Lat.] Being beyond the sea; foreign. Ainsworth.
ULTRAMONTANE. adj. [ultramontain, Fr. ultra montanus, Lat.]
 Being beyond the mountains.
ULTRAMUNDANE. adj. [ultra and mundus, Lat.] Being beyond the world.
ULTRONEOUS. adj. [ultra, Lat.] Spontaneous; voluntary.
UMBEL. n. f. In botany, the extremity of a stalk or branch divided into several pedicles or rays, beginning from the same point, and opening so as to form an inverted cone. Diët.
UMBELLATED. adj. In botany, is said of flowers when many of them grow together in umbels. Diët.
UMBELLIFEROUS. adj. [umbel and fero, Lat.] In botany, being a plant that bears many flowers, growing upon many footstalks, proceeding from the same centre; and chiefly appropriated to such plants whose flowers are composed of five leaves, as fennel and parsnip. Diët.
UMBER. n. f.
 1. Umber is a sad colour; which grind with gum-water, and lighten it with a little ceruse, and a shive of saffron. Peascham.

UMP

I'll put myself in poor and mean attire,
And with a kind of umber finish my face. Shakespeare.
Umbre is very sensible and earthy; there is nothing but pure black which can dispute with it. Dryden.
The umbres, ochres, and minerals found in the fillures, are much finer than those found in the strata. Woodward.
2. A fish. [thymallus, Lat.]
The umber and grayling differ as the herring and pilcher do: but though they may do so in other nations, those in England differ nothing but in their names. Walt. Angler.
UMBERED. adj. [from umber or umbra, Lat.] Shaded;
clouded.
From camp to camp, through the foul womb of night,
Fire answers fire; and through their paly flames
Each battle sees the other's umber'd face. Shakespeare. Hen. V.
UMBILICAL. adj. [umbilical, Fr. from umbilicus, Lat.] Belonging to the navel.
Birds are nourished by umbilical vessels, and the navel is manifest a day or two after excretion. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
In a calf, the umbilical vessels terminate in certain bodies divided into a multitude of carnosous papillae, received into so many sockets of the cotyledons growing on the womb. Ray.
UMBLES. n. f. [umbles, Fr.] A deer's entrails. Ditt.
UMBRO. n. f. [Latin.] The point, or prominent part of a buckler.
Thy words together ty'd in final hanks,
Close as the Macedonian phalanx;
Or like the umbo of the Romans,
Which fiercest foes could break by no means. Swift.
UMBRAGE. n. f. [umbrage, Fr.]
1. Shade; screen of trees;
O, might I here
In solitude live savage; in some glade
Obscur'd, where highest woods, impenetrable
To star, or sun-light, spread their umbrage broad,
And brown as evening! Milton's Par. Lost.
Men twelv'ring run
To grotts and caves, and the cool umbrage seek
Of woven arborets. Philips.
2. Shadow; appearance.
The rest are umbrages quickly dispell'd; the astrologer
subjects liberty to the motions of heaven. Bramb. against Hobbs.
The opinion carries no shew of truth nor umbrage of reason of its side. Woodward.
Such a removal of the metal out of one part of the mals, and collecting of it in another, has mislead some, and given umbrage to an opinion, that there is a growth of metal in ore exposed to the air. Woodward on Fossils.
3. Remoteness; offence; suspicion of injury.
Although he went on with the war, yet it should be but with his sword in his hand, to bend the stiffness of the other party to accept of peace: and so the king should take no umbrage of his arming and prosecution. Bacon.
UMBRA'GEIOUS. adj. [umbrageous, Fr.] Shady; yielding shade.
Umbrageous grotts and caves of cool recess. Milton.
Walk daily in a pleasant, airy, and umbrageous garden. Harvey.
The fleecing shower is scarce to patter heard,
Beneath th' umbrageous multitude of leaves. Thomson.
UMBRA'GEOUSNESS. n. f. [from umbrageous.] Shadiness.
The exceeding umbrageousness of this tree, he compareth to the dark and shadowed life of man; through which the sun of justice being not able to pierce, we have all remained in the shadow of death, till it pleased Christ to climb the tree of the cross, for our enlightning and redemption. Raleigh.
UMBRA'TILE. adj. [umbratilis, Latin.] Being in the shade.
UMBRELL. n. f. [from umbra, Lat.] A screen used in hot UMBRELLA. } countries to keep off the sun, and in others to bear off the rain.
I can carry your umbrella, and fan your ladyship. Dryden.
Good housewives
Defended by th' umbrella's oily shed,
Safe through the wet on clinking pottens tread. Gay.
UMBRELLER. n. f. The vifor of the helmet. Spenser.
UMBRO'SITY. n. f. [umbrosus, Lat.] Shadiness; exclusion of light.
Oiled paper becometh more transparent, and admits the visible rays with much less umbrageousness. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
UMPIRE. n. f. [from umpire.] Arbitration; friendly decision of a controversy.
UMPIRE. n. f. [This word umpire, with great applause from Skinner, derives from im pires, Fr. a father.] An arbitrator; one who, as a common friend, decides disputes.
Give me some present counsel; or, behold,
Twixt my extremes and me, this bloody knife
Shall play the umpire; arbitrating that,
Which the commission of thy years and art
Could to no issue of true honour bring. Shakespeare.
Just death, kind umpire of men's miseries,
With sweet enlargement doth dismiss me hence. Shakespeare.

The learned Sennertus, in that book, takes not upon him to play the advocate for the chymists, but the umpire betwixt them and the peripateticks. Boyle.
The vast distance that sin had put between the offending creature and the offended Creator, required the help of some great umpire and intercessor, to open him a new way of access to God; and this Christ did for us as mediator. South.
The jealous sects, that dare not trust their cause
So far from their own will as from the laws,
You for their umpire and their synod take. Dryden.
UN. A Saxon privative or negative particle answering to in of the Latins, and a of the Greeks, on, Dutch. It is placed almost at will before adjectives and adverbs. All the instances of this kind of composition cannot therefore be inserted; but I have collected a number sufficient, perhaps more than sufficient, to explain it.
UNABASHED. adj. [from abashed.] Not shamed; not confuted by modesty.
Earls on high, stood unabash'd Defoe,
And Tutchin flagrant from the scourge below. Pope.
UNABLE. adj. [from abl.]
1. Not having ability.
The Amalekites set on them, supposing that they had been weary, and unable to resist. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
Zeal mov'd thee:
To please thy gods thou didst it; gods unable
To acquit themselves, and prosecute their foes. Milton.
The prince unable to conceal his pain,
Gaz'd on the fair,
And sigh'd, and look'd, and sigh'd again. Dryden.
I intended to put it in practice, though far unable for the attempt of such a poem. Dryden.
Man, under the disadvantages of a weak and fallen nature, was unable even to form an idea of happiness worthy his reasonable ambition. Rogers's Sermons.
2. Weak; impotent.
A love that makes breath poor, and speech unable;
Beyond all manner of so much I love you. Shakespeare.
UNABOLISHED. adj. [from abolished.] Not repealed; remaining in force.
The number of needless laws unabolished, doth weaken the force of them that are necessary. Hooker.
UNACCEPTABLE. adj. [from acceptabile.] Not pleasing; not such as is well received.
The marquis at that time was very unacceptable to his countrymen. Clarendon.
Tis as indecent as unacceptable, and all men are willing to sink out of such company, the sober for the hazards, and joyful for the unpleasantness. Government of the Tongue.
Every method for deterring others from the like practices for the future, must be unacceptable and displeasing to the friends of the guilty. Addison's Freeholder.
If he shrinks from an unacceptable duty, there is a secret reserve of infidelity at the bottom. Rogers's Sermons.
UNACCEPTABLENESS. n. f. [from unacceptable.] State of not pleasing.
This alteration arises from the unacceptableness of the subject I am upon. Collier on Priests.
UNACCEPTED. adj. [from accepted.] Not accepted.
By times put on the suppliant, and the Lord
Offer'd again the unaccepted wreath,
And choice of happy love, or instant death. Prior.
UNACCEPTABLENESS. n. f. [from acceptableness.] State of not being to be attained or approached.
Many excellent things are in nature, which, by reason of the remoteness from us, and unacceptableness to them, are not within any of our faculties to apprehend. Hale.
UNACCOMMODATED. adj. [from accommodated.] Unfurnished with external convenience.
Unaccommodated man is no more than such a poor, bare, forked animal as thou art. Shakespeare.
UNACCOMPANIED. adj. [from accompanied.] Not attended.
Seldom one accident, prosperous or adverse, cometh un- accompanied with the like. Hayward.
UNACCOMPLISHED. adj. [from accomplished.] Unfinished; incomplete.
Beware of death, thou canst not die unperturb'd,
And leave an unaccomplish'd love behind. Dryden.
Thy vows are mine.
The gods destin'd at his approach, withdrew.
Nor durst their unaccomplish'd crime pursue. Dryden.
UNACCOUNTABLE. adj. [from accountable.]
1. Not explicable; not to be solved by reason; not reducible to rule.
I shall note difficulties, which are not usually observed, though unaccountable. Glauville.
The folly is so unaccountable, that enemies pass upon us for friend. LeStrange.
There has been an unaccountable disposition of late, to fetch the falcon from the French. Addison.

What is yet more unaccountable, would he complain of their resisting his omnipotence. Rogers's Sermons.
The Chinese are an unaccountable people, strangely compounded of knowledge and ignorance. Baker's Refl. on Learn.
The manner whereby the soul and body are united, and how they are distinguished, is wholly unaccountable to us. Swift.
2. Not subject; not controlled.
UNACCOUNTABLY. adv. Strangely.
The boy proved to be the son of the merchant, whose heart had so unaccountably melted at the sight of him. Addison.
UNACCURATE. adj. [from accurate.] Not exact.
Galileo using an unaccurate way, defined the air to be in weight to water but as one to four hundred. Boyle.
UNACCURATENESS. n. f. [from unaccurate.] Want of exact-ness.
It may be much more probably maintained than hitherto, as against the unaccurateness and unconcludingness of the analytical experiments vulgarly to be relied on. Boyle.
UNACCUSTOMED. adj. [from accustomed.]
1. Not used; not habituated.
I was chastised as a bullock unaccustomed to the yoke. Jer. xxxi.
The necessity of air to the molt of animals unaccustomed to the want of it, may best be judged of by the following experiments. Boyle.
2. New; not usual.
I'll send one to Mantua,
Where that same banish'd runaway doth live,
Shall give him such an unaccustom'd dram,
That he shall soon keep Tibalt company. Shakespeare.
Their pristine worth
The Britons recollect, and gladly change
Sweet native home, for unaccustom'd air. Philips.
An old word ought never to be fixed to an unaccustomed idea, without just and evident necessity. Watts's Logick.
UNACKNOWLEDGED. adj. [from acknowledge.] Not owned.
The fear of what was to come from an unknown, at least an unacknowledged successor to the crown, clouded much of that prosperity. Clarendon.
UNACQUAINTANCE. n. f. [from acquaintance.] Want of familiarity; want of knowledge.
The first is an utter unacquaintance with his master's designs, in these words; the servant knoweth not what his master doth. South.
UNACQUAINTED. adj. [from acquainted.]
1. Not known; unusual; not familiarly known.
She greatly grew amazed at the sight,
And th' unacquainted light began to fear. Fairy Queen.
2. Not having familiar knowledge.
Festus, an infidel, a Roman, one whose ears were un- acquainted with such matter, heard him, but could not reach unto that whereof he spake. Hooker.
Where else
Shall I inform my unacquainted feet
In the blind mazes of this tangled world? Milton.
Art thou a courtier,
Or I a king? My ears are unacquainted
With such bold truths, especially from thee. Denham.
Youth, that with joys had unacquainted been,
Envy'd grey hairs, that once good days had seen. Dryden.
Let us live like those who expect to die, and then we shall find that we fear'd death only because we were unacquainted with it. Wake's Preparation for Death.
UNACTIVE. adj. [from active.]
1. Not brisk; not lively.
Silly people commend tame, inactive children, because they make no noise, nor give them any trouble. Locke.
2. Having no employment.
Man hath his daily work of body, or mind,
Appointed, which declares his dignity;
While other animals inactive range,
And of their doings God takes no account. Milton.
3. Not busy; not diligent.
His life,
Private, inactive, calm, contemplative;
Little suspicious to any king. Paradise Regain'd.
An homage which nature commands all understandings to pay to virtue; and yet it is but a faint, inactive thing; for in defiance of the judgment, the will may still remain as much a stranger to virtue as before. South's Sermons.
4. Having no efficacy.
In the fruitful earth
His beams, inactive else, their vigour find. Milton.
UNACTUATED. adj. Not actuated.
The peripatetick matter is a mere unactuated power. Glauville.
UNADMIR'D. adj. Not regarded with honour.
Oh! had I rather unadmird remain'd,
In some lone isle, or distant northern land;
Where the gilt chariot never marks the way. Pope.
UNADORN'D. adj. Not worshipped.
Nor was his name unheard, or unador'd
In ancient Greece. Milton.

UNA

UNADORNED. adj. Not decorated; not embellished.
The earth, till then
Desert, and bare, unfighly, unadorn'd, Brought forth the tender grass. Milton's Par. Lost.
But hoary winter, unadorn'd and bare,
Dwells in the dire retreat, and freezes there. Addison.
UNADVENTUROUS. adj. Not adventurous.
The wisest, unexperienc'd, will be ever
Timorous and loth, with novice modesty,
Irresolute, unhardy, unadvent'rous. Milton's Par. Regain'd.
UNADVISED. adj.
1. Imprudent; indiscreet.
Madam, I have unadvise'd
Deliver'd you a paper that I should not. Shakespeare.
2. Done without due thought; rash.
This contract to-night
Is too rash, too unadvise'd, too sudden,
Too like the light'ning, which doth cease to be,
Ere one can say, it lightens. Shakespeare. Romeo and Juliet.
These prosperous proceedings were turned back by the un- advised forwardness of divers chief counsellors, in making sudden and unreasonable alterations. Hayward.
Specifick conformities can be no unadvised productions;
but are regulated by the immediate efficiency of some knowing agent. Glauville.
UNADVISEDLY. adv. Imprudently; rashly; indiscreetly.
A strange kind of speech unto christian ears; and such,
as I hope they themselves do acknowledge unadvisedly uttered. Hooker.
What man's wit is there able to sound the depth of those dangerous and fearful evils, wherinto our weak and impotent nature is inclinable to sink itself, rather than to shew an acknowledgment of error in that which once we have unadvisedly taken upon us to defend, against the stream of a contrary publick resolution. Hooker.
What is done cannot be now amended;
Men shall deal unadvisedly sometimes,
Which after-hours give leisure to repent of. Shakespeare.
A word unadvisedly spoken on the one side, or misunderstood on the other, has raised such an aversion to him, as in time has produced a perfect hatred of him. South.
UNADULTERATED. adj. Genuine; not spoiled by spurious mixtures.
I have only discovered one of those channels, by which the history of our Saviour might be conveyed pure and un- adulterated. Addison on the Christian Religion.
UNAFFE'CTED. n. f.
1. Real; not hypocritical.
They bore the king
To lie in solemn state, a publick sight:
Groans, cries, and howlings fill the croud'd place,
And unaffected sorrow sat on ev'ry face. Dryden.
2. Free from affectation; open; candid; sincere.
The maid improves her charms,
With inward greatness, unaffected widom,
And fancit of manners. Addison's Cato.
Of softest manners, unaffected mind;
Lover of peace, and friend of human kind. Pope's Epist.
3. Not formed by too rigid observation of rules; not laboured.
Men divinely taught, and better teaching
The solid rules of civil government,
In their majestic, unaffected stile,
Than all the oratory of Greece and Rome. Milton.
4. Not moved; not touched.
UNAFFE'CTEDLY. adv. Really; without any attempt to produce false appearances.
He was always unaffectedly cheerful; no marks of any thing heavy at his heart broke from him. Locke.
UNAFFE'CTING. adj. Not pathetic; not moving the passions.
UNAFFLICTED. adj. Free from trouble.
My unafflicted mind doth feed
On no unholy thoughts for benefit. Daniel's Masopbilus.
UNAGREE'ABLE. adj. Inconsistent; unsuitable.
Advent'rous work! yet to thy pow'r and mine,
Not unagreeable, to found a path
Over this main, from hell to that new world. Milton.
UNAGREE'ABLENESS. n. f. Unsuitableness to; inconsistency with.
Papias, a holy man, and scholar of St. John, having delivered the millennium, men chose rather to admit a doctrine, whose unagreeableness to the gospel oeconomy rendered it suspicious, than think an apostolick man could seduce them. Decay of Piety.
UNADABLE. adj. Not to be helped.
The congregated college have concluded,
That labouring art can never ransom nature
From her unadable estate. Shakespeare.
UNADDED. adj. Not assisted; not helped.
Their number, counting those th' unaided eye
Can see, or by invented tubes descry,
The widest stretch of human thought exceeds. Blackmore.
UNAD'IMING.

UNA

UNAIMING. adj. Having no particular direction.
The noisy culverin, o'ercharg'd, lets fly,
And bursts, unaiming, in the rended sky:
Such frantick flights are like a madman's dream,
And nature suffers in the wild extreme. Granville.

UNAKING. adj. Not feeling or causing pain.
Shew them th' unaking fears which I would hide,
As if I had received them for the hire
Of their breath only. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

UNALIENABLE. adj. Not to be transferred.
Hereditary right should be kept sacred, not from any unalienable right in a particular family, but to avoid the consequences that usually attend the ambition of competitors. Swift.

UNALLAYED. adj. Not impaired by bad mixtures.
Unalloyed satisfactions are joys too heavenly to fall to many men's shares on earth. Boyle.

UNALLIED. adj.
1. Having no powerful relation.
2. Having no common nature; not congenial.
He is compounded of two very different ingredients, spirit and matter; but how such unallied and disproportioned substances should act upon each other, no man's learning yet could tell him. Collier on Pride.

UNALTERABLE. adj. Unchangeable; immutable.
The law of nature, consisting in a fixed, unalterable relation of one nature to another, is indispensable. South.
They fix unalterable laws,
Settling the same effect on the same cause. Creech.
The truly upright man is inflexible in his uprightness, and unalterable in his purpose. Atterbury.

UNALTERABLENESS. n. f. Immutability; unchangeableness.
This happens from the unalterableness of the corpuscles, which constitute and compose those bodies. Woodward.

UNALTERABLY. adv. Unchangeably; immutably.
Retain unalterably firm his love intire. Milton's Par. Lost.
The day and year are standard measures, because they are unalterably constituted by those motions. Holder on Time.

UNALTERED. adj. Not changed; not changeable.
It was thought in him an unpardonable offence to alter any thing; in us intolerable that we suffer any thing to remain unaltered. Hooker.
To whom our Saviour, with unalter'd brow;
Thy coming hither, though I know thy scope,
I bid not, or forbid. Paradise Regain'd.
To shew the truth of my unalter'd breast,
Know that your life was giv'n at my request. Dryden.
Since these forms begin, and have their end,
On some unalter'd cause they sure depend. Dryden.
Grains and nuts pass often through animals unalter'd. Arbut.
Amongst the shells that were fair, unaltered, and free from such mineral insinuations, there were some which could not be match'd by any species of shell-fish now found upon the sea shores. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

UNAMAZED. adj. Not astonished; free from astonishment.
Though at the voice much marvelling; at length
Not unamaz'd, she thus in answer spake. Milton.

UNAMBITIOUS. adj. Free from ambition.
My humble muse, in unambitious strains,
Paints the green forests, and the flow'ry plains. Pope.
I am one of those unambitious people, who will love you forty years hence. Pope.

UNAMENDABLE. adj. [in emendabilis, Lat.] Not to be changed for the better.
He is the same man; so is every one here that you know: mankind is unamendable. Pope to Swift.

UNAMIALE. adj. Not raising love.
Those who represent religion in an unamiable light, are like the spies sent by Moses, to make a discovery of the land of promise, when, by their reports, they discouraged the people from entering upon it. Addison's Spectator.
These men are so well acquainted with the unamiable part of themselves, that they have not the confidence to think they are really beloved. Addison's Spectator.
Nor are the hills unamiable, whose tops
To heav'n aspire. Philips.

UNANALYSED. adj. Not resolved into simple parts.
Some large crystals of refined and unanalysed nitre, appeared to have each of them six flat sides. Boyle.

UNANCHORED. adj. Not anchored.
A port there is, inclos'd on either side,
Where ships may rest, unanchored, and unt'y'd. Pope.

UNANELED. adj. [un and knell.] Without the bell rung.
This sense I doubt.
Thus was I, sleeping, by a brother's hand
Cut off ev'n in the blossoms of my sin,
Unhous'd, unanointed, unanel'd. Shakespeare. Hamlet.

UNANIMATED. adj. Not enlivened; not vivified.
Look on those half lines as the imperfect products of a hasty muse: like the frogs in the Nile, part kindled into life, and part a lump of uninformed, unanimated matter. Dryden.

UNANIMITY. n. f. [unanimity, Fr.] Agreement in design or opinion.

UNA

An honest party of men acting with unanimity, are of infinitely greater consequence, than the same party aiming at the same end by different views. Addison.

UNANIMOUS. adj. [unanime, Fr. unanimis, Lat.] Being of one mind; agreeing in design or opinion.
They went to meet
So oft in festivals of joy, and love
Unanimous, as sons of one great fire, Hymning th' eternal father. Milton's Par. Lost.
With those which Minio's fields and Phrygi gave,
All bred in arms, unanimous and brave. Dryden.

UNANIMOUSLY. adv. [from unanimous.] With one mind.
This particular is unanimously reported by all the ancient christian authors. Addison on the Christian Religion.

UNANIMATED. adj.
1. Not anointed.
2. Not prepared for death by extreme unction.
Thus was I, sleeping, by a brother's hand
Cut off ev'n in the blossoms of my sin,
Unhous'd, unanointed, unanel'd. Shakespeare. Hamlet.

UNANSWERABLE. adj. Not to be refuted.
This is a manifest and unanswerable argument. Rowley.
I shall not conclude it false, though I think the emergent difficulties, which are its attendants, unanswerable. Glanville.
The pye's question was wisely let fall without a reply, to intimate that it was unanswerable. L'Estrange.
These speculations are strong intimations, not only of the excellency of a human soul, but of its independence on the body; and if they do not prove, do at least confirm, these two great points, which are established by many other reasons that are unanswerable. Addison's Spectator.
As to the excuse drawn from the demands of creditors, if it be real, it is unanswerable. Atterbury's Sermons.

UNANSWERABLY. adv. Beyond confutation.
It will put their little logic hard to it, to prove, that there can be any obedience, where there is no command. And therefore it unanswerably follows, that the abettors of the forementioned principle plead conscience in a direct and bare-faced contradiction to God's express command. South.

UNANSWERED. adj.
1. Not opposed by a reply.
Unanswer'd left thou boast. Milton's Par. Lost.
Must I tamely bear
This arrogance unanswer'd? Thou'rt a traitor. Addison.

2. Not confuted.
All these reasons, they say, have been brought, and were hitherto never answer'd; besides a number of meriments and jests unanswer'd likewise. Hooker.

3. Not suitably returned.
Quench, Corydon, thy long unanswer'd fire;
Mind what the common wants of life require. Dryden.

UNAPPALED. adj. Not daunted; not impress'd by fear.
If my memory must thus be thrall'd
To that strange stroke, which conquered all my senses;
Can thoughts still thinking to rest unappall'd? Sidney.
Infernal ghosts
Environ'd thee; some howl'd, some yell'd, some shriek'd;
Some bent at thee their fiery darts; while thou Sat'st unappall'd in calm and sinless peace. Milton.
As a lion, unappall'd with fear,
Springs on the toils, and rushes on the spear. Dryden.
Does this appear like guilt? When thus serene,
With eyes erect, and visage unappall'd,
Fixt on that awful face, I stand the charge;
Amaz'd, not fearing. Smith's Phœd. and Hypolitus.

UNAPPA'RLLED. adj. Not dressed; not clothed.
In Peru, though they were an unapparell'd people, and had some customs very barbarous, yet the government of the Incas had many parts of civility. Bacon's Holy Wars.
Till our souls be unapparell'd
Of bodies, they from bliss are banished. Dante.

UNAPPA'RENT. adj. Obscure; not visible.
Thy potent voice he hears,
And longer will delay to hear thee tell
His generation, and the rising birth
Of nature, from the unapparent deep. Milton.

UNAPPEASABLE. adj. Not to be pacified; implacable.
The unappeasable rage of Hildebrand and his successors, never left persecuting him, by raising one rebellion upon another. Raleigh's Essays.
I see thou art implacable; more deaf
To prayers than winds to seas; yet winds to seas
Are reconcil'd at length, and seas to shore.
Thy anger, unappeasable, still rages,
Eternal tempest never to be calm'd. Milton.

UNAPPEASED. adj. Not pacified.
Sacrifice his flesh,
That for the shadows be not unappeas'd. Shakespeare.
His son forgot, his empress unappeas'd;
How soon the tyrant with new love is seiz'd. Dryden.

UNA

UNAPPLICABLE. adj. [from apply.] Such as cannot be applied.
Gratitude, by being confined to the few, has a very narrow province to work on, being acknowledged to be unapplicable, and so consequently ineffectual to all others. Hammond.
Their beloved earl of Manchester appeared now as unapplicable to their purposes as the other. Carendon.
The singling out, and laying in order those intermediate ideas, that demonstratively shew the equality or inequality of unapplicable quantities, has produced discoveries. Locke.

UNAPPREHENDED. adj. Not understood.
They of whom God is altogether unapprehended, are but few in number, and for grossness of wit such, that they hardly seem to hold the place of human being. Hooker.

UNAPPREHENSIVE. adj. [from apprehend.]
1. Not intelligent; not ready of conception.
The same temper of mind makes a man unapprehensive and insensible of any misery suffered by others. South.
2. Not suspecting.
UNAPPROACHED. adj. Inaccessible.
God is light,
And never but in unapproach'd light
Dwells from eternity. Milton's Par. Lost.

UNAPPROVED. adj. [from approve.] Not approved.
Evil into the mind
May come and go so unapproved, and leave
No spot behind. Milton.

UNAPT. adj. [from apt.]
1. Dull; not apprehensive.
2. Not ready; not propense.
I am a soldier, and unapt to weep. Shakespeare.
My blood hath been too cold and temperate,
Unapt to stir at these indignities. Shakespeare.

3. Unfit; not qualified.
Fear doth grow from an apprehension of deity indued with irresistible power to hurt; and is, of all affections (anger excepted) the unaptest to admit any conference with reason. Hooker.
A longing after sensual pleasures is a dissolution of the spirit of a man, and makes it loose, soft and wandering, unapt for noble, wise, or spiritual employments. Taylor.

4. Improper; unfit; unsuitable.
UNAP'TLY. adv. [from unapt.] Unfitly; improperly.
He swims on his back; and the shape of his back seems to favour it, being very like the bottom of a boat: nor do his hinder legs unaptly resemble a pair of oars. Grew.

UNAP'TNESS. n. f. [from unapt.]
1. Unfitness; unsuitableness.
Men's apparel is commonly made according to their conditions; and their conditions are often governed by their garments: for the person that is gowned, is by his gown put in mind of gravity, and also restrained from lightness by the very unap'tness of his weed. Spenser.
2. Dulness; want of apprehension.
That unap'tness made you minister
Thus to excuse yourself. Shakespeare. Timon of Athens.

3. Unreadiness; disqualification; want of propension.
The mind, by being engaged in a task beyond its strength, like the body, strained by lifting a weight too heavy, has often its force broken, and thereby gets an unap'tness, or an aversion to any vigorous attempt ever after. Locke.

UNARGUED. adj. [from argue.]
1. Not disputed.
What thou bid'st,
Unargu'd I obey; 'so God ordains. Milton's Par. Lost.

2. Not censured.
Not that his work liv'd in the hands of foes,
Unargu'd then, and yet, hath fame from those. B. Johnson.

To UNARM. v. a. [from arm.] To disarm; to strip of armour; to deprive of arms.
Unarm, unarm, and do not fight to-day. Shakespeare.
Unarm me, Eros; the long day's task is done,
And we must sleep. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.
Galen would not leave unto the world too subtle a theory of poisons; unarming thereby the malice of venomous spirits. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

UNARMED. adj. [from unarm.] Having no armour; having no weapons.
On the western coast
Rideth a puissant navy: to our shores
Throng many doubtful, hollow-hearted friends,
Unarm'd, and unresolv'd to beat them back. Shakespeare.
He all unarm'd
Shall chafe thee with the terror of his voice
From thy demoniac holds, possession foul;
Thou and thy legions, yelling they shall fly,
And beg to hide them in a herd of swine. Milton.
Though unarm'd I am,
Here, without my sword or pointed lance,
Hope not, bafe man, to question'd hence to go. Dryden.
Whereas most other creatures are furnished with weapons for their defence; man is born altogether unarmed. Grew.

UNARRA'IGNED. adj. Not brought to a trial.

UNA

As lawful lord, and king by just descent,
Should here be judg'd, unheard, and unarraign'd. Daniel.

UNARRA'YED. adj. Not dressed.
As if this infant world yet unarray'd,
Naked and bare, in nature's lap were laid. Dryden.
Half unarray'd, he ran to his relief,
So hasty and so artless was his grief. Dryden.

UNARTFUL. adj.
1. Having no art, or cunning.
A cheerful sweetness in his looks he has,
And innocence unartful in his face. Dryden's Juvenal.
2. Wanting skill.
How unartful would it have been to have set him in a corner, when he was to have given light and warmth to all the bodies round him? Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

UNARTFULLY. adv. In an unartful manner.
In the report, although it be not unartfully drawn, and is perfectly in the spirit of a pleader, there is no great skill required to detect the many mistakes. Swift's Miscellany.

UNARTIFICIALLY. adv. Contrarily to art.
Not a feather is unartificially made, misplaced, redundant, or defective. Derham's Physico-Theology.

UNASKED. adj. Not sought by solicitation.
With what eagerness, what circumstance
Unask'd, thou tak'st such pains to tell me only My son's the better man. Denham's Sophy.
The bearded corn ensu'd
From earth unask'd, nor was that earth renew'd. Dryden.
How, or why
Shou'd all conspire to cheat us with a lye?
Unask'd their pains, ungrateful their advice;
Starving their gain, and martyrdom their price. Dryden.

UNASPIRING. adj. Not ambitious.
To be modest and unaspiring, in honour preferring one another. Rogers.

UNASSAILED. adj. Not attacked; not assailed.
As I intend, Clifford, to thrive to-day,
It grieves my soul to leave thee unassail'd. Shakespeare.
I believe
That he, the supreme good, 't'whom all things ill
Are but as slavish officers of vengeance,
Would send a glistering guardian, if need were,
To keep my life and honour unassail'd. Milton's Comus.

UNASSAILABLE. adj. Exempt from assault.
In the number, I do but know one,
That unassailable holds on his rank,
Unshak'd of motion. Shakespeare. Julius Caesar.

UNASSAYED. adj. Unattempted.
What is faith, love, virtue unassay'd
Alone, without exterior help sustain'd. Milton.

UNASSISTED. adj. Not helped.
Its victories were the victories of reason, unassisted by the force of human power, and as gentle as the triumphs of light over darkness. Addison's Freeholder.
What unassisted reason could not discover, that God has set clearly before us in the revelation of the gospel: a felicity equal to our most enlarged desires; a state of immortal and unchangeable glory. Rogers's Sermons.

UNASSISTING. adj. Giving no help.
With these I went, a brother of the war;
Nor idle stood, with unassisting hands,
When savage beasts, and men's more savage bands,
Their virtuous toil subdu'd: yet these I sway'd. Dryden.

UNASSUMING. adj. Not arrogant.
Unassuming worth in secret liv'd,
And died neglected. Thomson's Winter.

UNASSURED. adj.
1. Not confident.
The ensuing treatise, with a timorous and unassured countenance, adventures into your presence. Glanville.
2. Not to be trusted.
The doubts and dangers, the delays and woes;
The feigned friends, the unassured foes,
Do make a lover's life a wretch's hell. Spenser.

UNATTA'INABLE. adj. Not to be gained or obtained; being out of reach.
Praise and prayer are God's due worship; which are unattainable by our discourse, simply considered, without the benefit of divine revelation. Dryden's Religio Laici.
I do not expect that men should be perfectly kept from error; that is more than human nature can, by any means, be advanced to: I aim at no such unattainable privilege; I only speak of what they should do. Locke.

UNATTA'INABLENESS. n. f. State of being out of reach.
Desire is stopped by the opinion of the impossibility, or unattainableness of the good proposed. Locke.

UNATTEMPTED. adj. Untried; not assayed.
He left no means unattempted of destroying his son. Sidney.
Not that I have the power to clutch my hand,
When his fair angels would salute my palm;
But that my hand, as unattempted yet,
Like a poor beggar, rattleth on the rich. Shakespeare.

UNA

It pursues
Things unattempted yet in prose or rhyme. Milton.
Leave nothing unattempted to destroy
That perjur'd race. Denham.
Shall we be discouraged from any attempt of doing good, by the possibility of our failing in it? How many of the best things would, at this rate, have been left unattempted? Atterb.
UNATTEMPTED. adj. Having no retinue, or attendants.
Your constancy
Hath left you unattended. Shaksp. Macbeth.
With goddess-like demeanor forth she went,
Not unattended. Milton's Par. Lost.
Such unattended generals can never make a revolution in Parnassus. Dryden.
UNATTENDING. adj. Not attending.
Ill is lost that praise,
That is address'd to unattending ears. Milton.
Ev'ry nymph of the flood, her tresses rending,
Throws off her amulet of pearl in the main;
Neptune in anguish his charge unattending,
Vessels are found'ring, and vows are in vain. Dryden.
UNATTENTIVE. adj. Not regarding.
Man's nature is so unattentive to good, that there can scarce be too many monitors. Government of the Tongue.
Such things are not accompanied with show, and therefore seldom draw the eyes of the unattentive. Tatler, N. 55.
UNATTENDED. adj. Not expiated.
Could you afford him such a bribe as that,
A brother's blood yet unattor'd? Reeve.
UNAVAILABLE. adj. Useless; vain with respect to any purpose.
When we have endeavoured to find out the strongest causes, wherefore they should imagine that reading is so un- available, the most we can learn is, that sermons are the ordinance of God, the scriptures dark, and the labour of reading easy. Hooker.
UNAVAILABLE. adj. Useless; vain.
Since my inevitable death you know,
You safely unavailable pity show:
'Tis popular to mourn a dying foe. Dryden's Aurengzebe.
Supine he tumbles on the crimson sands,
Before his helpless friends and native bands,
And spreads for aid his unavailable hands. Pope.
UNAVOIDABLE. adj.
1. Inevitable; not to be shunned.
Oppression on one side, and ambition on the other, are the unavoidable occasions of war. Dryden.
It is unavoidable to all, to have opinions, without certain proofs of their truth. Locke.
Single acts of transgression will, through weakness and surprise, be unavoidable to the best guarded. Rogers.
The merits of Christ will make up the unavoidable deficiencies of our service; will prevail for pardon to our sincere repentance. Rogers.
All sentiments of worldly grandeur vanish at that unavoid- able moment, which decides the destiny of men. Clarissa.
2. Not to be mislead in ratiocination.
That something is of itself, is self-evident, because we see things are; and the things that we see must either have had some first cause of their being, or have been always, and of themselves: one of them is unavoidable. Tillotson.
I think it unavoidable for every rational creature, that will examine his own or any other existence, to have the notion of an eternal, wise being, who had no beginning. Locke.
UNAVOIDABLENESS. n. f. Inevitability.
How can we conceive it subject to material impressions?
and yet the impotency of pain, and unavoidableness of sensations, strongly persuade that we are so. Glanville.
UNAVOIDABLY. adv. Inevitably.
The most perfect administration must unavoidably produce opposition from multitudes who are made happy by it. Addison.
UNAVOIDED. adj. Inevitable.
We see the very wreck that we must suffer;
And unavoided is the danger now. Shaksp.
Rare poems ask rare friends;
Yet satyrs, since the most of mankind be
Their unavoided subject, fewest see. B. Johnson.
UNAUTHORISED. adj. Not supported by authority; not properly commissioned.
To kiss in private?
An unauthorized kiss. Shaksp. Othello.
It is for you to rage seas and land,
Unauthoriz'd by my supreme command. Dryden.
UNAWARE. adj. [from aware, or wary.]
UNAWARES. adv.
1. Without thought; without previous meditation.
It is my father's face,
Whom, in this conflict, I unawares have kill'd. Shaksp.
Firm we subsist; yet possible to swerve,
And fall into deception unaware. Milton.

A pleasant beverage he prepar'd before,
Of wine and honey mix'd; with added store
Of opium: to his keeper this he brought,
Who swallow'd unawares the sleepy draught,
And snor'd secure. Dryden.
'Tis a sensation like that of a limb lopp'd off; one is trying every minute unawares to use it, and finds it is not. Pope.
2. Unexpectedly; when it is not thought of; suddenly.
Take heed lest you fall unawares into that inconvenience you formerly found fault with. Spenser.
Left destruction come upon him at unawares, and let his net that he hath hid, catch himself. Psalms xxxvi. 8.
My hand, unawares to me, was, by the force of that endeavour it just before employed to sustain the fallen weight, carried up with such violence, that I bruised it. Boyle.
He breaks at unawares upon our walks.
And, like a midnight wolf, invades the fold. Dryden.
Though we live never so long, we are still surpris'd: we put the evil day far from us, and then it catches us unawares, and we tremble at the prospect. Wale.
UNAWED. adj. Unrestrained by fear or reverence.
The raging and fanatic distemper of the house of commons must be attributed to the want of such good ministers of the crown, as, being unawed by any guilt of their own,
could have watched other mens. Clarendon.
Unforc'd by punishment, unaw'd by fear,
His words were simple, and his soul sincere. Dryden.
UNBAKED. adj.
1. Not tamed; not taught to bear the rider.
Then I beat my tabor;
At which, like unbaked colts, they prick'd their ears,
Advanc'd their eyelids, lifted up their noses,
As they smelt musick. Shaksp. Tempest.
A well wayed horse will safely convey thee to thy journey's end, when an unbaked filly may give thee a fall. Suckling.
They flinch like unbaked fillies. Dennis's Letters.
2. Not countenanced; not aided.
Let the weight of thine own infamy
Fall on thee unsupported, and unbaked. Daniel's Civil War.
UNBALANCED. adj. Not poised; not in equipoise.
Let earth unbalanced from her orbit fly,
Planets and suns run lawless through the sky. Pope.
UNBALANCED. adj. Not kept steady by ballast; unsteady.
They having but newly left those grammatical flats, where they stuck unreasonably, to learn a few words with lamentable construction; and now on the sudden transported under another climate, to be tost and turmoil'd by their unbalanced wits, in fathomless and unquiet depths of controversy, do for the most part, grow into hatred of learning. Milton.
As at sea th' unbalanced vessel rides,
Cast to and fro, the sport of winds and tides:
So in the bounding chariot tost'd on high,
The youth is hurly'd headlong through the sky. Addison.
UNBANDIED. adj. [from band.] Wanting a string, or band.
Your hose should be ungarter'd, your bonnet unbanded, and every thing demonstrating a careless desolation. Shaksp.
UNBAR. v. a. [from bar.] To open, by removing the bars; to unbolt.
'Tis not secure, this place or that to guard,
If any other entrance stand unbar'd. Denham.
These rites the king refus'd,
Deaf to their cries; nor would the gates unbar
Of sacred peace, or loose th' unbar'd war. Dryden.
UNBARRED. adj. [from bar, Lat.] Not shaven. Out of use.
Must I go shew them my unbarred scone?
Must my base tongue give to my noble heart
A lie? Shaksp. Coriolanus.
UNBARKED. adj. [from bark.] Decorticated; stripped of the bark.
A branch of a tree, unbarked some space at the bottom, and so set in the ground, hath grown. Bacon.
UNBASKFUL. adj. Impudent; shameless.
Nor did I with unbaskful forehead woo
The means of weakness and debility. Shaksp. Lear.
UNBATED. adj. [from bate.] Not repressed; not blunted.
Where is the horse, that doth untread again
His tedious measures with th' unbated fire
That he did pace them first? Shaksp. Merch. of Venice.
UNBATHED. adj. [from bath.] Not wet.
Fierce Palimond, their passage to prevent,
Thrust full on Cymon's back in his descent;
The blade return'd unbathed, and to the handle bent. Dryden.
UNBATTERED. adj. Not injured by blows.
I cannot strike at wretched kernes, whose arms
Are hid'd to bear their slaves: or thou, Macbeth;
Or else my sword, with an unbattered edge,
I sheath again undeeded. Shaksp. Macbeth.
UNBERRING. adj. Bringing no fruit.

UNB

He with his pruning hook disjoins
Unbearing branches from their head,
And grafts more happy in their stead. Dryden.
To UNBAY. v. a. To set open; to free from the restraint of mounds.
I ought now to loose the reins of my affections, to unbay
the current of my passion, and love on without boundary or measure. Norris's Miscellany.
UNBEATEN. adj.
1. Not treated with blows.
His mare was truer than his chronicle;
For he had rode five miles unpurr'd, unbeaten,
And then at last turn'd tail towards Neweaton. Bp. Corbet.
2. Not trodden.
We must tread unbeaten paths, and make a way where we do not find one; but it shall be always with a light in our hand. Bacon.
If your bold muse dare tread unbeaten paths. Rescommon.
Virtue, to crown her fav'rites, loves to try
Some new, unbeaten passage to the sky. Swift.
UNBECOMING. adj. Indecent; unfit; indecorous.
Here's our chief guest.—
—If he had been forgotten,
It had been as a gap in our great feast,
And all things unbecoming. Shaksp. Macbeth.
None of retreat, no unbecoming deed
That argu'd fear. Milton's Par. Lost.
I should rather believe that the nose was the seat of wrath in beasts than in mankind; and that it was unbecoming of any but Pan, who had very much of the beast in him, to wrinkle up his nose in anger. Dryden.
My grief lets unbecoming speeches fall:
I should have dy'd, and not complain'd at all. Dryden.
This petulancy in conversation prevails among some of that sex, where it appears the most unbecoming and unnatural. Addison's Freeholder.
Men of wit, learning, and virtue, might strike out every offensive or unbecoming passage from plays. Swift.
Such proceed upon debates without unbecoming warmth. Swift.
UNBECOMINGNESS. n. f. Indecency; indecorum.
If words are sometimes to be used, they ought to be grave, kind and sober, representing the ill or unbecomingness of the fault. Locke.
To UNBED. v. a. To raise from a bed.
Eels unbed themselves, and stir at the noise of thunder. Walton's Angler.
UNBESITTING. adj. Not becoming; not suitable.
Love is full of unbesitting trains,
All wanton as a child, skipping in vain. Shaksp.
Far be it that I should write thee sin, or blame!
Or think thee unbesitting holiest place. Milton.
He might several times have made peace with his discontented subjects upon terms not at all unbesitting his dignity or interest; but he rather chose to sacrifice the whole alliance to his private passion. Swift.
To UNBEGE'T. v. n. To deprive of existence.
Withes each minute he could unbeget
Those rebel sons, who dare t' usurp his seat. Dryden.
UNBEGOT. adj. [from beget.]
UNBEGOTTEN. adj.
1. Eternal; without generation.
Why should he attribute the same honour to matter, which is subject to corruption, as to the eternal, unbegotten, and immutable God? Stillington.
2. Not yet generated.
God omnipotent, must'ring
Armies of pestilence; and they shall strike
Your children yet unborn, and unbegot. Shaksp.
In thy pow'r
It lies yet, ere conception, to prevent
The race unblest, to being yet unbegot. Milton's Par. Lost.
Where a child finds his own parents his perversers, better were it for him to have been unborn and unbegot, than ask a blessing of those whose conversation breathes nothing but a curse. South's Sermons.
To UNBEGUILE. v. a. To undeceive; to set free from the influence of any deceit.
Then unbeguile thyself, and know with me,
That angels, though on earth employ'd they be,
Are still in heav'n.
Their comeliness unbeguiled the vulgar of the odd opinion the loyalists had formerly infused into them, by their conjunctory invectives. Howel's Vocal Forest.
UNBEGUIL'D. adj. Unseen; not discoverable to the sight.
These then, though unbeheld in deep of night,
Shine not in vain. Milton.
UNBELIEF. n. f.
1. Incredulity.
'Tis not vain or fabulous,
What the sage poets, taught by th' heav'nly muse,

UNB

Storied of old in high immortal verse,
Of dire chimera's, and enchanted isles,
And rifted rocks, whose entrance leads to hell;
For such there be, but unbelief is blind. Milton.
I'm justly plagu'd by this your unbelief,
And am myself the cause of my own grief. Dryden.
Such an universal acquaintance with things will keep you from an excess of credulity and unbelief; i. e. a readiness to believe, or to deny every thing at first hearing. Watts.
2. Infidelity; irreligion.
Where profess'd unbelief is, there can be no visible church of Christ; there may be where found belief wanteth. Hooker.
To UNBELIEVE. v. a.
1. To discredit; not to trust.
Heav'n shield your grace from woe,
As I, thus wrong'd, hence unbelieved go. Shaksp.
So great a prince and favourite is suddenly metamorphos'd into travellers with no greater train, was enough to make any man unbelieve his five senses. Wotton's Buckingham.
2. Not to think real or true.
Nor less than sight and hearing could convince,
Of such an unforeseen and unbelieved offence. Dryden.
UNBELIEVER. n. f. An infidel; one who believes not the scripture of God.
The ancient fathers being often constrained to shew, what warrant they had so much to rely upon the scriptures, endeavoured still to maintain the authority of the books of God, by arguments such as unbelievers themselves must needs think reasonable, if they judg'd thereof as they should. Hooker.
What endless war wou'd jealous nations tear,
If none above did witness what they swear?
Sad fate of unbelievers, and yet just,
Among themselves to find so little trust. Waller.
In the new testament, religion is usually expressed by faith in God and Christ, and the love of them. Hence it is that true christians are so frequently called believers; and wicked and ungodly men unbelievers. Tillotson.
He pronounces the children of such parents as were, one of them a christian, and the other an unbeliever, holy, on account of the faith and holiness of that one. Atterbury.
Men always grow vicious before they become unbelievers;
but if you would once convince profligates by topics drawn from the view of their own quiet reputation, and health, their infidelity would soon drop off. Swift's Miscellanies.
UNBELIEVING. adj. Infidel.
No pause,
No stay of slaughter found his vigorous arm;
But th' unbelieving squadrons turn'd to flight,
Smote in the rear. Phillips.
This wrought the greatest confusion in the unbelieving
Jews, and the greatest conviction in the Gentiles. Addison.
In the days of the apostle, when all who profess'd themselves disciples of Christ were converts of conscience, this severe censure might be restrained to the unbelieving part of mankind. Rogers's Sermons.
UNBELOVED. adj. Not loved.
Who'er you are, not unbelov'd by heav'n,
Since on our friendly shore your ships are driv'n. Dryden.
To UNBEND. v. a. To relax; to remit; to ease.
You unbend your noble strength, to think
So brain-sickly of things. Shaksp. Macbeth.
It is lawful to relax and unbend our bow, but not to suffer it to be unready, or unstrung. Taylor's Holy Living.
Here have I seen the king, when great affairs
Gave leave to slacken and unbend his cares,
Attended to the chase by all the flow'r of youth. Denham.
From those great cares when ease your soul unbends,
Your pleasures are design'd to noble ends. Dryden.
I must be in the battle; but I'll go
With empty quiver, and unbended bow. Dryden.
UNBENDING. adj.
1. Not suffering flexure.
Not so, when swift Camilla scours the plain,
Flies o'er th' unbending corn, and skirts along the main. Pope.
2. Devoted to relaxation.
Since what was omitted in the acting is now kept in, I hope it may entertain your lordship at an unbending hour. Reeve.
UNBENEVOLENT. adj. Not kind.
A religion which not only forbids, but by its natural influence sweetens all bitterness and asperity of temper, and corrects that selfish narrowness of spirit, which inclines men to a fierce, unbenevolent behaviour. Rogers's Sermons.
UNBENEFICED. adj. Not preferred to a benefice.
More vacant pulpits wou'd more converts make;
All wou'd have latitude enough to take;
The rest unbenefic'd your sects maintain. Dryden.
UNBENIGHTED. adj. Never visited by darkness.
Beyond the polar circles; to them day
Had unbenighted shone, while the low sun,
To recompence his distance, in their light
Had rounded still the horizon. Milton's Par. Lost.
UNBENIGHTEN.

U N B

UNBENIGN. adj. Malignant; malevolent.
To th' other five
Their planetary motions, and aspects,
In textile, square, and trine, and opposite,
Of noxious efficacy; and when to join
In synod unbeneign. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x. l. 661.

UNBENT. adj.
1. Not strained by the string.
Apollo heard, and conqu'ring his disdain,
Unbent his bow, and Greece inspir'd again. Dryden.
2. Having the bow unstrung.
Why hast thou gone so far,
To be unbent when thou hast ta'en thy stand,
Th' elected deer before thee? Shakep. Cymbeline.
3. Not crushed; not subdued.
But thou, secure of soul, unbent with woes,
The more thy fortune frowns, the more oppose. Dryden.
4. Relaxed; not intent.
Be not always on affairs intent,
But let thy thoughts be easy and unbent:
When our mind's eyes are disengag'd and free,
They clearer, farther, and distinctly see. Denham.

UNBESPEMING. adj. Unbecoming.
No emotion of passion transported me by the indignity of his carriage, to do or say any thing unbefitting myself. K. Charles.
Far be the spirit of the chase from them;
Uncomely courage, unbefitting skill. Thomson.

UNBESPOUGHT. adj. Not treated.
Left heat should injure us, his timely care
Hath, unbefought, provided; and his hands
Cloath'd us unworthy; pitying while he judg'd. Milton.

UNBESTOWED. adj. Not given; not disposed of.
He had now but one son and one daughter unbeflowed. Bacon.

UNBETRAYED. adj. Not betrayed.
Many being privy to the fact,
How hard is it to keep it unbetray'd? Daniel's Civil War.

UNBEWAILED. adj. Not lamented.
Hold unbewail'd their way. Shakep. Ant. and Cleopatra.

TO UNBETWICH. v. a. [from with.] To free from fascination.
TO UNBIASS. v. a. To free from any external motive; to disentangle from prejudice.
That our understandings may be free to examine, and reason unbias'd give its judgment; being that whereon a right direction of our conduct to true happiness depends; it is in this we should employ our chief care. Locke.
The standing evidences of the gospel, every time they are consider'd, gain upon sincere, unbias'd minds. Atterbury.
The truest service a private man may do his country, is by unbiasing his mind, as much as possible, between the rival powers. Swift.
Where's the man who counsel can bestow,
Unbias'd, or by favour, or by spite;
Not dully prepossess'd, nor blindly right. Pope.

UNBIASSEDLY. adj. Without external influence; without prejudice.
I have sought the true meaning; and have unbias'dly embraced what, upon a fair enquiry, appeared so to me. Locke.

UNBID. adj.
1. Uninvited.
Unbidden guests
Are often welcome when they are gone. Shakep.
2. Uncommanded; spontaneous.
Thorns also and thistles it shall bring thee forth Unbid. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x. l. 204.
Roses unbids, and ev'ry fragrant flow'r,
Flew from their stalks, to throw thy nuptial bow'r. Dryden.
Unbidden earth shall wreathing ivy bring,
And fragrant herbs the promises of spring. Dryden.

UNBOTTLED. adj. Free from bigotry.
Erasmus, who was an unbottled Roman Catholic, was so much transported with this passage of Socrates, that he could scarce forbear looking upon him as a saint, and desiring him to pray for him. Addison.

TO UNBOUND. v. a. [from bind.] To loose; to untie.
His own woe's author, who bound it finds,
As did Pyrocles, and it willfully unbinds. Fairy Queen.
Ye Latian dames,
If there be here, who dare maintain
My right, nor think the name of mother vain,
Unbind your fillets, loose your flowing hair,
And orgies, and nocturnal rites prepare. Dryden.
On the sixth instant it was thought fit to unbind his head. Tatler, N° 55.

TO UNBUSH. v. a. [from bush.] To deprive of episcopal orders.
I cannot look upon Titus as so far unbush'd yet, but that he still exhibits to us all the essentials of jurisdiction. South.

UNBUTTERED. adj. [from but.] Unbridled; unrestrained.
We have reason to cool our raging motions, our carnal flings, our unbitted lulls; whereof I take this love to be a reë or cyon. Shakep. Othello.

U N B

UNBLAMABLE. adj. Not culpable; not to be charged with a fault.
Much more could I say concerning this unblamable inequality of fines and rates. Bacon.
He lov'd his people, him they idoliz'd;
And thence proceeds my mortal hatred to him;
That thus unblamable to all beside,
He err'd to me alone. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

UNBLAMABLY. adv. Without taint of fault.
Ye are witnesses, and God also, how holily, and justly, and unblameably we behaved ourselves. 1 Thess. ii. 10.

UNBLAMELESS. adj. Blameless; free from fault.
Shall spend your days in joy unblame'd, and dwell Long time in peace. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii. l. 22.
Unblame'd, abundance crown'd her royal board,
What time this dome rever'd her prudent lord,
Who now is doom'd to mourn. Pope's Odyssey.

UNBLEMISHED. adj. Free from turpitude; free from reproach;
free from deformity.
O welcome, pure-ey'd faith, white-handed hope;
Thou hovering angel, girl with golden wings,
And thou unblemish'd form of chastity.
Under this stone lies virtue, youth,
Unblemish'd probity, and truth.
Is none worthy to be made a wife
In all this town? Suppose her free from strife, Rich, fair, and fruitful, of unblemish'd life. Dryden.
They appointed, out of these new converts, men of the best sense, and of the most unblemish'd lives, to preside over these several assemblies. Addison.

UNBLEMISHED. adj. Not mingled.
None can boast a knowledge depure from defilement, within this atmosphere of flesh; it dwells no where in unblemished proportions on this side the empyreum. Glaville.

UNBLEMISHED. adj. Not disgraced; not injured by any fault.
There, where very defolation dwells,
She may pass on with unblemish'd majesty;
Be it not done in pride, or in presumption. Milton.

UNBLEST. adj.
1. Accursed; excluded from benediction.
It is a shameful and unblest thing, to take the scum of people, and wicked, condemned men, to be the people with whom you plant. Bacon.
2. Wretched; unhappy.
In thy pow'r
It lies yet, ere conception, to prevent
The race unblest, to being yet unbegot. Milton.
What is true passion, if unblest it dies?
And where is Emma's joy, if Henry flies? Prior.

UNBLOODED. adj. Not stained with blood.
Who finds the partridge in the puttock's nest,
But may imagine how the bird was dead,
Although the kite fear with unbloody beak. Shakep.

UNBLOODY. adj. Not cruel; not shedding blood; not stained with blood.
Under the ledge of Atlas lies a cave,
The venerable seat of holy hermits,
Who there, secure in separated cells,
From the purling streams, and savage fruits,
Have wholesome bev'rage, and unbloody feasts. Dryden.

UNBLOWN. adj. Having the bud yet unexpanded.
Ah! my poor prince! Ah! my tender babes!
My unblown flowers, new-appearing sweets! Shakep.

UNBLUNTED. adj. Not becoming obtuse.
A sword, whose weight without a blow might slay;
Able, unblunted, to cut hoists away. Cervantes's Don Quixote.

UNBODIED. adj.
1. Incorporeal; immaterial.
If we could conceive of things as angels and unbodied spirits do, without involving them in those clouds language throws upon them, we should seldom be in danger of such mistakes as are perpetually committed. Watts's Logic.
2. Freed from the body.
She hath the bonds broke of eternal night;
Her soul unbodied of the burdensome corpse. Spenser.
All things are but alter'd, nothing dies;
And here and there th' unbodiy'd spirit flies. Dryden.

UNBOILED. adj. Not foddin.
A quarter of a pint of rice unboiled, will arise to a pint boiled. Bacon.

TO UNBOIL. v. a. To let open; to unbar.
I'll call my uncle down;
He shall unboil the gates. Shakep. Troilus and Cressida.

UNBOULDED. adj. Coarse; gross; not refined, as flour by bolting or sifting.
I will tread this unbould villain into mortar, and daub the wall of a jakes with him. Shakep. Lear.

UNBONNETTED. adj. Wanting a hat or bonnet.
This night, wherein
The lion, and the belly-pinched wolf
Keep their fur dry; unbunnetted he runs,
And bids what will, take all. Shakep. K. Lear.

U N B

UNBROOKISH. adj.
1. Not studious of books.
2. Not cultivated by erudition.
As he shall smile, Othello shall go mad;
And his unbrookish jealousy must contrive
Poor Cassio's smiles, gestures, and light behaviour, Quite in the wrong. Shakep. Othello.

UNBORN. adj. Not yet brought into life; future; being to come.
Some unborn sorrow, ripe in fortune's womb,
Is coming tow'rd me. Shakep. Richard II.
The woes to come, the children yet unborn
Shall feel this day, as sharp to them as thorn. Shakep.
Never so much as in a thought unborn,
Did I offend you. Shakep. As you like it.
He on the wings of cherubim
Up-lifted, in paternal glory rode Far into chaos, and the world unborn. Milton's Par. Lost.
To what wretched state reliev'd!
Better end here unborn! Why is life giv'n
To be thus waded from us? Milton's Par. Lost.
A queen, from whom
The souls of kings unborn for bodies wait. Dryden.

UNBORROWED. adj. Genuine; native; one's own.
But the luxurious father of the fold,
With native purple, and unborrow'd gold,
Beneath his pompous fleece shall proudly sweat. Dryden.
In substances, especially those which the common and unborrow'd names of any language are applied to, some remarkable, sensible qualities, serve to distinguish one from another. Locke.

UNBOTTOMED. adj.
1. Without bottom; bottomless.
The dark, unbottom'd, infinite abyss. Milton.
2. Having no solid foundation.
This is a special act of christian hope, to be thus unbottom'd of ourselves, and fastened upon God, with a full reliance, trust, and dependance on his mercy. Hammond.

TO UNBOSOM. v. a.
1. To reveal in confidence.
I lov'd thee, as too well thou knew'st;
Too well, unbosom'd all my secrets to thee,
Not out of levity, but overpower'd
By thy request, who could deny thee nothing. Milton.
Do we unbosom all our secrets to him, and hide nothing that passeth in the depth of our hearts from him? Atterbury.
2. To open; to disclose.
Should I thence, hurried on viewless wing,
Take up a weeping on the mountains wild,
The gentle neighbourhood of grove and spring
Would soon unbosom all their echo's mild. Milton.

UNBOUGHT. adj.
1. Obtained without money.
The unbought dainties of the poor. Dryden's Horace.
2. Not finding any purchaser.
The merchant will leave our native commodities unbought upon the hands of the farmer, rather than export them to a market, which will not afford him returns with profit. Locke.

UNBOUND. adj.
1. Loose; not tied.
2. Wanting a cover.
He that has complex ideas, without particular names for them, would be in no better case than a bookfeller, who had volumes that lay unbound, and without titles; which he could make known to others, only by shewing the loose sheets. Locke.
3. Preterite of unbind.
Some from their chains the faithful dogs unbound. Dryden.

UNBOUND. adj.
1. Infinite; interminable.
Long were to tell what I have done;
I voyag'd the unreal, vast, unbounded deep
Of horrible confusion. Milton.
The wide, th' unbounded prospect lies before me;
But shadows, clouds, and darknesses rest upon it. Addison.
2. Unlimited; unrestrained.
He was a man
Of an unbounded stomach, ever ranking Himself with princes. Shakep. Lear.
He had given his curiosity its full, unbounded range, and exa-min'd not only in contemplation, but by sensitive experiment, whatever could be good for the sons of men. Decay of Piety.

UNBOUNDLESSLY. adv. Without bounds; without limits.
So unboundedly mischievous is that petulant member, that heaven and earth are not wide enough for its range, but it will find work at home too. Government of the Tongue.

UNBOUNDNESS. n. s. Exemption from limits.
Finitude, applied to created things, imports the proportions of the several properties of these things to one another. Infinitude, the unboundness of these degrees of properties. Cheyne.

UNBOWED. adj. Not bent.
He knits his brow, and frowns an angry eye,
And passeth by with stiff, unbowed knee,
Disdaining duty that to us belongs. Shakep. Hen. VI.

U N B

TO UNBOWEL. v. n. To exenterate; to eviscerate.
In this chapter I'll unbowel the state of the question. Hakewill.
It is now become a new species of divinity, to branch out with fond distinctions our holy faith, which the pious simplicity of the first christians received to practice; not to read upon as an anatomy, unbowel and dissect to try experiments. Decay of Piety.

TO UNBRAVE. v. a.
1. To loose; to relax.
With whose reproach and odious menace,
The knight embolling in his haughty heart,
Knit all his forces, and gan soon unbrace
His grasping hold. Fairy Queen, b. 2. c. 4. st. 9.
Somewhat of mournful fure my cars does wound;
Drums unbraced, with soldiers broken cries.
Nought shall the ptery and the harp avail,
When the quick spirits their warm march forbear,
And numbing coldness has unbrac'd the ear. Prior.
Wasting years, that wither human race,
Exhaust thy spirits, and thy arms unbrace. Pope's Iliad.

2. To make the clothes loose.
Is it physical,
To walk unbrac'd, and suck up the humours
Of the dank morning? Shakep. Julius Caesar.
Hamlet, with his doublet all unbrac'd;
No hat upon his head, his stockings loose. Shakep.

UNBREATHED. v. a. Not exercised.
They now have toll'd their unbreath'd memories,
With this fame play against our nuptials. Shakep.

UNBREATHING. adj. Unanimated.
They spake not a word;
But like dumb statues, or unbreathing stones,
Star'd each on other, and look'd deadly pale. Shakep.

UNBRED. adj.
1. Not instructed in civility; ill educated.
Unbred minds must be a little sent abroad. Gov. of Tongue.
Children learn from unbred or debauched servants, un-towardly tricks. Locke on Education.
Sure never any thing was so unbred as that odious man. Congreve's Way of the World.
2. Not taught.
A warrior dame,
Unbred to spinning, in the loom unskill'd. Dryden.

UNBREECHED. adj. Having no breeches.
Looking on my boy's face, methoughts I did recoil
Twenty-three years, and saw myself unbreech'd,
In my green velvet coat. Shakep. Winter Tale.

UNBRIED. adj. Not influenced by money or gifts; not hired.
The foul gave all;
Unbri'd it gave; or, if a bribe appear,
No less than heav'n. Dryden.
To succour the distress'd;
Unbri'd by love; untrifled by threats. A. Phillips.

UNBRI'DLED. adj. Licentious; not restrained.
This is not well, rash and unbri'dled boy,
To fly the favours of so good a king. Shakep.
We have considered religious zeal, which transgresses in unbridled excess. Spratt's Sermons.

TO UNBRIDLE. v. a.
Dares thy unbri'dled boldness run itself? B. Johnson.

UNBROKEN. adj. [from break.]
1. Not violated.
God pardon all oaths, that are broke to me;
God keep all vows unbroke, are made to thee. Shakep.
Some married persons, even in their marriage, do please
God, by preserving their faith unbroke. Taylor.
He first broke peace in heav'n, and faith, till then Unbroke. Milton.
2. Not subdued; not weakened.
From his seat the Pylion prince arose:
Two centuries already he fulfill'd;
And now began the third, unbroken yet. Dryden.
How broad his shoulders spread! by age unbroke! Pope.
3. Not tamed.
A lonely cow,
Unworn with yokes, unbroke to the plow. Addison.

UNBROTHERLIKE. adj. Ill suiting with the character of a brother.
Victor's unbrotherlike heat towards the eastern churches, fomented that difference about Easter into a schism. Decay of Piety.

UNBRUISED. adj. Not bruised; not hurt.
On Dardan plains,
The fresh, and yet unbruised Greeks do pitch
Their brave pavilions. Shakep.
Thou'st years upon thee, and thou art too full
Of the war's furcits, to go rove with one That's yet unbruised. Shakep. Coriolanus.
Care keeps his watch in ev'ry old man's eye:
And where care lodgeth, sleep will never lie;
But where unbruised youth, with unfift brain,
Doth couch his limbs, there golden sleep doth reign. Shakep.

U N C

To UNBUCKLE. v. a. To loose from buckles.
We have been down together in my sleep,
Unbuckling helms; sitting each other's throat,
And wak'd half dead with nothing. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
He that unbuckles this, till we do please
To doff't for our purpose, shall hear a storm. Shakefp.
His starry helm unbuckled, shew'd him prime
In manhood, where youth ended. Milton's Par. Lost.
Laid their bright arms along the fable shore.
To UNBUILD. v. a. To raze; to destroy.
This is the way to kindle, not to quench;
To unbuild the city, and to lay all flat. Shakefp.peare.
What will they then but unbuild
His living temples, built by faith to stand;
Their own faith, not another's? Milton's Par. Lost.
UNBUILT. adj. Not yet erected.
Built walls you thum, unbuilt you see. Dryden.
UNBURIED. adj. Not interred; not honoured with the rites of funeral.
Why suffer'st thou thy sons, unburi'd yet,
To hover on the dreadful shore of Styx? Shakefp.
The moss which groweth upon the skull of a dead man unburi'd, will staunch blood potentially. Bacon.
The hardest ingredient to come by, is the moss upon the skull of a dead man unburi'd. Bacon.
Him double cares attend,
For his unburi'd soldiers, and his friend. Dryden.
Breathless he lies; and his unburi'd ghost,
Depriv'd of funeral rites, pollutes your host. Dryden.
The wand'ring ghouls
Of king's unburi'd on the wasted coasts. Pope's Statius.
UNBURIED. adj.
UNBURIED. adj.
1. Not confin'd; not wasted; not injured by fire.
Creon denies the rites of funeral fires to those,
Whose breathless bodies yet he calls his foes;
Unburi'd, unburi'd, on a heap they lie. Dryden.
2. Not heated with fire.
Burnt wine is more hard and astringent, than wine unburi'd. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 898.
UNBURIED. adj. Not confuming by heat.
What we have said of the unburi'd fire called light, streaming from the flame of a candle, may easily be applied to all other light deprived of sensible heat. Dryden.
To UNBURTHEN. v. a.
1. To rid of a load.
We'll shake all cares and business from our age,
Conferring them on younger strengths; while we Unburden'd crawl toward death. Shakefp. K. Lear.
2. To throw off.
Sharp Buckingham unburi'd with his tongue
The envious load that lies upon his heart. Shakefp.
3. To disclose what lies heavy on the mind.
From your love I have a warranty
T' unburi'd all my plots and purposes,
How to get clear of all the debts I owe. Shakefp.
To UNBUTTON. v. a. To loose any thing buttoned.
Thou art fat-witted with drinking old sack, and unbuttoning thee after supper. Shakefp. Hen. IV.
Many catch cold on the breast, by leaving their doublets unbuttoned. Harvey on Consumption.
His silk waistcoat was unbuttoned in several places. Addison.
UNCALCINATED. adj. Free from calcination.
A saline substance, subtler than sal ammoniac, carried up with it, uncalcined gold in the form of subtle exhalations.
UNCALLED. adj. Not summoned; not sent for; not demanded.
Basilus had servants, who, though they came not uncalled, yet at call were ready. Sidney.
He, bolder now, uncall'd before her flood. Milton.
Mild Lucina came uncall'd, and stood
Beside the struggling boughs, and heard the groan,
Then reach'd her midwife hand to speed the throes. Dryden.
To UNCALM. adj. To disturb.
What strange disquiet has uncalm'd your breast,
Inhuman fair, to rob the dead of rest? Dryden.
UNCANCELLED. adj. Not erased; not abrogated.
I only mourn my yet uncancel'd score;
You put me past the pow'r of paying more. Dryden.
UNCANONICAL. adj. Not agreeable to the canons.
UNCAPABLE. adj. [incapable, Fr. incapax, Lat.] Not capable;
not susceptible.
Thou art come to answer
A stony adversary, an inhuman wretch,
Uncapable of pity, void and empty
From any dram of mercy. Shakefp. Mer. of Venice.
He who believes himself incapable of pardon, goes on without any care of reforming. Hammond.
This, whilst they are under the deceit of it, makes them incapable of conviction; and they applaud themselves as zealous

U N C

lous champions for truth, when indeed they are contending for error. Locke.
UNCARED for. adj. Not regarded; not attended to.
Their kings, to better their worldly estate, left their own and their people's ghostly condition uncared for.
UNCARNATE. adj. Not fleshly.
Nor need we be afraid to ascribe that to the incarnate son, which sometimes is attributed unto the incarnate father. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
To UNCASE. v. a.
1. To disengage from any covering.
See Pompey is uncasing for the combat. Shakefp.
Thou shalt be master, Tranio, in my stead.
'Tis hatch'd, and shall be so: Tranio, at once Uncase thee; take my colour'd hat and cloak. Shakefp.
Partly by his voice, and partly by his ears, was discover'd; and consequently uncased, well laughed at, and well cudgell'd. L'Estrange.
2. To flay.
Uncase me, and do with me what you please. Addison.
All men him uncased 'gan deride.
UNCAUGHT. adj. Not yet caught. Habber's Tale.
Let him fly far;
Not in this land shall he remain uncought,
And found dispatch'd. Shakefp. K. Lear.
His bosom glows with treasures yet uncought. Gay.
UNCAUSED. adj. Having no precedent cause.
UNCAUTIOUS. adj. Not wary; heedless.
Unforeseen, they say, is unprepared:
Uncautious Arcite thought himself alone. Dryden.
UNCELEBRATED. adj. Not solemnized.
Thus was the first day, ev'n and morn;
Nor pass'd uncelebrated, nor unsung
By the celestial choirs. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vii. l. 253.
UNCELSURED. adj. Exempt from public reproach.
How difficult must it be for any ruler to live uncelesured, where every one of the community is thus qualified for modelling the constitution? Addison's Freeholder.
Fear most to tax an honourable fool,
Whose right it is uncelesured to be dull.
To be uncelesured, and to be obfure, is the same thing. Pope's Letters.
UNCERTAIN. adj. [incertain, Fr. incertain, Lat.]
1. Doubtful; not certainly known.
That sacred pile, so vast, so high,
That whether 'tis a part of earth or sky,
Uncertain seems; and may be thought a proud
Aspiring mountain, or descending cloud. Denham.
2. Doubtful; not having certain knowledge.
Man, without the protection of a superior being, is secure of nothing that he enjoys, and uncertain of every thing that he hopes for. Tillotson.
3. Not sure in the consequence.
I must be married to my brother's daughter,
Or else my kingdom stands on brittle gla's:
Murder her brothers, and then marry her!
Uncertain way of gain! Shakefp. Richard III.
Africanus young, and eager of his game,
Soon bent his bow, uncertain in his aim:
But the dire fiend the fatal arrow guides,
Which pierc'd his bowels through his panting sides. Dryden.
In the bright air the fauchion shone,
Or whistling flings dismiss'd th' uncertain stone. Gay.
The search of our future being, is but a needless, anxious, and uncertain haste to be knowing, sooner than we can what, without all this solicitude, we shall know a little later. Pope.
4. Unsettled; irregular.
As the form of our public service is not voluntary, so neither are the parts thereof uncertain; but they are all set down in such order, and with such choice, as hath, in the wisdom of the church, seem'd best. Hooker.
UNCERTAINED. adj. Made uncertain. A word not used.
The diversity of seasons are not to uncertain'd by the sun and moon alone, who always keep one and the same course, but that the stars have also their working therein. Rutledge.
UNCERTAINTY. adv. Not surely; not certainly.
They that are past all hope of good, are past
All fear of ill: and yet if he be dead,
Speak softly, or uncertainly. Denham's Rapt.
Go, mortals, now, and vex yourselves in vain
For wealth, which for uncertainty must come:
When was brought so far, and with such pain,
Was only kept to lose it nearer home.
Names must be of very unsteady meaning, if the ideas be referred to standards without us, that cannot be known at all, or but very imperfectly and uncertainly. Locke.
UNCERTAINTY.

U N C

UNCERTAINTY. n. f.
1. Doubtfulness; want of knowledge.
All great concerns must delays endure;
Rashness and haste make all things unsecure;
And if uncertain thy pretensions be,
Stay till fit time wear out uncertainty. Denham.
You common cry of curs, whose breath I hate,
Here then remain with your uncertainty;
Let ev'ry feeble rumour shake your hearts.
That which makes doubtfulness and uncertainty in the sig-nification of some, more than other words, is the difference of ideas they stand for. Locke.
2. Contingency; want of certainty.
God's omniscience is a light shining into every dark corner, steadfastly grasping the greatest and most slippery uncertainties. South's Sermon.
3. Something unknown.
Our shepherd's care is every man's care, that quits a moral certainty for an uncertainty, and leaps from the honest business he was brought up to, into a trade he has no skill in. L'Estrange.
To UNCHAIN. v. a. To free from chains.
Minerva thus to Perseus lent her shield,
Secure of conquest, sent him to the field:
The hero acted what the queen ordain'd;
So was his fame complete, and Andromede unchain'd. Prior.
UNCHANGEABLE. adj. Immutable; not subject to variation.
If the end for which a law provideth, be perpetually necessary; and the way whereby it provideth perpetually also most apt, no doubt but that every such law ought for ever to remain unchangeable. Hooker, b. iii. §. 10.
UNCHANGED. adj.
1. Not altered.
When our fortunes are violently changed, our spirits are unchanged. Taylor's Rule of Holy Living.
More safe I sing with mortal voice; unchanged
To hoarse, or mute. Milton's Par. Lost.
2. Not alterable.
Dismiss thy fear,
And heav'n's unchang'd decrees attentive hear:
More pow'ful gods have torn thee from my side. Dryden.
Honour unchang'd, a principle profess,
Fixt to one side, but mod'rate to the rest. Pope.
UNCHANGABLENESS. n. f. Immutability.
This unchangeableness of colour I am now to describe. Newt.
UNCHANGABLY. adv. Immutably; without change.
All truth is unchangeably the same; that proposition, which is true at any time, being so for ever. South.
Her first order, disposition, frame,
Must then subsist unchangeably the same. Blackmore.
UNCHANGING. adj. Suffering no alteration.
But that thy face is, vizor-like, unchanging,
Made impudent with use of evil deeds,
I would essay, proud queen, to make thee blush. Shakefp.
True expression, like th' unchanging sun,
Clears and improves whatever it shines upon:
It gilds all objects, but it alters none. Pope.
To UNCHARGE. v. a. To retract an accusation.
Even his mother shall uncharge the practice,
And call it accident. Shakefp. Hamlet.
UNCHARGEABLE. adj. Contrary to charity; contrary to the universal love prescribed by christianity.
All the rich mines of learning rank'd are
To furnish ammunition for this war;
Uncharitable zeal our reason whets,
And double edges on our passion sets. Denham.
This fills the minds of weak men with uncharitable interpretations of those actions of which they are not competent judges. Addison's Freeholder, N. 37.
UNCHARGEABLENESS. n. f. Want of charity.
The penitence of the criminal may have number'd him among the saints, when our untractable uncharitableness may send us to unquenchable flames. Govern. of the Tongue.
Heaven and hell are the proper regions of mercy and un-charitableness. Atterbury.
UNCHARGEABLY. adv. In a manner contrary to charity.
I did not mean the cutting off all that nation with the sword; which, far be it from me that I should ever think so desperately, or with so uncharitably. Spenser.
Urge neither charity nor shame to me;
Uncharitably with me have you dealt,
And shamefully my hopes by you are butcher'd. Shakefp.
Men, imprudently and uncharitably 'tween, employ their zeal for persons. Sprat.
UNCHARY. adj. Not wary; not cautious.
I've said too much unto a heart of stone,
And laid my honour too unchary out. Shakefp.
UNCHASTE. adj. Lewd; libidinous; not continent; not chaste; not pure.

U N C

One, that in divers places I had heard before blaz'd; as the most impudently unchaste woman of all Asia. Sidney.
In my master's garments,
Which he inforc'd from me, away he posts
With unchaste purpose, to violate
My lady's honour. Shakefp. Cymbeline.
He hath given her his monumental ring, and thinks himself made in the unchaste composition. Shakefp.
Whoever is unchaste, cannot reverence himself; and the reverence of a man's self is, next religion, the chiefest bridle of all vices. Bacon.
Lust, by unchaste looks,
Lets in deilement to the inward parts. Milton.
If she thinks to be separated by reason of her husband's unchaste life, then the man will be incurably ruined. Taylor.
UNCHASTITY. n. f. Lewdness; incontinence.
That generation was more particularly addicted to intemperance, sensuality, and unchastity. Woodward.
When the sun is among the horned signs, he may produce such a spirit of unchastity, as is dangerous to the honour of your worths families. Arbutnot.
UNCHASTEFULNESS. n. f. Melancholy; gloominess of temper.
Many, by a natural uncheerfulness of heart, love to indulge this uncomfortable way of life. Addison's Spectator.
UNCHECKED. adj. Unrestrained; not fluctuated.
What news on the Ryalto?
—Why, yet it lives there unchecked, that Anthonio hath a ship of rich lading wreck'd. Shakefp. Mer. of Venice.
Apt the mind, or fancy, is to rove
Unchecked, and of her roving is no end. Milton.
Thee on the wing thy unchecked vigour bore,
To wanton freely, or securely soar. Smith to J. Phillips.
UNCHECKED. adj. Not masticated.
He fills his famish'd maw, his mouth runs o'er
With unchecked morsels, while he churns the gore. Dryden.
To UNCHILD. v. a. To deprive of children.
He hath widow'd and unchilded many a one,
Which to this hour bewail the injury. Shakefp.
UNCHRISTIAN. adj.
1. Contrary to the laws of christianity.
It's uncharitable, unchristian, and inhuman, to pass a peremptory sentence of condemnation upon a try'd friend, where there is any room left for a more favourable judgment. L'Estrange.
These unchristian fishers of men, are fatally caught in their own nets. South.
I could dispense with the unphilosophicalness of this their hypothesis, were it not unchristian. Norris.
2. Unconverted; infidel.
Whereupon grew a question, whether a christian soldier might herein do as the unchristian did, and wear as they wore. Hooker.
UNCHRISTIANNESS. adj. Contrary to christianity.
The unchristianness of those denials might arise from a displeasure to see me prefer my own divines before their ministers. K. Charles.
UNCIRCUMCISED. adj. Not circumcised; not a Jew.
Th' uncircumcised smil'd grimly with disdain. Cowley.
UNCIRCUMCISION. n. f. Omission of circumcision.
God, that gives the law that a Jew shall be circumcised, thereby constitutes uncircumcision an obliquity; which, had he not given that law, had never been such. Hammond.
UNCIRCUMSCRIBED. adj. Unbounded; unlimited.
Though I, uncircumscib'd myself, retire,
And put not forth my goodness. Milton's Par. Lost.
An arbitrary prince is the master of a non-resisting people; for where the power is uncircumscibed, the obedience ought to be unlimited. Addison.
The sovereign was flattered by a set of men into a persuasion, that the regal authority was unlimited and uncircumscib'd. Addison's Freeholder, N. 2.
UNCIRCUMSPECT. adj. Not cautious; not vigilant.
Their uncircumspect simplicity had been used, especially in matters of religion. Hayward.
UNCIRCUMSTANTIAL. adj. Unimportant. A bad word.
The like particulars, although they seem uncircumstantial, are oft set down in holy scripture. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
UNCIVIL. adj. [incivil, Fr. incivilis, Lat.] Unpolite; not agreeable to rules of elegance, or complaisance.
Your undutiful, uncivil, and uncharitable dealing in this your book, hath detected you. Whitgift.
They love me well, yet I have much to do,
To keep me from uncivil outrages. Shakefp.
My friends are so unreasonable, that they would have me be uncivil to him. Spectator, N. 475.
UNCIVILLY. adv. Unpolitely; not complaisantly.
Somewhat in it he would not have done, or desired undone, when he broke forth as desperately, as before he had done uncivilly. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
UNCIVILIZED. adj.
1. Not reclaimed from barbarity.

But

UNC

But we, brave Britons, foreign laws despis'd,
And kept unconquer'd, and unconquered:
Pierce for the liberties of wit, and bold,
We still defy'd the Romans, as of old.
Pope.

Several, who have been polished in France, make use of the most coarse, unpolished words in our language. Addison.

One ounce of whey unclarified, one ounce of oil of vitriol, make no apparent alteration. Bacon's Phys. Remarks.

To UNCLASP. v. a. To open what is shut with clasps.
Thou know'st no less, but all: I have unclasp'd
To thee the book, ev'n of my secret soul. Shaksp.
Prayer can unclasp the girdles of the north, saying to a mountain of ice, be thou removed hence, and cast into the sea. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

UNCLASSTICK. Not classick.
Angel of dulcets, sent to scatter round
Her magic charms o'er all unclasp'd ground. Pope.

UNCLE. n. f. [uncle, Fr.] The father's or mother's brother.
Hamlet punishes his uncle rather for his own death, than the murder of his father. Shakspere's Illustrations.

UNCLEAN. n. f.
1. Foul; dirty; filthy.
Charon,
A forl'd god: down from his hoary chin
A length of beard descends, uncomb'd, unclean. Dryden.
Priests are patterns for the rest;
The gold of heav'n, who bear the God impress'd:
But when the precious coin is kept unclean,
The sov'reign's image is no longer seen.
If they be foul, on whom the people trust,
Well may the bawls brass contract a rust. Dryden.

2. Not purified by ritual practices.
Besides how vile, contemptible, ridiculous,
What act more execrably unclean, profane?
What agonies must he endure? What difficulties overcome, before he can cleanse himself from the pollutions of sin, and be a fit inhabitant of that holy place, where no unclean thing shall enter? Rogers's Sermons.

3. Foul with sin.
Let them all encircle him about,
And, fairy-like too, pinch the unclean knight,
And ask him, why that hour of fairy revel,
In their so sacred paths he dares to tread,
In shape profane. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
Some tree, whose broad, smooth leaves together fow'd,
And girded on our loins, may cover round
Those middle parts; that this new comer, shame,
There sit not, and reproach us as unclean. Milton.

UNCLEANLINESS. n. f. Want of cleanliness.
This profane liberty and uncleanliness, the archbishop resolv'd to reform. Clarendon.

UNCLEANLY. adj.
1. Foul; filthy; nasty.
Civet is of a baser birth than tar;
The very uncleanly flux of a cat. Shakspere.

2. Indecent; unchaste.
'Tis pity that these harmonious writers have ever indulg'd any thing uncleanly or impure to defile their paper. Watts.

UNCLEANNESS. n. f.
1. Lewdness; incontinence.
In St. Giles's I understood that most of the vilest and most miserable houses of uncleanness were. Grant's Bills of Mortality.

2. Want of cleanliness; nastiness.
Be not curious nor careless in your habit; be not troublesome to thyself, or to others, by unhandfomeness, or uncleanliness. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

3. Sin; wickedness.
I will save you from all your uncleannesses. Ez. xxxvi. 29.

4. Want of ritual purity.
UNCLEANSED. adj. Not cleansed.
Pond caith is a good compost, if the pond have been long uncleansed: so the water be not too hungry. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

To UNCLEW. v. a. [from clew.] To undo.
If I should pay you for't as 'tis extoll'd,
It would unclaw me quite. Shaksp. Timon of Athens.

To UNCLEWCH. v. a. To open the closed hand.
The hero to his enterprize recalls;
His fist unclenches, and the weapon falls. Garth.

UNCLOTHED. adj. Whole; not cut.
As soon as there began a diffinition between clipped and unclipped money, bullion arose. Locke.

To UNCLOSE. v. a. To strip; to make naked.
The boughs and branches are never unclothed and left naked. Ra'eigh's Hist. of the World.

Poor orphans minds are left as uncloth'd and naked altogether, as their bodies. Atterbury.

Cover the couch over with thick woollen clothes, the warmth whereof will make it come presently; which once perceived, forthwith uncloth it. Mortimer's Husbandry.

UNC

To a distinct knowledge of things, we must unclash them of all these mixtures, that we may contemplate them naked, and in their own nature. Watts's Logic.

To UNCLOSE. v. a.
1. To disencumber; to exonerate.
Could I meet 'em
But once a day, it would unclose my heart
Of what lies heavy to't. Shakspere.

2. To set at liberty.
Then air, because unclog'd in empty space,
Flies after fire, and claims the second place. Dryden.

To UNCLOSESTER. v. n. To set at large.
Why did I not, uncloister'd from the womb,
Take my next lodging in a tomb? Norris.

To UNCLOUSE. v. a. To open.
Soon as thy letters trembling I uncloset,
That well-known name awakens all my woes. Pope.

UNCLOSED. adj. Not separated by inclosures.
The king's army would, through those unclosed parts, have done them little harm. Clarendon.

UNCLOSED. adj. Free from clouds; clear from obscurity;
not darkened.
The father unfolding bright
Tow'rd the right hand his glory on the son Blaz'd forth unclosed deity. Milton's Par. Lost.

True virtues, with unclosed light,
All great, all royal, shine divinely bright.
Blest with temper, whose unclosed ray,
Can make to-morrow cheerful as to-day. Pope.

UNCLOSEDNESS. n. f. Openness; freedom from gloom.
The love I would persuade, makes nothing more conduc-tive to it, than the greatest unclosedness of the eye, and the perfectest illustration of the object; which is such, that the clearest reason is the most advantageous light it can desire to be seen by. Boyle.

UNCLOUDY. adj. Free from a cloud.
Now night in silent state begins to rise,
And twinkling orbs bestrow th' uncloody skies;
Her borrow'd lustre growing Cynthia lends.
To UNCLUTCH. v. a. To open.
If the terrors of the Lord could not melt his bowels, unclutch his gripping hand, or disfigure him of his prey; yet sure it must discourage him from grasping of heaven too. Decay of Piety.

To UNCOIL. v. a. To pull the cap off.
Yonder are two apple-women scolding, and just ready to uncoil one another. Arbutnot and Pope.

To UNCOIL. v. a. [from coil.] To open from being coiled or wrapped one part upon another.
The spiral air-vessels are like threads of cobweb, a little uncoiled. Dorham's Physics-Theology.

UNCOINED. adj. Not coined.
While thou liv'st, Kate, take a fellow of plain, uncoined constancy. Shakspere's Hen. V.

An ounce of coined standard silver, must be of equal value to an ounce of uncoined standard silver. Locke.

UNCOLLECTED. adj. Not collected; not recollected.
Aham'd, confus'd, I started from my bed,
And to my soul yet uncollected said;
Into thyself, fond Solomon! return;
Reflect again, and thou again shalt mourn. Prior.

UNCOLOURED. adj. Not stained with any colour, or die.
Out of things uncoloured and transparent, we can represent unto you all several colours. Bacon.

Whether to deck with clouds the uncolour'd sky,
Or wet the thirsty earth with falling show'rs;
Rising, or falling, still advance his praise. Milton.

UNCOMBED. adj. Not parted or adjusted by the comb.
They might perceive his head
To be uncombed, and curled, uncombed hairs, Upstarting stiff. Fairy Queen, b. 1. c. 9. ft. 22.

Their locks are beds of uncombed snakes, that wind
About their shady brows in wanton rings. Croft.

Thy locks uncombed, like a rough wood appear. Dryden.

UNCOMESTABLE. adj. Inaccessible; unattainable. A low, corrupt word.

UNCOMELINESS. n. f. Want of grace; want of beauty.
The ruined churches are so unhandfomely patched, and thatched, that men do even shun the places, for the uncomeliness thereof. Speiser's Ireland.

He prais'd women's modesty, and gave orderly, well-behaved reproof to all uncomeliness. Shaksp.

Those arches which the Tuscan writers call di terzo, and di quarto acuto, because they always concur in an acute angle, both for the natural imbecility of the angle itself, and likewise for their very uncomeliness, ought to be excised from judicious eyes. Watson's Architecture.

Forgetting that duty of modest concealment which they owed to the father of their country, in case they had discovered any real uncomeliness. K. Charles.

The beauty or uncomeliness in good and ill breeding, will make deeper impressions on them, in the examples of others, than from any rules. Locke.

UNC

UNCOMELY. adj. Not comely; wanting grace.
Though he thought inquisitiveness an uncomely guest, he could not but ask who she was. Sidney.

Neither is the fame accounted an uncomely manner of riding: for great warriors say, they never saw a more comely man than the Irishman, nor that cometh on more bravely in his charge. Spenser's Ireland.

Many, who troubled them most in their counsels, durst not go thither, for fear of uncomely affronts. Clarendon.

Uncomely courage, unbecoming skill. Thomson's Autumn.

UNCOMFORTABLE. adj.
1. Affording no comfort; gloomy; dismal; miserable.
He much complaineth of his own uncomfortable exile, wherein he sustained many most grievous indignities, and endured the want of sundry, both pleasures and honours, before-enjoyed. Hooker.

Christmas is in the most dead, uncomfortable time of the year, when the poor people would suffer very much, if they had not good cheer to support them. Addison.

Ours is melancholy and uncomfortable portion here below!
A place, where not a day passes, but we eat our bread with sorrow and cares: the present troubles us, the future amazes;
and even the past fills us with grief and anguish. Wake.

The fun ne'er views th' uncomfortable seats,
When radiant he advances or retreats. Pope's Odyssey.

2. Receiving no comfort; melancholy.

UNCOMFORTABLENESS. n. f. Want of cheerfulness.
The want of just dispositions to the holy sacrament, may occasion this uncomfortableness. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

UNCOMFORTABLY. adv. Without cheerfulness.

UNCOMMANDED. adj. Not commanded.
It is easy to see what judgment is to be passed upon all those affected, uncommanded, absurd austerities of the Romish profession. South.

UNCOMMON. adj. Not frequent; not often found or known.
Some of them are uncommon, but such as the reader must assent to, when he sees them explained. Addison.

UNCOMMONLY. adv. Not frequently; to an uncommon degree.

UNCOMMONNESS. n. f. Infrequency.

Our admiration of the antiquities about Naples and Rome, does not so much arise out of their greatness as uncommonness. Addison.

UNCOMPACT. adj. Not compact; not closely cohering.
These rivers were not streams of running matter; for how could a liquid, that lay hardening by degrees, settle in such a furrowed, uncompact surface? Addison.

UNCOMMUNICATED. adj. Not communicated.
There is no such mutual infusion as really caught the same natural operations or properties to be made common unto both substances; but whatsoever is natural to deity, the same remaineth in Christ uncommunicated unto his manhood; and whatsoever natural to manhood, his deity thereof is uncapable. Hooker.

UNCOMPANIED. adj. Having no companion.
Thence she fled, unaccompanied, unfought. Fairfax.

UNCOMPASSIONATE. adj. Having no pity.
Neither deep groans, nor silver-shedding tears,
Could penetrate her uncompassionate fire. Shaksp.

Hero and Leander were drowned in the uncompassionate furies. Sandys's Journey.

If thou in strength all mortals dost exceed;
In uncompassionate anger do not so. Milton's Agonistes.

UNCOMPELLED. adj. Free from compulsion.
The amorous needle, once joined to the loadstone, would never, uncompeled, forsake the enchanting mineral. Boyle.

Keep my voyage from the royal ear,
Nor, uncompeled, the dangerous truth betray,
Till twice six times descends the lamp of day. Pope.

UNCOMPLAISANT. adj. Not civil; not obliging.
A natural roughness makes a man uncomplaisant to others, so that he has no deference for their inclinations. Locke.

UNCOMPLETED. adj. Not perfect; not finished.
Various incidents do not make different fables, but are only the uncompleted and unfinished parts of the same fable. Pope.

UNCOMPOUNDED. adj.
1. Simple; not mixed.
Hardness may be reckoned the property of all uncompounded matter. Newton's Opticks.

Your uncompounded atoms, you
Figures in numbers infinite allow;
From which, by various combination, springs
This unconfined diversity of things. Blackmore.

2. Simple; not intricate.
The substance of the faith was comprised in that uncompounded style, but was afterwards prudently enlarged, for the repelling heretical invaders. Hammund's Fundamentals.

UNCOMPREHENDED. adj. Free from comprehension.
We might be furnished with a reply, by setting down the differing weight of our receiver, when emptied, and when full of uncompeled air. Boyle.

UNC

UNCOMPREHENSIVE. adj.
1. Unable to comprehend.
2. In Shakspere it seems to signify incomprehensible.
The providence, that's in a watchful state,
Knows almost every grain of Pluto's gold;
Finds bottom in th' incomprehensible deep. Shaksp.

UNCONCEIVABLE. adj. Not to be understood; not to be com-prehended by the mind.
In the communication of motion by impulse, we can have no other conception, but of the passing of motion out of one body into another; which is as obscure and unconceivable, as how our minds move or stop our bodies by thought. Locke.

Those atoms wondrous small must be,
Small to an unconceivable degree;
Since though these radiant spoils dispers'd in air,
Do ne'er return, and ne'er the sun repair. Blackmore.

UNCONCEIVABLENESS. n. f. Incomprehensibility.
The unconceivableness of something they find in one, throws men violently into the contrary hypothesis, though altogether as unintelligible. Locke.

UNCONCEIVED. adj. Not thought; not imagined.
Vast is my theme, yet unconceived, and brings Untoward words, scarce loosen'd yet from things. Creech.

UNCONCE'RN. n. f. Negligence; want of interest; freedom from anxiety; freedom from perturbation.
Such things had been charged upon us by the malice of enemies, the want of judgment in friends, and the unconcern of indifferent persons. Swift.

UNCONCERNED. adj.
1. Having no interest.
An idle person is like one that is dead, unconcerned in the changes and necessities of the world. Taylor.

The earth's motion is to be admitted, notwithstanding the seeming contrary evidence of unconcerned senses. Clarville.

It seems a principle in human nature, to incline one way more than another, even in matters where we are wholly unconcerned. Swift.

2. Not anxious; not disturbed; not affected.
See the morn,
All unconcern'd with our unrest, begins
Her rosy progress smiling. Milton's Par. Lost.

You call'd me into all your joys, and gave me
An equal share; and in this depth of misery
Can I be unconcerned? Denham's Sophy.

The virgin from the ground
Upstart fresh, already clos'd the wound;
And unconcern'd for all she felt before,
Precipitates her flight along the shore. Dryden.

Happy mortals, unconcern'd for more,
Confin'd their wishes to their native shore. Dryden.

We shall be easy and unconcerned at all the accidents of the way, and regard only the event of the journey. Rogers.

UNCONCERNEDLY. adv. Without interest or affection; without anxiety; without perturbation.
Not the most cruel of our conquering foes,
So unconcern'dly can relate our woes,
As not to lend a tear. Denham.

Death was denounc'd, that frightful sound,
Which ev'n the best can hardly bear:
He took the summons, void of fear,
And unconcern'dly cast his eyes around,
As if to find and dare the grieved challenger. Dryden.

Is heaven, with its pleasures for evermore, to be parted with so unconcernedly? Is an exceeding and eternal weight of glory too light in the balance against the hopeless death of the atheist, and utter extinction. Bentley.

UNCONCERNEDNESS. n. f. Freedom from anxiety, or perturbation.
No man, having done a kindness to another, would think himself justly dealt with, in a total neglect, and unconcernedness of the person who had received that kindness. South.

UNCONCERNING. adj. Not interesting; not affecting; not belonging to one.
Things impossible in their nature, or unconcerning to us, cannot beget it. Decay of Piety.

The science of medals, which is charged with so many unconcerning parts of knowledge, and built on such mean materials, appears ridiculous to those that have not examined it. Addison on Antient Medals.

UNCONCERNMENT. n. f. The state of having no share.
Being privileged by an happy unconcernment in those legal murders, you may take a sweeter relish of your own innocence. South.

UNCONCLO'DENT. } adj. Not decisive; inferring no plain or UNCONCLO'DING. } certain conclusion or consequence.
Our arguments are inevident and unconcludent. Hale.

He makes his understanding only the warehouse of other mens false and unconcluding reasonings, rather than a repository of truth for his own use. Locke.

UNCONCLO'DINGNESS. n. f. Quality of being unconcluding.
29 L Either

UNC

Either may be much more probably maintained than hitherto, as against the unaccuracy and the unconvincingness of the analytical experiments vulgarly relied on. Boyle.

UNCONCOCTED. adj. Not digested; not matured. We swallow cherry-stones, but void them unconcocted. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

In theology, I put as great a difference between our new lights and ancient truths, as between the sun and an unconcocted, evanid meteor. Glanville.

Did she extend the gloomy clouds on high, Where all th' amazing fireworks of the sky, In unconcocted seeds fermenting lie. Blackmore.

UNCONDEMNED. adj. Not condemned. It was a familiar and uncondemned practice amongst the Greeks and Romans, to expose, without pity, their innocent infants. Locke.

UNCONDITIONAL. adj. Absolute; not limited by any terms. O pass not, Lord! an absolute decree, Or bind thy sentence unconditional; But in thy sentence our remorse foresee, And, in that foresight, this thy doom recal. Dryden.

Our Saviour left a power in his church to absolve men from their sins; but this was not an absolute and unconditional power vested in any, but founded upon repentance, and on the penitent's belief in him alone. Ayliffe's Perversion.

UNCONFINED. adj. Free from restraint. I wonder at it. That shews thou art unconfin'd. Shakespeare.

Chaucer has refined on Boccace, and has mended the stories he has borrowed: though prose allows more liberty of thought, and the expression is more easy when unconfin'd by numbers. Our countryman carries weight, and yet wins the race at disadvantage. Dryden.

Poets, a race long unconfin'd and free, Still fond and proud of savage liberty, Receiv'd his laws. Pope's Essay on Criticism.

2. Having no limits; unbounded. If that which men esteem their happiness, were, like the light, the same sufficient and unconfin'd good, whether ten thousand enjoy the benefit of it, or but one, we should see men's good will and kind endeavours would be as universal. Spektator, N<sup>o</sup>. 601.

Blest with a taste exact, yet unconfin'd; A knowledge both of books and human kind. Pope.

UNCONFINABLE. adj. Unbounded. You rogue! you stand upon your honour! why, thou unconfinable baleness, it is as much as I can do to keep mine honour. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

UNCONFORMED. adj. 1. Not fortified by resolution; not strengthened; raw; weak. The unexpected speech The king had made upon the new-raised force, In th' unconform'd troops, much fear did breed. Daniel.

2. Not strengthened by additional testimony. He would have resign'd To him his heav'nly office, nor was long His witness unconform'd. Milton's Par. Regain'd.

3. Not settled in the church by the rite of confirmation. UNCONFORMABLE. adj. Unlike; dissimilar; not analogous. Not conform to other shining globes. Milton.

UNCONFORMABLE. adj. Inconsistent; not conforming. Unto those general rules, they know we do not defend, that we may hold any thing unconformable. Hooker.

Moral good, is an action conformable to the rule of our duty. Moral evil, is an action unconformable to it, or a neglect to fulfil it. Watts's Logic.

UNCONFORMITY. n. f. Incongruity; inconsistency. The moral goodness or evil of men's actions, which consist in their conformity or unconformity to right reason, must be eternal, necessary, and unchangeable. South.

UNCONFUSED. adj. Distinct; free from confusion. It is more distinct and unconfused than the sensitive memory. If in having our ideas in the memory ready at hand, consists quickness of parts; in this of having them unconfused, and being able nicely to distinguish one thing from another, consists the exactness of judgment. Locke.

UNCONFUSEDLY. adv. Without confusion. Every one finds that he knows, when any idea is in his understanding, and that, when more than one are there, he knows them, distinctly and unconfusedly, from one another. Locke.

UNCONFUTABLE. adj. Irrefragable; not to be convicted of error. One political argument they boasted of as unconfutable, that from the marriages of ecclesiastics, would ensue poverty in many of the children, and thence a disgrace and burden to the church. Sprat's Sermons.

UNCONGEALED. adj. Not congealed by cold. By exposing wine, after four months digestion in horf-dung, unto the extremity of cold, the aqueous parts will freeze, but the spirit retire, and be found uncongealed in the center. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

UNCONJUGAL. adj. Not consistent with matrimonial faith; not befitting a wife or husband. My name To all posterity may stand defam'd; With malediction mention'd, and the blot Of falsehood most unconjugal traduc'd. Milton's Agonists.

UNCONNECTED. adj. Not coherent; not joined by proper transitions or dependence of parts; lax; loose; vague. Those who contemplate only the fragments broken off from any science, dispersed in short, unconnected discourses, can never survey an entire body of truth. Watts.

UNCONQUERABLE. adj. Not to be subdued; invincible. To that hideous place not to confin'd, By rigour unconquering; but that oft Leaving my delirious prison, I enjoy Large liberty, to round this globe of earth. Milton.

UNCONQUERABLE. adj. Not to be subdued; invincible. Louis was darting his thunder on the Alps, and causing his enemies to feel the force of his unconquerable arms. Dryden.

Spadillio, first unconquerable lord! Led off two captive trumps, and swept the board. Pope.

UNCONQUERABLY. adv. Invincibly; insuperably. The herds of Iphylus, detain'd in wrong; Wild, furious herds, unconquerably strong. Pope.

UNCONQUERED. adj. 1. Not subdued; not overcome. To die so tamely, O'ercome by passion and misfortune, And still unconquer'd by my foes, sounds ill. Denham.

Unconquer'd yet, in that forlorn estate, His manly courage overcame his fate. Dryden.

2. Insuperable; invincible. These brothers had a-while served the King of Pontus; and in all his affairs, especially of war, whereunto they were only apt, they had shewed as unconquered courage, so rude a faithfulness. Sidney.

What was that snaky-headed gorgon shield, That wife Minerva wore, unconquer'd virgin! Wherewith the free'd her foes to congeal'd stone, But rigid looks, and chaste austerity, And noble grace, that dash'd brute violence, With sudden adoration and blank awe! Milton.

Unconquer'd lord of pleasure and of pain. Johnson.

UNCONSCIONABLE. adj. 1. Exceeding the limits of any just claim or expectation. A man may oppose an unconscionable request for an unjustifiable reason. L'Estrange.

2. Forming unreasonable expectations. You cannot be so unconscionable as to charge me for not subscribing of my name, for that would reflect too grossly upon your own party, who never dare it. Dryden.

3. Enormous; vast. A low word. His giantship is gone somewhat crest-fall'n, Stalking with less unconscionable strides, And lower looks, but in a sultry chafe. Milton's Agonists.

4. Not guided or influenced by conscience. How infamous is the false, fraudulent, and unconscionable? hardly ever did any man of no conscience continue a man of any credit long. South.

UNCONSCIONABLENESS. n. f. Unreasonableness of hope or claim. UNCONSCIONABLY. adv. Unreasonably. Indeed 'tis pity you should miss Th' arrears of all your services; And for th' eternal obligation, Y' have laid upon th' ungrateful nation, Be us'd to unconscionably hard, As not to find a just reward. Hudibras, p. ii. cant. 3.

This is a common vice; though all things here Are fold, and fold unconscionably dear. Dryden's Juvenal.

UNCONSCIOUS. adj. Having no mental perception. Unconscious causes only still impart Their utmost skill, their utmost power exert; Those which can freely chuse, discern, and know, Can more or less of art and care bestow. Blackmore.

A yearling bullock to thy name shall smoke, Untam'd, unconscious of the galling yoke. Pope.

UNCONSCIOUSLY. adv. Not facted; not dedicated; not devoted. The sin of Israel had even unconscionably and profaned that sacred edifice, and robbed it of its only defence. South.

UNCONSENTED. adj. Not yielded. We should extend it even to the weaknesses of our natures, to our proneness to evil: for however these, unconscionably, will not be imputed to us, yet are they matter of sorrow. Watts's Preparation for Death.

UNCONSIDERED. adj. Not considered; not attended to. Love yourself; and in that love, Not unconconsidered leave your honour. Shakespeare.

UNC

It will not be unconsidered, that we find no open track in this labyrinth. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

UNCONSONANT. adj. Incongruous; unfit; inconsistent. It seemeth a thing the Saviour, but him whom it honoureth as the creator of the world. Hooker.

UNCONSTANT. adj. [inconstant, Fr. inconstans, Lat.] Fickle; not steady; changeable; mutable. More unconstant than the wind; who woos Ev'n now the frozen bosom of the north; And, being anger'd, puffs away from thence, Turning his face to the dew-dropping fouth. Shakespeare.

Th' unconstant fikes Do change their course as few'l winds arise. May's Vigil.

UNCONSTRAINED. adj. Free from compulsion. Will you, with free and unconstrained soul, Give me your daughter? Shakespeare.

These be the miseries which our first parents brought upon all mankind, unto whom God, in his creation, gave a free and unconstrained will. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

Made for his use, yet he has form'd us so, We unconstrain'd, what he commands us, do. Dryden.

His highness is return'd. And unconstrain'd? But with what change Of countenance did he receive the message? Denham.

UNCONSTRAINEDLY. adv. Without force suffered. Such a patron has frankly, generously, and unconstrainedly relieved me. South's Sermons.

UNCONSTRAINT. n. f. Freedom from constraint; ease. Mr. Dryden writ more like a scholar; and though the greatest master of poetry, he wanted that easiness, that air of freedom and unconstraint, which is more sensibly to be perceived, than described. Felton on the Classics.

UNCONSU'LING. adj. [inconsulius, Lat.] Heady; rash; imprudent; imprudent. It was the fair Zelmene, Plexitrus's daughter, whom unconsulting affection, unfortunately born to mewards, had made borrow too much of her natural modesty, as to leave her more decent rayments. Sidney.

UNCONSU'LED. adj. Certain; past dispute. UNCONSUMED. adj. Not wasted; not destroyed by any wasting power. Hope never comes, That comes to all, but torture without end Still urges, and a fiery deluge fed With ever-burning sulphur unconsum'd. Milton's Par. Lost.

Fixedness, or a power to remain in the fire unconsumed, is an idea that always accompanies our complex idea, signified by the word gold. Locke.

UNCONTR'OLABLE. adj. 1. Refractory; powerful beyond opposition. Gaza mourns, And all that band them to resist His uncontr'olable intent. Milton.

2. Indisputable; irrefragable. The pension was granted, by reason of the king of England's uncontr'olable title to England. Hayward.

This makes appear the error of those, who think it an uncontr'olable maxim, that power is always safer lodged in many hands, than in one; those many are as capable of enslaving as a single person. Swift.

UNC

UNCONTR'OLABLY. adv. 1. Without possibility of opposition. 2. Without danger of refutation. Since this light was to rest within them, and the judgment of it wholly to remain in themselves, they might safely and uncontr'olably pretend it greater or less. South.

Uncontr'olably, and under general consent, many opinions are passant, which, upon due examination, admit of doubt. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

UNCONTR'OLED. adj. 1. Unrefuted; unopposed; not to be overruled. Should I try the uncontr'oled worth Of this pure cause, 'twould kindle my rap'd spirits To such a flame of sacred vehemence, That dumb things would be mov'd to sympathize. Milton.

O'er barren mountains, o'er the flow'ry plain, Extends thy uncontr'ol'd and boundless reign. Dryden.

The British navy, uncontr'ol'd, Shall wave her double cross t' extremest clime Terrific, and return with odorous spoils. Phillips.

2. Not convinced; not refuted. That Julius Cæsar was so born, is an uncontr'oled report. Hayward.

UNCONTR'OLEDLY. adv. Without controul; without opposition. Mankind avert killing, and being killed; but when the phantasm honour has once possessed the mind, no reluctance of humanity is able to make head against it; but it commands uncontr'oledly. Decay of Piety.

UNCONVERSABLE. adj. Not suitable to conversation; not social. Faith and devotion are traduced and ridiculed, as morose, unconvertible qualities. Rogers's Sermons.

UNCONVERTED. adj. Not persuaded of the truth of christianity. Salvation belongeth unto none, but such as call upon the name of our Lord Jesus Christ: which nations, as yet unconverted, neither do, nor possibly can do, till they believe. Hooker.

The unconverted heathens, who were prelied by the many authorities that confirmed our Saviour's miracles, accounted for them after the same manner. Addison on the Christ. Relig.

The apostle reminds the Ephesians of the guilt and misery of their former unconverted estate, when aliens from the commonwealth of Israel. Rogers's Sermons.

UNCONVINCED. adj. Not convinced. A way not to be introduced into the seminaries of those, who are to propagate religion, or philosophy, amongst the ignorant and unconvinced. Locke.

TO UNCORD. v. a. To loose a thing bound with cords. UNCORRECTED. adj. Inaccurate; not polished to exactness. I have written this too hastily and too loosely: it comes out from the first draught, and uncorrected. Dryden.

UNCORRUPT. adj. Honest; upright; not tainted with wickedness; not influenced by iniquitous interest. The pleasures of sin, and this world's vanities, are censured with uncorrupt judgment. Hooker.

Men alledge they can ne'er can find Those beauties in a female mind, Which raise a flame that will endure, For ever uncorrupt and pure. Swift.

UNCORRUPTED. adj. Not vitiated; not depraved. Such a hero never springs, But from the uncorrupted blood of kings. Rescommon.

Man, yet new, No rule but uncorrupted reason knew, And with a native bent did good pursue. Dryden.

Nothing is more valuable than the records of antiquity: I wish we had more of them, and more uncorrupted. Locke.

UNCORRUPTNESS. n. f. Integrity; uprightness. In doctrine, these uncorruptness, gravity, sincerity. Tit. ii. 7.

Seeing an object several millions of leagues, the very instant it is uncovered, may be shewn to be a mistake in matter of fact. Locke.

2. To deprive of cloaths. Thou wert better in thy grave, than to answer, with thy uncovered body, this extremity of the skies. Shakespeare. K. Lear.

3. To strip of the roof. Porches and schools, Uncover'd, and with scaffolds cumber'd flood. Prior.

4. To shew openly; to strip of a veil, or concealment. He cover'd; but his robe Uncover'd more: so rose the Danite strong, Shorn of his strength. Milton's Par. Lost.

There will certainly come some day or other, to uncover every soul of us. Pope's Letters.

5. To bare the head, as in the presence of a superior. Rather let my head dance on a bloody pole, Than stand uncover'd to the vulgar groom. Shakespeare.

4. UNCOUN-

UNC

UNC'UNSELLABLE. adj. Not to be advised.
It would have been unsellable to have march'd to any distance, and have left such an enemy at their backs. Clarendon.

UNCOUNTABLE. adj. Innumerable.
Those uncountable, glorious bodies, were not set in the firmament for no other end than to adorn it. Raleigh.

UNCOUNTERFEIT. adj. Genuine; not spurious.
True zeal is not any one single affection of the soul, but a strong mixture of many holy affections, filling the heart with all pious intentions; all, not only uncounterfeit, but most fervent. Sprat's Sermons.

TO UNC'UPLE. v. a. To loose dogs from their couples.
Uncouple in the western valley, go;
Dispatch, I say, and find the forester. Shaksp.
The hunt is up, the morn is bright and gray;
The fields are fragrant, and the woods are green;
Uncouple here, and let us make a bay. Shaksp.
In which th' uncoupled hounds began the chase. Dryden.

UNCOURTEOUS. adj. Uncivil; unpolite.
In behaviour some will say, ever sad, surely sober, and somewhat given to musing, but never uncourteous. Sidney.

UNCOURTEOUSLY. adv. Uncivily; unpolitely.
Though somewhat merrily, yet uncourteously he railed upon England, objecting extreme beggary, and mere barbarousness unto it. Afham's Schoolmaster.

UNCOURTLINESS. n. f. Unfuitableness of manners to a court; inelegance.
The quakers presented an address, which, notwithstanding the uncourtliness of their phrases, the sense was very honest. Addison.

UNCOURTLY. adj. Inelegant of manners; uncivil.
The lord treasurer not entering into those refinements of paying the publick money upon private considerations, hath been so uncourtly as to stop it. Swift.

UNCOUTH. adj. [uncū, Saxon.] Odd; strange; unusual.
A very uncouth fight was to behold,
How he did fashion his untoward pace;
For as he forward mov'd his footling old,
So backward still was turn'd his wrinkled face. Fairy Queen.
The lovers standing in this doleful wife,
A warrior bold unwarlike approached near,
Uncouth in arms yclad, and strange disguise. Fairfax.
I am surprized with an uncouth fear;
A chilling sweat o'erruns my trembling joints;
My heart suspects more than mine eye can see. Shaksp.
The trouble of thy thoughts this night
Affects me equally; nor can I like
This uncouth dream, of evil sprung, I fear. Milton.
Say on;
For I that day was absent, as befel,
Bound on a voyage uncouth, and obfure,
Far on excursion toward the gates of hell. Milton.
It was so uncouth a fight, for a fox to appear without a tail, that the very thought made him weary of his life. L'Estrange.
The secret ceremonies I conceal. Dryden.
Uncouth, perhaps unlawful to reveal.
I am more in danger to misunderstand his true meaning, than if I had come to him with a mind unpossessed by doctors of my sect, whose reasonings will of course make all chime that way, and make the genuine meaning of the author seem harsh, strained, and uncouth to me. Locke.
He made that a pleasant study, which, in the hands of Bartolus and Baldus, was uncouth and rugged. Baker.

UNCOUTHLY. adv. Oddly; strangely.
Venetians do not more uncouthly ride,
Than did their lubber state mankind bestride. Dryden.

UNCOUTHNESS. n. f. Oddness; strangeness.
To deny himself in the lesser instances, that so when the greater come, they may not have the disadvantage of uncouthness, and perfect strangeness, to enhance their difficulty, must be acknowledged reasonable. Decay of Piety.

TO UNCREATE. v. a. To annihilate; to reduce to nothing; to deprive of existence.
Who created thee, lamenting learn;
Who can uncreate thee thou shalt know. Milton.
Light dies before her uncreating word.
Thus at her felt approach, and secret might,
Art after art goes out, and all is night. Pope's Dunciad.

UNCREATED. adj.
1. Not yet created.
How hast thou disturb'd
Heav'n's blessed peace, and into nature brought Misery, uncreated till the crime
Of thy rebellion? Milton.
2. [Incrē, Fr.] Not produced by creation.
What cause within, or what without is found,
That can a being uncreated bound?
The next paragraph proves, that the idea we have of God is God himself; it being something, as he says, uncreated. Locke.

UNC

UNCREDITABLENESS. n. f. Want of reputation.
To all other dissuaves, we may add this of the uncreditableness: the best that can be said is, that they use wit foolishly, whereof the one part devours the other. Dec. of Piety.

UNCROPPED. adj. Not cropped; not gathered.
Thy abundance wants
Partakers, and uncropp'd falls to the ground. Milton.

UNCROPPED. adj. Uncancelled.
Such gain the cap of him, that makes them fine,
Yet keeps his book uncropp'd. Shaksp. Cymbeline.

UNCROPPED. adj. Not straitened by want of room.
An amphitheatre,
On its publick shows, unpeopled Rome,
And held uncropp'd nations in its womb. Addison.

TO UNCRO'WN. v. a. To deprive of a crown; to deprive of sovereignty.
He hath done me wrong;
And therefore I'll uncrown him ere't be long. Shaksp.
Ye pow'rs!
See a sacred king uncrown'd;
See your offspring, Albion, bound. Dryden's Albion.

UNCTION. n. f. [unctio, Fr.]
1. The act of anointing.
The unction of the tabernacle, the table, the laver, the altar of God, with all the instruments appertaining thereto, made them for ever holy. Hooker, b. v. f. 20.
2. Unguent; ointment.
The king himself the sacred unction made;
As king by office, and as priest by trade. Dryden.
3. The act of anointing medically.
Such as are of hot constitutions, should use bathing in hot water, rather than unctions. Arbutnot on Aliments.
4. Any thing softening, or lenitive.
Mother,
Lay not that flattering unction to your soul,
That not your trespas, but my madness speaks. Shaksp.

5. The rite of anointing in the last hours.
Their extreme unction, administered as the dying man's viaticum, which St. James mentioned as the ceremony of his recovery, may be added. Hammond's Fundamentals.

6. Any thing that excites piety and devotion.
UNCTUOUS. n. f. [from unctus, Lat.] Fatness; oiliness.
Fulgurous exhalations contain an unctuousity in them, and arise from the matter of fuel. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

UNCTUOUS. adj. Fat; clammy; oily.
Dry up thy barrow'd veins, and plough-torn leas,
Whereof ingrateful man, with liquorish draughts,
And morfels unctuous, greases his pure mind,
That from it all consideration slips. Shaksp.
A wand'ring fire,
Compact of unctuous vapour, which the night
Condenses, and the cold envious round, Kindled through agitation to a flame. Milton's Par. Lost.
The trees were unctuous fit, and mountain ash. Dryden.
Whether their unctuous exhalations are,
Fir'd by the sun, or seeming to alone. Dryden.
Th' infernal winds,
Dilating, and with unctuous vapour fed,
Disdain'd their narrow cells. Philips.
Camphire, oil-olive, linseed-oil, spirit of turpentine, and amber, are fat, sulphureous, unctuous bodies. Newton.

UNCTUOUSNESS. n. f. Fatness; oiliness; clamminess; greasiness.
A great degree of unctuousness is not necessary to the production of the like effects. Boyle.

UNCULLED. adj. Not gathered.
A sweaty reaper from his tillage brought
First fruits, the green ear, and the yellow sheaf, Uncull'd, as came to hand. Milton's Par. Lost.

UNCULPABLE. adj. Not blamable.
Those canons do bind, as they are edicts of nature; which the Jews observing as yet unwritten, and thereby framing such church orders, as in their law were not prescribed, are notwithstanding in that respect unculpable. Hooker.

UNCUCKLED. adj. Not made a cuckold.
As it is a heart-breaking to see a handsome man loose-wiv'd, so it is a deadly sorrow to behold a foul knave uncuckolded. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

UNCULTIVATED. adj. [incultus, Lat.]
1. Not cultivated; not improved by tillage.
Our life, indeed, too fruitful was before;
But all uncultivated lay,
Out of the solar walk. Dryden.
God gave the world to men in common; but since he gave it for their benefit, it cannot be supposed he meant it should always remain common and uncultivated. Locke.
2. Not instructed; not civilized.
The first tragedians found that serious stile
Too grave for their uncultivated age. Roscommon.
These are instances of nations, where uncultivated nature has been left to itself, without the help of letters. Locke.

UNCUMBERED. adj. Not burthened; not embarrassed.
Lord of yourself, uncumber'd with a wife. Dryden.

UND

UNCURABLE. adj. That cannot be curbed, or checked.
So much uncurable her garboiles, Caesar,
Made out of her impatience, which not wanted Shrewdness of policy. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

UNCURBED. adj. Licentious; not restrained.
With frank, and with uncurbed plainness,
Tell us the Dauphin's mind. Shaksp. Hen. V.

TO UNCURL. v. a. To loose from ringlets, or convolutions.
There stands a rock; the raging billows roar
Above his head in forms; but when 'tis clear,
Thence the lion's foe lies prostrate on the plain,
He sheaths his paws, uncurls his angry mane;
And, pleas'd with bloodless honours of the day,
Walks over, and disdains th' inglorious prey. Dryden.
The furies sink upon their iron beds,
And snakes uncurl'd hang list'ning round their heads. Pope.

TO UNCURL. v. n. To fall from the ringlets.
My fleece of woolly hair now uncurls,
Even as an adder, when she doth unroll
To do some fatal execution? Shaksp. Titus Andronicus.

UNCURLED. adj. Not collected into ringlets.
Alike in feature both, and garb appear;
With honest faces, though uncurled hair. Dryden.
But since, alas! frail beauty must decay;
Cur'd or uncur'd, since locks will turn to grey;
What then remains, but well our pow'r to use,
And keep good humour still, whate'er we lose? Pope.

UNCURRENT. adj. Not current; not passing in common payment.
Your voice, like a piece of uncurrent gold, is not crack'd within the ring. Shaksp. Hamlet.
I can no other answer make but thanks;
And thanks, and ever thanks: and oft good turns
Are shuff'd off with such uncurrent pay. Shaksp.peare.

TO UNCURE. v. a. To free from any excretion.
Uncure their souls; their peace is made
With head, and not with hands. Shaksp. Richard II.

UNCURST. adj. Not exorcised.
Sir John Hotham unrepented, unthreatened, uncurst by any language or secret imprecation of mine, not long after pays his own and his eldest son's heads. K. Charles.
Heav'n sure has kept this spot of earth uncurs'd,
To show how all things were created first. Waller.

UNCUT. adj. Not cut.
We must resign! heav'n his great soul doth claim,
In forms as loud as his immortal fame:
His dying groans, his last breath shake our isle,
And trees uncut fall for his funeral pile. Waller.

TO UNDA'VE. v. a. To open; to free from the restraint of mounds.
When the fiery funts too fiercely play,
And shrivell'd herbs on with'ring stems decay;
The wary ploughman on the mountain's brow,
Undams his wauy stores. Dryden's Georgicks.

UNDA'GED. adj. Not made worse; not impaired.
Plants will frequent changes try,
Undamag'd, and their marriageable arms
Conjoin with others. Philips.

UNDAUNTED. adj. Unfrighted by fear; not depressed.
Bring forth men children only;
For thy undaunted metal should compose Nothing but males. Shaksp. Macbeth.
With him went
Harman, who did the twice fir'd Harry save,
And in his burning ship undaunted fought. Dryden.
Mirror of ancient faith in early youth!
Undaunted worth, inviolable truth!
No foe unpunish'd in the fighting field,
Shall dare thee. Dryden.

UNDAUNTEDNESS. n. f. Boldness; bravery; intrepidity.
Luther took up a briske air of assurance, and shewed a particular undauntedness in the cause of truth, when it had so mighty an opposer. Atterbury.
The art of war, which they admired in him, and his undauntedness under dangers, were such virtues as these islanders were not used to. Pope.

UNDAUNTEDELY. adv. Boldly; intrepidly; without fear.
It shall bid his soul go out of his body undauntedly, and lift up its head with confidence, before saints and angels. South.

UNDAZZLED. adj. Not dimmed, or confuted by splendour.
Here matter new to gaze the devil met Undazzled. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iii. l. 614.
As undazzled and untroubled eyes, as eagles can be supposed to cast on glow-worms, when they have been newly gazing on the sun. Boyle.

TO UNDEAF. v. a. To free from deafness.
Though Richard my life's counsel would not hear,
My death's sad tale may yet undeaf his ear. Shaksp.

UNDEFA'CHED. adj. Not corrupted by debauchery.
When the world was bucksome, fresh and young,
Her sons were undefauch'd, and therefore strong. Dryden.

UND

UNDE'CAGON. n. f. [from undecim, Lat. and γώνια, Gr.] A figure of eleven angles or sides.

UNDECA'YING. adj. Not suffering diminution or declension.
The fragrant myrtle, and the juicy vine,
Their parents undecaying strength declare,
Which with fresh labour, and unweary'd care,
Supplies new plants. Blackmore on the Creation.

UNDECA'YED. adj. Not liable to be diminished, or impaired.
How fierce in fight, with courage undecay'd! Dryden.
Judge if such warriors want immortal aid.
If in the melancholy shades below,
The flames of friends and lovers cease to glow;
Yet mine shall sacred last; mine undecay'd. Pope.
Burn on through life, and animate my shade.

TO UNDECEIVE. v. a. To set free from the influence of a fallacy.
All men will try, and hope to write as well,
And, not without much pains, be undeciv'd. Roscommon.
My muse enraged, from her urn,
Like ghosts of murder'd bodies does return
To accuse the murderers, to right the stage,
And undecieve the long-abused age. Denham.
So far as truth gets ground in the world, so far sin loses it.
Christ saves the world by undecieving it. South.
Our coming judgments do in part undecieve us, and rectify the grosser errors. Glanville.

UNDECEIVABLE. adj. Not liable to deceive.
It serves for more certain computation, by how much it is a larger and more comprehensive period, and under a more undecivable calculation. Holder on Time.

UNDECEIVED. adj. Not cheated; not imposed on.
All of a tenour was their after life;
No day discolour'd with domestick strife:
No jealousy, but mutual truth believ'd;
Secure repose, and kindness undeciv'd. Dryden.

Than camels in their war; who have their provender
Only for bearing burthens, and fore blows
For sinking under them. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.

12. In a state of oppression by, or subjection to.
After all, they have not been able to give any considerable comfort to the mind, under any of the great pleasures of this life. Tillotson's Sermons.
At any rate we desire to be rid of the present evil, which we are apt to think nothing absent can equal; because, under the present pain, we find not ourselves capable of any, the least degree of happiness. Locke.
Women and children did not shew the least signs of complaint, under the extremity of torture. Collier.
Illustrious parent! now some token give,
That I may Clymene's proud boast believe,
Nor longer under false reproaches grieve. Addison.

All this he would have expatiated upon, with connexions of the discourses, and the most easy, undisobliging transitions. Broom's Notes on the Iliad.

UNDISPERSED, adj. Not scattered.

We have all the redolence of the perfumes we burn upon his altars; the smoke doth vanish ere it can reach the sky; and whilst it is undispersed, it but clouds it. Boyle.

UNDISPOSED, adj. Not bestowed.

The employments were left undisposed of, to keep alive the hopes of impatient candidates. Swift.

UNDISPUTED, adj. Incontrovertible; evident.

You, by an undisputed title, are the king of poets. Dryden.

That virtue and vice tend to make these men happy, or miserable, who severally practise them, is a proposition of undoubted, and by me undisputed, truth. Atterbury.

UNDISSEMBLED, adj.

1. Openly declared. 2. Honest, not feigned. Ye are the sons of a clergy, whose undissembled and unlimited veneration for the holy scriptures, hath not hindered them from paying an inferior, but profound regard to the best interpreters of it, the primitive writers. Atterbury.

UNDISSIPATED, adj. Not scattered; not dispersed.

Such little primary masses as our proposition mentions, may remain undissipated. Boyle.

UNDISSOLVING, adj. Never melting.

Not cold Scythia's undissolving snows, Nor the parch'd Lybian sands thy husband bore, But mild Parthenope. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

UNDISTEMPERED, adj.

1. Free from disease. 2. Free from perturbation. Some such laws may be considered, in some parliament that shall be at leisure, from the urgency of more pressing affairs, and shall be cool and undistemper'd. Temple.

UNDISTINGUISHABLE. adj.
1. Not to be distinctly seen.
These things seem small and undistinguishable,
Like far off mountains turned into clouds. Shakespeare.
The quaint mazes in the wanton green,
For lack of tread, are undistinguishable. Shakespeare.
Its lineaments are destroy'd, and the materials mixt in an undistinguishable confusion. Rogers.
2. Not to be known by any peculiar property.
No idea can be undistinguishable from another, from which it ought to be different. Locke.
UNDISTINGUISHED. adj.
1. Not marked out by objects or intervals.
'Tis longer since the creation of angels than of the world, by seven hundred years: whereby we would mark out so much of that undistinguished duration, as we suppose would have admitted seven hundred annual revolutions of the sun. Locke.
2. Not seen, or not to be seen otherwise than confusedly; not separately and plainly discerned.
'Tis like the milky way, all over bright;
But frown so thick with stars, 'tis undistinguished light. Dryden.
Wrinkles undistinguished pass,
For I'm aham'd to use a glass. Swift.
3. Admitting nothing between; having no intervenient space.
Oh undistinguished space of woman's will! Shakespeare.
The undistinguished seeds of good and ill,
Heav'n, in his bosom, from our knowledge hides. Dryden.
4. Not marked by any particular property.
Sleep to those empty lids
Is grown a stranger; and day and night,
As undistinguished by my sleep, as light. Denham.
5. Not treated with any particular respect.
Sad chance of war! now destitute of aid,
Falls undistinguished by the victor's spade. Pope.
UNDISTINGUISHING. adj. Making no difference.
The promiscuous and undistinguishing distribution of good and evil, which was necessary for carrying on the designs of providence in this life, will be rectified in another. Addison.
Undistinguishing complaisance will vitiate the taste of the readers. Garth.
2. Not to be plainly discerned.
UNDISTRACED. adj. Not perplexed by contrariety of thoughts or desires.
When Enoch had walked with God, he was so far from being tired with that lasting assiduity, that he admitted him to a more immediate, and more undistracted communion with himself. Boyle.
UNDISTRACEDLY. adv. Without disturbance from contradictory sentiments.
St. Paul tells us, that there is difference betwixt married and single persons; the affections of the latter being at liberty to devote themselves more undistractedly to God. Boyle.
UNDISTRACEDNESS. n. f. Freedom from interruption by different thoughts.
The strange confusions of this nation disturb that calmness of mind, and undistractedness of thoughts. Boyle.
UNDISTURBED. adj.
1. Free from perturbation; calm; tranquil.
To our high-raised phantasy present
That undisturbed song of pure content. Milton.
The peaceful cities of th' Ausonian shore,
Lull'd in their ease, and undisturbed before,
Are all on fire. Dryden.
A state, where our imitation of God shall end in the un*disturbed* fruition of him to all eternity. Atterbury.
To be undisturbed in danger, sedately to consider what is fittest to be done, and to execute it steadily, is a complex idea of an action, which may exist. But to be undisturbed in danger, without using one's reason, is as real an idea as the other. Locke.
2. Not interrupted by any hindrance or molestation.
Nature flints our appetite,
And craves no more than undisturbed delight;
Which minds, unmix'd with cares and fears, obtain;
A foul serenity, a body void of pain. Dryden.
Unvex'd with quarrels, undisturbed with noise,
The country king his peaceful realm enjoys. Dryden.
The English, undisturbed, submit obey. Philips.
3. Not agitated.
A good conscience is a port which is land-locked on every side, where no winds can possibly invade. There a man may not only see his own image, but that of his maker, clearly reflected from the undisturbed and silent waters. Dryden.
UNDISTURBEDLY. adv. Calmly; peacefully.
Our minds are so weak, that they have need of all the assurances can be procured, to lay before them undisturbedly
the thread and coherence of any discourse. Locke.
UNDIVIDABLE. adj. Not separable; not susceptible of division:
The best actors in the world for tragedy, pastoral, scene
undividable, or poem unlimited. Shakespeare. Hamlet.

How comes it, husband,
That thou art thus estranged from thyself?
Thyself, I call it, being strange to me;
That undividable, incorporate,
Am better than thy dear self's better part. Shakespeare.
UNDIVIDED. adj. Unbroken; whole; not parted.
Love is not divided between God and God's enemy: we must love God with all our heart; that is, give him a whole and undivided affection. Taylor's Rule of Holy Living.
He extends through all extent;
Spreads undivided, operates unpent. Pope.
UNDIVIDED. adj. Secret; not promulgated.
Let the great gods
Find out their enemies now. Tremble, thou wretch,
That hast within thee undivided crimes,
Unwhipp'd of justice. Shakespeare. K. Lear.
To undivided. v. a. preterite undid; participle passive undone.
1. To ruin; to bring to destruction.
As this immoderate favour of the multitude did him no good, so will it undo so many as shall trust unto it. Hayward.
Subdued, undone, they did at last obey,
And change their own for their invader's way. Refcommon.
Where, with like haste, though several ways they run,
Some to undo, and some to be undone. Denham.
Hither ye come, dislike, and so undo
The players, and disgrace the poet too. Denham.
When I behold the charming maid,
I'm ten times more undone; while hope and fear,
With variety of pain distract me. Addison's Cato.
2. To loose; to open what is shut or fastened; to unravel.
They false and fearful do their hands undo;
Brother, his brother; friend doth friend forsake. Sidney.
Pray undo this button. Shakespeare's K. Lear.
We implore thy powerful hand,
To undo the charmed band
Of true virgin here distress'd. Milton.
Were men so dull, they could not see
That Lyce painted, should they flee,
Like simple birds, into a net,
So grossly woven and ill-set;
Her own teeth would undo the knot,
And let all go that she had got. Waller.
3. To change any thing done to its former state; to recall, or annul any action.
They may know, that we are far from presuming to think that men can better any thing which God hath done, even as we are from thinking, that men should presume to undo some things of men, which God doth know they cannot better. Hooker.
It was a torment
To lay upon the damn'd, which Scyrox
Could not again undo. Shakespeare's Tempest.
We seem ambitious God's whole work undo;
Of nothing he made us, and we strive too,
To bring ourselves to nothing back. Denham.
They make the Deity do undo, go forward and backwards. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
By granting me so soon,
He has the merit of the gift undone. Dryden.
Without this our repentance is not real, because we have not done what we can to undo our fault. Tillotson.
Now will this woman, with a single glance,
Undo what I've been labouring all this while. Addison.
When in time the martial maid
Found out the trick that Venus play'd,
She shakes her helm; she knits her brows,
And, fir'd with indignation, vows,
Tomorrow e'er the setting sun,
She'd all undo, that she had done. Swift.
UNDOING. adj. Ruining; destructive.
The great and undoing mischief which befalls men, is by their being misrepresented. Saunders.
UNDOING. n. f. Ruin; destruction; fatal mischief.
To the utter undoing of some, many things by strictness of law may be done, which equity and honest meaning for-biddeth. Hooker.
False lustre could dazzle my poor daughter to her undoing. Addison's Guardian.
Fools that we are, we know that ye deceive us;
Yet act, as if the fraud was pleasing to us,
And our undoing joy. Rowe's Royal Convert.
UNDOING. adj. [from undo.] undone.
1. Not done; not performed.
Do you smell a fault?
I cannot with the fault undo, the issue of it being so proper. Shakespeare's K. Lear.
2. Ruined; brought to destruction.
Already is the work begun;
And we rest all undone, till all be done. Daniel's Civ. War.

able.
His fact, till now, came not to an undoubted proof. Shakespeare.
Thou, spirit, who ledst this glorious eremite
Into the desert, his victorious field,
Against the spiritual foe, and brought'st him thence,
By proof th' undoubted son of God, inspire. Milton.
The relations of your trials may be received as undoubted records of certain events, and as securely be depended on, as the propositions of Euclid. Glanville.
Made the world tremble with a num'rous host,
And of undoubted victory did boast. Waller.
Though none of these be strict demonstration, yet we have an undoubted assurance of them, when they are proved by the best arguments that the nature of the thing will bear. Tillotson.
UNDOUBTEDLY. adv. Indubitably; without question; without doubt.
Some fault undoubtedly there is in the very resemblance of idolaters. Hooker.
This cardinal, undoubtedly
Was fashion'd to much honour. Shakespeare. Hen. VIII.
Undoubtedly God will relent, and turn From his displeasure. Milton's Par. Lost.
The original is undoubtedly one of the greatest this age has produced. Dryden.
He that believes the christian doctrine, if he adhere to it, and live accordingly, shall undoubtedly be saved. Tillotson.
UNDOUBTING. adj. Admitting no doubt.
They to whom all this is revealed, and received with an undoubting faith, if they do not presently set about so easy and to happy a task, must acknowledge themselves in the number of the blind. Hammond.
UNDRAWN. adj. Not pulled by any external force.
Forth rush'd
The chariot of paternal deity undrawn,
Flashing thick flames, wheel within wheel;
Itself instinct with spirit, but convoy'd
By four cherubick shapes. Milton's Par. Lost.
UNDREADED. adj. Not feared.
Better far,
Than still at hell's dark threshold t'have fat watch,
Unnam'd, undreaded, and thyself half starv'd. Milton.
UNDREAMED. adj. Not thought on.
A course more promising,
Than a wild dedication of yourselves
To unpath'd waters, undream'd shores; most certain
To miseries enough. Shakespeare. Winter Tale.
UNDRESS. v. a. [from dress.]
1. To divest of cloaths; to strip.
Undress you, and come now to bed. Shakespeare.
All were sol'n afield,
To counsel and undress the bride. Suckling.
Her fellows press'd,
And the reluctant nymph by force undress'd. Addison's Ovid.
2. To divest of ornaments, or the attire of ostentation.
Undress'd at evening, when she found
Their odours lost, their colours past,
She chang'd her look. Prior.
UNDRESS. n. f. A loose or negligent dress.
Reform her into ease,
And put her in undress to make her please. Dryden.
UNDRESSED. adj.
1. Not regulated.
Thy vineyard lies half prun'd, and half undress'd. Dryden.
2. Not prepared for use.
The common country people wore perones, shoes of un-dressed leather. Arbutnot on Coins.
UNDRIED. adj. Not dried.
Their titles in the field were try'd:
Witness the fresh laments, and fun'ral tears undry'd. Dryden.
Four pounds of undried hops, thorough ripe, will make one of dry. Mortimer's Husbandry.
UNDRIVEN. adj. Not impelled either way.
As wintry winds contending in the sky,
With equal force of lungs their titles try;
The doubtful rack of heav'n
Stands without motion, and the tide undriv'n. Dryden.
UNDROSSY. adj. Free from recreation.
When a noontide sun, with summer beams
Darts through a cloud, her watry skirts are edg'd
With lucid amber, or undrossy gold. Philips.
UNDUBITABLE. adj. Not admitting doubt; unquestionable.
Let that principle, that all is matter, and that there is nothing else, be received for certain and undubitable, and it will be easy to be seen, what consequences it will lead us into. Locke.
UNDUE. adj. [from indue, Fr.]
1. Not right; not legal.

That proceeding being at that time tax'd for rigorous and undue, in matter and manner, makes it very probable there was some greater matter against her. Bacon.
2. Not agreeable to duty.
He will not prostitute his power to mean and undue ends, nor stoop to little and low arts of courting the people. Atterb.
UNDULARY. adj. [from undula, Lat.] Playing like waves;
playing with intermissions.
The blasts and undulary breaths thereof maintain no certainty in their course. Browne's Vulgar Errors.
To UNDULATE. v. a. [from undula, Lat.] To drive backward and forward; to make to play as waves.
Breath vocalized, i. e. vibrated and undulated, may in a different manner affect the lips, or tongue, or palate, and impress a swift, tremulous motion, which breath alone passing smooth doth not. Holder's Elements of Speech.
To UNDULATE. v. n. To play as waves in curls.
Through undulating air the sounds are sent,
And spread o'er all the fluid element. Pope.
UNDULATION. n. f. [from undulate.] Waving motion.
Worms and leeches will move both ways; and so will most of those animals, whose bodies consist of round and an-nular fibres, and move by undulation, that is, like the waves of the sea. Browne's Vulgar Errors.
All tuneable sounds are made by a regular vibration of the sonorous body, and undulation of the air, proportionable to the acuteness and gravity of the tone. Holder.
Two parallel walls beat the sound back on each other, till the undulation is quite worn out. Addison.
UNDULATORY. adj. [from undulate.] Moving in the manner of waves.
A constant undulatory motion is perceived by looking through telescopes. Arbutnot on Air.
UNDULY. adv. Not properly; not according to duty.
Men unduly exercise their zeal against persons; not only against evil persons, but against those that are the most venerable. Sprat's Sermons.
UNDUTEOUS. adj. Not performing duty; irreverent; disobedient.
She and I, long since contracted,
Are now so sure, that nothing can dissolve us.
And this deceit loses the name of craft,
Of disobedience, or undutious title. Shakespeare.
In Latium safe he lay,
From his undutious son, and his usurping sway. Dryden.
UNDUTIFUL. adj. Not obedient; not reverent.
England thinks it no good policy to have that realm planted with English, lest they should grow to undutiful as the Irish, and become more dangerous. Spenser's Ireland.
No man's reason did ever dictate to him, that it is fit for a creature not to love God; to be undutiful to his great sovereign, and ungrateful to his best benefactor. Tillotson.
UNDUTIFULLY. adv. [from undutiful.] Not according to duty.
The fifth had long in Cæsar's ponds been fed,
And from its lord undutifully fled. Dryden's Juvenal.
UNDUTIFULNESS. n. f. Want of respect; irreverence; disobedience.
I would have thought they would rather have held in, and staid all the other from undutifulness; than need to be forced thereunto themselves. Spenser's Ireland.
Forbidding undutifulness to superiors, sedition and rebellion against magistracy. Tillotson.
UNDYING. adj. Not destroyed; not perishing.
Driven down
To chains of darkness, and th' undying worm. Milton.
UNEARNED. adj. Not obtained by labour or merit.
As I am honest Puck,
If we have unearned luck;
Now to 'scape the serpent's tongue,
We will make amends ere long. Shakespeare.
Our work is brought to little, though begun
Early, and th' hour of supper comes unearn'd. Milton.
Wilt thou rather chuse
To lie supinely, hoping heav'n will bless Thy slighted fruits, and give thee bread unearn'd? Philips.
UNEARTHED. adj. Driven from the hold.
The mighty robber of the fold;
Is from his craggy, winding haunts unearth'd. Thomson.

The same uneasiness which every thing Gives to our nature, life must also bring. Denham.
We may be said to live like those who have their hope in another life, if we bear the uneasiness that befall us here with constancy. Atterbury.
Men are dissatisfied with their station, and create to themselves all the uneasiness of want. They fancy themselves poor, and under this persuasion feel all the disquiet of real poverty. Rogers's Sermons.
His Majesty will maintain his just authority over them; and whatever uneasiness they may give themselves, they can create none in him. Addison's Freeholder.
The libels against his grandfather, that fly about his very court, give him uneasiness. Swift.
UNEASINESS. adj.
1. Painful; giving disturbance.
The wisest of the Gentiles forbade any libations to be made for dead infants, as believing they passed into happiness through the way of mortality, and for a few months wore an uneasy garment. Taylor's Rule of Holy Living.
On a tottering pinnacle the standing is uneasy, and the fall deadly. Decay of Piety.
His present thoughts are uneasy, because his present state does not please him. L'Estrange.
Uneasy life to me,
Still watch'd and importun'd, but worse for thee. Dryden.
2. Disturbed; not at ease.
Happy low! lie down;
Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown. Shakespeare.
Uneasy justice upward flew,
And both the sisters to the stars withdrew. Dryden.
The passion and ill language proceeded from a gall'd and uneasy mind. Tillotson.
It is such a pleasure as makes a man restless and uneasy, exciting fresh desires. Addison.
One would wonder how any person should desire to be king of a country, in which the established religion is directly opposite to that he professes. Were it possible for such a one to accomplish his designs, his own reason might tell him, there could not be a more uneasy prince, nor a more unhappy people. Addison's Freeholder.
If we imagine ourselves intitled to any thing we have not, we shall be uneasy in the want of it; and that uneasiness will expose us to all the evil persuasions of poverty. Rogers.
The soul, uneasy and confin'd from home,
Rests and expatiates in a life to come. Pope.
3. Constraining; cramping.
Some fervile imitators
Prescribe at first such strict, uneasy rules,
As they must ever slavishly observe. Roscommon.
4. Not unconstrained; not disengaged.
In conversation, a solicitous watchfulness about one's behaviour, instead of being mended, will be constrained, uneasy, and ungraceful. Locke.
5. Peevish; difficult to please.
A four, untractable nature, makes him uneasy to those who approach him. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 469.
6. Difficult. Out of use.
We will, not appearing what we are, have some question with the shepherd: from his simplicity, I think it not uneasy to get the cause of my son's resort thither. Shakespeare.
This swift business
I must uneasy make; left too light winning
Make the prize light. Shakespeare's Tempest.
Divers things, knowable by the bare light of nature, are yet so uneasy to be satisfactorily understood, that, let them be delivered in the clearest expressions, the notions themselves will appear obscure. Boyle.
UNEATEN. adj. Not devoured.
Though they had but two horses left uneaten, they had never suffered a summons to be sent to them. Clarendon.
UNEATH. adv. [from earth, eað, Saxon; easy.]
1. Not easily. Out of use.
Uneath may she endure the flinty street,
To tread them with her tender feeling feet: Shakespeare.
2. It seems in Spenser to signify the same as beneath. Under; below.
A roaring, hideous sound,
That all the air with terror filled wide,
And seem'd uneath to shake the steadfast ground. Fairy Queen.
UNEDEFINING. adj. Not improving in good life.
Our practical divinity is as sound and affecting, as that of our popish neighbours is flat and undefining. Atterbury.
UNELECTED. adj. Not chosen.
Putting him to rage,
You should have ta'en th' advantage of his cholera,
And pass'd him unelected. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
UNELEGIBLE. adj. Not worthy to be chosen.
Both extremes, above or below the proportion of our character, are dangerous; and 'tis hard to determine which is most unelegible. Rogers's Sermons.

UNEMPLOYED. adj.
1. Not busy; at leisure; idle.
Other creatures, all day long
Rove idle, unemploy'd, and less need rest. Milton's Par. Lost.
Wilt thou then serve Philistines with that gift,
Which was expressly given thee to annoy them?
Better at home lie bedrid, not only idle,
Inglorious, unemploy'd, with age out-worn. Milton.
Our wife creator has annexed to several objects, and to the ideas we receive of them, as also, to several of our thoughts, a concomitant pleasure, that those faculties which we are endowed with, might not remain idle and unemployed. Locke.
2. Not engaged in any particular work.
Fales unhonour'd, Ceres unemploy'd,
Were all forgot. Dryden.
Men, foured with poverty, and unemploy'd, easily give into any prospect of change. Addison.
UNEPTABLE. adj. Not to be emptied; inexhaustible.
Whatever men or angels know, it is as a drop of that unemptiable fountain of wisdom, which hath diversly imparted her treasures. Hooker.
UNENDOWED. adj. Not invested; not graced.
A man rather unadorned with any parts of quickness, and unendowed with any notable virtues, than notorious for any defect of understanding. Clarendon.
Aspiring, factious, fierce and loud,
With grace and learning unendow'd. Swift.
UNENGAGED. adj. Not engaged; not appropriated.
When we have sunk the only unengaged revenues left, our incumbrances must remain perpetual. Swift.
UNENJOYED. adj. Not obtained; not possessed.
Each day's a mistress, unenjoy'd before;
Like travellers, we're pleas'd with seeing more. Dryden.
UNENJOYING. adj. Not using; having no fruition.
The more we have, the meaner is our store;
Th' unenjoying, craving wretch is poor. Craich.
UNENLIGHTENED. adj. Not illuminated.
Moral virtue natural reason, unenlightened by revelation, prescribes. Atterbury.
UNENLARGED. adj. Not enlarged; narrow, contracted.
Unenlarged souls are disgusted with the wonders which the microscope has discovered concerning the shape of little animals, which equal not a pepper-corn. Watts.
UNENSLAVED. adj. Free; not enthrall'd.
By thee
She sits a foreign, unenslav'd and free. Addison.
UNENTERTAINING. adj. Giving no delight; giving no entertainment.
It was not unentertaining to observe by what degrees I ceased to be a witty writer. Pope.
UNENVIED. adj. Exempt from envy.
The fortune, which no body fees, makes a man happy and unenvied. Bacon.
This loss
Thus far at least recover'd, hath much more
Establish'd in a safe, unenvied throne, Yielded with full content. Milton's Par. Lost.
These unenvied stand;
Since what they act, transcends what they command. Denham.
What health promotes, and gives unenvy'd peace,
Is all expenceless, and procur'd with ease. Blackmore.
Beneath our humble cottage let us haste,
And here, unenvy'd, rural dainties taste. Pope's Odyssey.
UNENTOMBED. adj. Unburied; uninterred.
Think't thou unentomb'd to cross the floods? Dryden.
UNEQUABLE. adj. Different from itself; diverse.
March and September, the two equinoxes, are the most unsettled and unequable of seasons. Bentley's Sermons.
UNEQUAL. adj. [Inequality, Lat.]
1. Not even.
There fits deformity to mock my body;
To shape my legs of an unequal size. Shakespeare.
You have here more than one example of Chaucer's unequal numbers. Dryden.
2. Not equal; inferior.
Among unequals, what society?
To bliss unknown my lofty soul aspires;
My lot unequal to my vast desires. Arbutnot.
3. Partial; not bestowing on both the same advantages.
When to conditions of unequal peace,
He shall submit, then may he not possess
Kingdom nor life. Denham.
4. [Inequality, Fr.] Disproportionate; ill matched.
Unequal work we find,
Against unequal arms to fight in pain.
From his strong arm I saw his rival run,
And in a crowd th' unequal combat shun.
Fierce Belinda on the baron flies,
Nor fear'd the chief th' unequal fight to try. Pope.
5. Not regular; not uniform.
So strong, yet so unequal pulses beat. Dryden.
So strong, yet so unequal pulses beat. Us.

UNE

UNEQUALABLE. adj. Not to be equalled; not to be paralleled.
Christ's love to God is filial and unequalable. Boyle.
UNEQUALLED. adj. Unparalleled; unrivalled in excellence.
By those unequalled and invaluable blessings, he manifested how much he hated sin, and how much he loved sinners. Boyle.
Dorinda came, divested of the scorn,
Which the unequal'd maid so long had worn. Roscommon.
UNEQUALLY. adv. In different degrees; in disproportion one to the other.
When we view some well-proportion'd dome,
No single parts unequally surprize;
All comes united to th' admiring eyes. Pope.
UNEQUALNESS. n. f. Inequality; state of being unequal.
UNEQUITABLE. adj. Not impartial; not just.
We force him to stand to those measures which we think too unequitable to press upon a murderer. Decay of Piety.
UNEQUITVOCAL. adj. Not equivocal.
This conceit is erroneous, making putrefactive generations correspondent to seminal productions, and conceiving unequivocal effects, and univocal conformity unto the efficient. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
UNEQUIVOCALNESS. n. f. Incapacity of error.
How much more than possible that has been, the many innovations of that church witness; and consequently the danger of presuming upon the unerrableness of a guide. Decay of Piety.
UNERRING. adj. [Inerrans, Lat.]
1. Committing no mistake.
The irresistible infirmities of our nature, make a perfect and unerring obedience impossible. Rogers's Sermons.
Fast in chains constrain the various God;
Who bound obedient to superior force,
Unerring will prescribe your destin'd course. Pope.
His javelin threw,
Hissing in air th' unerring weapon flew. Dryden.
2. Incapable of failure; certain.
The king a mortal shaft lets fly
From his unerring hand. Denham.
Is this th' unerring power? the ghost reply'd;
Nor Phœbus flatter'd; nor his answers ly'd.
Lovers of truth, for truth's sake; there is this one unerring mark, the not entertaining any proposition, with greater assurance than the proofs it is built upon will warrant. Locke.
UNERRINGLY. adv. Without mistake.
What those figures are, that should be mechanically adapted, to fall so unerringly into regular compositions, is beyond our faculties to conceive. Glaville.
UNESCHEWABLE. adj. Inevitable; unavoidable; not to be escaped.
He gave the mayor sufficient warning to shift for safety, if an uneschevable destiny had not halted him. Carew.
UNESPIED. adj. Not seen; undiscovered; undeferred.
Treachery, guile, and deceit, are things which may for a while, but do not long go unespied. Hooker.
From living eyes her open shame to hide,
And live in rocks and caves long unespy'd. Fairy Queen.
Nearer to view his prey, and unespy'd
To mark what of their state he more might learn. Milton.
The second shaft came swift and unespy'd;
And pierc'd his hand, and nail'd it to his side. Dryden.
UNESSENTIAL. adj.
1. Not being of the last importance; not constituting offence.
Tillotson was moved rather with pity, than indignation, towards the persons of those who differed from him in the unessential parts of christianity. Addison's Freeholder.
2. Void of real being.
The void profound
Of unessential night receives him next. Milton.
UNESTABLISHED. adj. Not established.
From plain principles, doubt may be fairly solved, and not clapped up from petitionary foundations unestablished. Brown.
UNEVEN. adj.
1. Not even; not level.
These high wild hills, and rough, uneven ways,
Draw out our miles, and make them wearisome. Shakespeare.
Some said it was best to fight with the Turks in that uneven, mountain country, where the Turks chief strength consisting in the multitude of his horsemen, should stand him in small stead. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.
They made the ground uneven about their nest, inasmuch that the fate did not lie flat. Addison.
2. Not fitting each other; not equal.
The Hebrew verse consists of uneven feet. Peacock.
UNEVENNESS. n. f.
1. Surface not level; inequality of surface.
This unevenness of the foot, which yields to the ruggedness and unevenness of the roads, renders the feet less capable of being worn, than if they were more solid. Ray on the Creation.
That motion which can continue long in one and the same part of the body, can be propagated a long way from one part to another, supposing the body homogenous; so that the motion may not be reflected, refracted, interrupted or disordered by any unevenness of the body. Newton.

UNE

2. Turbulence; changeable state.
Edward II. though an unfortunate prince, and by reason of the troubles and unevenness of his reign, the very law itself had many interruptions; yet it held its current in that state his father had left it in. Hale.
3. Not smoothness.
Notwithstanding any such unevenness or indistinctness in the style of those places, concerning the origin and form of the earth. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
UNEVITABLE. adj. [Inevitabilis, Lat. inevitable, Fr.] Inevitable; not to be escaped.
So jealous is she of my love to her daughter, that I never yet begin to open my mouth to the unevitable Philoclea, but that her unwished presence gave my tale a conclusion, before it had a beginning. Sidney.
UNEVICTED. adj. Not exacted; not taken by force.
All was common, and the fruitful earth
Was free, to give her unevicted birth. Dryden.
UNEVICTED. adj. Not enquired; not tried; not discussed.
Yet within these five hours Hastings liv'd
Untainted, unevict'd, free at liberty. Shakespeare.
They utter all they think, with a violence and indisposition, unevict'd, without relation to person, place, or fitness. E. Johnson.
The most pompous seeming knowledge, that is built on the unevict'd prejudices of sense, stands not. Glaville.
UNEVICTED. adj. Not known by any precedent or example.
Charles returned with unevict'd love from Algiers. Raleigh.
O unevict'd love!
Love no where to be found less than divine. Milton.
God vouchsaf'd Enoch an unevict'd exemption from death. Boyle.
Your twice-conquer'd vassals,
First, by your courage, then your clemency,
Here humbly vow to sacrifice their lives,
The gift of this your unevict'd mercy,
To your command. Denham's Soly.
I tune my pipe afresh, each night and day,
Thy unevict'd goodness to extoll. Philips.
UNEVECTIONABLE. adj. Not liable to any objection.
Personal prejudices should not hinder us from pursuing, with joint hands and hearts, the unevectionable design of this pious institution. Atterbury.
UNEVECTIONABLE. adj. Not to be found out.
Wherein can man resemble his unevectionable power and perfectness. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
UNEVECTED. adj. Not performed; not done.
Leave unevected your own renowned knowledge. Shakespeare.
UNEVECTED. adj. Not subject to the payment of excise.
UNEVECTED. adj. Not made known by instance or example.
Those wonders a generation returned with so unevected an ingratitude, that it is not the least of his wonders, that he would vouchsafe to work any of them. Boyle.
For this being a new, unevected kind of policy, must pass for the wisdom of this particular age, scorning the examples of all former ages. South.
UNEVECTED. adj. Not practised; not experienced.
Messias, with his ardour, warms
A heartless train, unevected in arms. Dryden.
Abstract ideas are not so obvious to the yet unevected mind, as particular ones. Locke.
UNEVECTED. adj. Not free by peculiar privilege.
You invert the cov'nants of her trust,
And harshly deal like an ill borrower,
With that which you receiv'd on other terms,
Scorning the unevected condition
By which all mortal frailty must subsist. Milton.
UNEVECTED. adj. [Inexhaustus, Lat.] Not spent; not drained to the bottom.
What avail her unevected stores?
While proud oppression in her vallies reigns. Addison.
UNEVECTED. adj. Not spread out.
Every fetus bears a secret hoard;
With sleeping, unevected issue stor'd. Blackmore.
UNEVECTED. adj. Not thought on; sudden; not provided against.
Have wisdom to provide always beforehand, that those evils overtake us not, which death unevected doth use to bring upon careless men; and although it be sudden in itself, nevertheless, in regard of our prepared minds, it may not be sudden. Hooker, b. v. §. 46.
Sith evils, great and unevected, do cause oftentimes even them to think upon divine power with fearfullist suspicions, which have been otherwise the most sacred adorners thereof; how should we look for any constant resolution of mind in such cases, saving only where unfeigned affection to God, hath bred the most assured confidence to be assisted by his hand? Hooker, b. v. §. 1.

UNE

O unexpected stroke! worse than death!
Must I thus leave thee, paradise? Milton's Par. Lost.
Them unexpected joy surpriz'd,
When the great enigm of Messiah blaz'd. Milton.
Their unexpected loss and plaints out-breath'd. Milton.
Some amazement;
But such as sprung from wonder, not from fear,
It was to unexpected. Denham's Sophy.
To the pale foes they suddenly draw near,
And summon them to unexpected fight. Dryden.
Deep was the wound; he stagger'd with the blow,
And turn'd him to his unexpected foe. Dryden.
When Barcelona was taken by a most unexpected accident of a bomb lighting on the magazine, then the Catalonians revolted. Swift.
UNEXPECTEDLY. adv. Suddenly; at a time unthought of.
Oft he seems to hide his face,
But unexpectedly returns. Milton's Agonistes.
A most bountiful present, when I was most in want of it, came most seasonably and unexpectedly to my relief. Dryden.
If the concernment be poured in unexpectedly upon us, it overflows us. Dryden.
You have fairer warning than others, who are unexpectedly cut off. Wake.
My heart was filled with a deep melancholy, to see several dropping unexpectedly in the midst of mirth. Addison.
Though you went away to unexpectedly, yet we have informed ourselves of every thing that hath happened to you. Gay.
UNEXPECTEDNESS. n. f. Suddenness; unthought of time or manner.
He describes the unexpectedness of his appearance. Watts.
UNEXPERIENCED. adj. Not versed; not acquainted by trial or practice.
The wisest, unexperienc'd, will be ever
Timorous and loth, with novice modesty,
Irresolute, unhardy, unadvent'rous. Milton.
Long use may strengthen men against many such inconveniences, which, to unexperienc'd persons, may prove very hazardous. Wilkins's Math. Magic.
The pow'rs of Troy;
Not a raw and unexperienc'd train,
But a firm body of embattl'd men. Dryden.
These reproaches are the extravagant speeches of those unexperienc'd young men, if unwarned, take one thing for another. Locke.
The smallest accident intervening, often produces such changes, that a wife man is just as much in doubt of events, as the most ignorant and unexperienc'd. Swift.
UNEXPERIENT. adj. Inconvenient; not fit.
The like would not be unexpedient after meat, to assist and cherish nature in her first concoction, and send their minds back to study in good tune. Milton on Education.
UNEXPERT. adj. [unexpertus, Lat.] Wanting skill or knowledge.
Receive the partner of my inmost soul:
Him you will find in letters, and in laws
Not unexpert. Prior.
UNEXPLORED. adj.
1. Not searched out.
Oh! say what stranger cause, yet unexplor'd,
Could make a gentle belle reject a lord? Pope.
2. Not tried; not known.
Under thy friendly conduct will I fly,
To regions unexplor'd. Dryden.
UNEXPRESSED. adj. Not laid open to censure.
They will endeavour to diminish the honour of the best treatise, rather than suffer the little mistakes of the author to pass unexpress'd. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
UNEXPRESSIBLE. adj. Ineffable; not to be uttered.
What unexpressible comfort does overflow the pious soul, from a conscience of its own innocence. Tillotson.
UNEXPRESSIVE. adj.
1. Not having the power of uttering or expressing. This is the natural and analogical signification.
2. Inexpressible; unutterable; ineffable; not to be expressed.
Improper, and out of use.
Run, run, Orlando, carve on every tree
The fair, the chaste, and inexpressive the. Shakespeare.
With nectar pure his ozy locks he laves,
And hears the unexpressive, nuptial song,
In the blest kingdoms, meek, of joy and love. Milton.
The helmed cherubim,
And sworded seraphim,
Are seen in glitt'ring ranks, with wings display'd,
Harping in loud and solemn quire,
With inexpressive notes to heaven's new-born heir. Milton.
UNEXTENDED. adj. Occupying no assignable space; having no dimensions.
How inconceivable is it, that a spiritual, i. e. an unextended substance, should represent to the mind an extended one, as a triangle? Locke.

UNF

UNEXTINGUISHABLE. adj. [inextinguible, Fr.] Unquenchable; not to be put out.
Pain of unextinguishable fire
Must exercise us, without hope of end. Milton.
What native, unextinguishable beauty must be impressed through the whole, which the defecation of so many parts, by a bad printer, and a worse editor, could not hinder from shining forth? Bentley.
UNEXTINGUISHED. adj. [inextinctus, Lat.]
1. Not quenched; not put out.
The souls, whom that unhappy flame invades,
Make endless moans, and, pining with desire,
Lament too late their unextinguish'd fire. Dryden.
Ev'n o'er your cold, your ever-fac'd urn,
His constant flame, shall unextinguish'd burn. Lyttleton.
2. Not extinguishable.
An ardent thirst of honour; a soul unsatisfied with all it has done, and an unextinguish'd desire of doing more. Dryden.
UNFADED. adj. Not withered.
A lovely flower,
Unfaded yet, but yet unfed below,
No more to mother earth, or the green stem shall owe. Dryden.
UNFADING. adj. Not liable to wither.
For her th' unfading rose of Eden blooms,
And wings of seraphs shed divine perfumes. Pope.
UNFAILING. adj. Certain; not missing.
Nothing the united voice of all history proclaims so loud, as the certain, unfailing curse, that has punished and overtook sacrilege. South's Sermons.
Thou, secure of my unfailing word,
Compose thy swelling soul, and sheath the sword. Dryden.
UNFAIR. adj. Disingenuous; seditious; not honest.
You come, like an unfair merchant, to charge me with being in your debt. Swift.
UNFAITHFUL. adj.
1. Perfidious; treacherous.
If you break one jot of your promise, I will think you the most atheistical break-promise, and the most unworthy, that may be chosen out of the gross band of the unfaithful. Shakespeare.
My feet, through wine, unfaithful to their weight,
Betray'd me tumbling from a tow'ry height. Pope.
2. Impious; infidel.
Thence shall come
To judge th' unfaithful dead; but to reward
His faithful, and receive them into bliss. Milton's Par. Lost.
UNFAITHFULLY. adv. Treacherously; perfidiously.
There is danger of being unfaithfully counselled; and more for the good of them that counsel, than for him that is counselled. Bacon.
UNFAITHFULNESS. n. f. Treachery; perfidiousness.
As the obscurity of what some writers deliver, makes it very difficult to be understood; so the unfaithfulness of too many others, makes it unfit to be relied on. Boyle.
UNFAILOWED. adj. Not fallowed.
Th' unfallow'd glebe
Yearly o'ercomes the granaries with stores
Of golden wheat. Phillips.
UNFAMILIAR. adj. Unaccustomed; such as is not common.
The matters which we handle, seem, by reason of newness, dark, intricate, unfamiliar. Hooker, b. i.
Chaucer's uncouth, or rather unfamiliar, language, deters many readers. Warton's Spenser.
UNFASHIONABLE. adj. Not modish; not according to the reigning custom.
A man writes good sense, but he has not a happy manner of expression. Perhaps he uses obsolete and unfashionable language. Watts's Logic.
UNFASHIONABLENESS. n. f. Deviation from the mode.
Natural unfashionableness is much better than apish, affected postures. Locke.
UNFASHIONED. adj.
1. Not modified by art.
Mark but how terribly his eyes appear;
And yet there is something roughly noble there;
Which, in unfashion'd nature, looks divine,
And, like a gem, does in the quarry shine. Dryden.
2. Having no regular form.
A lifeless lump, unfashion'd and unfram'd,
Of jarring seeds, and justly chaos nam'd. Dryden.
UNFASHIONABLY. adv. [from unfashionable.]
1. Not according to the fashion.
2. Unartfully.
Deform'd, unfinish'd, sent before my time
Into this breathing world, scarce half made up;
And that so lamely and unfashionably,
That dogs bark at me. Shakespeare's Rich. III.
TO UNFASTEN. v. a. To loose; to unfix.
He had no sooner unfastened his hold, but that a wave forcibly spoiled his weaker hand of hold. Sidney, b. ii.

UNF

His foes are so enrooted with his friends,
That plucking to unfix an enemy,
He doth unfasten so, and shake a friend. Shakespeare.
Then in the key-hole turns
Th' intricate wards, and every bolt and bar
Of massy iron, or solid rock, with ease
Unfastens. Milton's Par. Lost. b. ii. l. 876.
UNFATHERED. adj. Fatherless; having no father.
They do observe
Unfather'd heirs, and loathly births of nature. Shakespeare.
UNFATHOMABLE. n. f.
1. Not to be fathomed by a line.
In the midst of the plain a beautiful lake, which the inhabitants thereabouts pretend is unfathomable. Addison.
Beneath unfathomable depths they faint,
And secret in their gloomy caverns pant. Addison's Ovid.
2. That of which the end or extent cannot be found.
A thousand parts of our bodies may be diversified in all the dimensions of solid bodies; which overwhelms the fancy in a new abyss of unfathomable number. Bentley's Sermons.
UNFATHOMABLY. adv. So as not to be founded.
Cover'd pits, unfathomably deep. Thomson.
UNFATHOMED. adj. Not to be founded.
The Titan race
He sing'd with light'ning, rowl within the unfathom'd space. Dryden.
UNFATIGUED. adj. Unwearied; untired.
Over dank, and dry,
They journey toilsome, unfatig'd with length
Of march. Phillips.
UNFAVOURABLY. adv.
1. Unkindly; unpropitiously.
2. So as not to countenance, or support.
Bacon speaks not unfavourably of this. Glanville.
UNFAVOUR. n.
1. Not affrighted; intrepid; not terrified.
Just men
Though heaven should speak with all his wrath at once,
That with his breath the hinges of the world
Did crack, we should stand upright and unfear'd. B. Johnson.
2. Not dreaded; not regarded with terror.
UNFEASIBLE. adj. Impracticable.
UNFEATHERED. adj. Implumous; naked of feathers.
The mother nightingale laments alone;
Whose nest some prying churl had found, and thence
By stealth convey'd th' unfather'd innocence. Dryden.
UNFEATURED. adj. Deformed; wanting regularity of features.
Village rough,
Deform'd, unfatur'd, and a skin of buff. Dryden.
UNFED. adj. Not supplied with food.
Each bone might through his body well be read,
And every sinew seen through his long fast;
For ought he car'd, his carcass long unfed. Fairy Queen.
A grilly foaming wolf his ears, long unfed. Reverend.
UNFEED. adj. Unpaid.
It is like the breath of an unfeed lawyer; you gave me nothing for't. Shakespeare's K. Lear.
UNFEELING. adj. Insensible; void of mental sensibility.
Dull, unfeeling, barren ignorance,
Is made my goaler to attend on me. Shakespeare. Rich. II.
Unlucky Vellied! thy unfeeling master,
The more thou ticklest, gripes his fit the faster. Pope.
UNFEIGNED. adj. Not counterfeited; not hypocritical; real;
sincere.
Here I take the like unfeigned oath,
Never to marry her. Shakespeare. Taming of the Shrew.
Thousand decencies that daily flow
From all her words and actions, mix'd with love,
And sweet compliance, which declare unfeigned
Union of mind. Milton's Par. Lost.
Sorrow unfeign'd, and humiliation meek. Milton.
Employ it in unfeigned piety towards God. Sprat.
UNFEIGNEDLY. adv. Really; sincerely; without hypocrisy.
He pardoneth all them that truly repent, and unfeignedly believe his holy gospel. Common Prayer.
How should they be unfeignedly just, whom religion doth not cause to be such; or they religious, which are not found such by the proof of their just actions? Hooker.
Prince dauphin, can you love this lady? —
— I love her most unfeignedly. Shakespeare. K. John.
Thou hast brought me and my people unfeignedly to repent of the sins we have committed. K. Charles.
UNFEELT. adj. Not felt; not perceived.
All my treasury
Is but yet unfelt thanks, which, more enrich'd,
Shall be your love and labour's recompence. Shakespeare.
Her looks, from that time infus'd Sweetness into my heart, unfelt before. Milton's Par. Lost.
'Tis pleasant, safely to behold from shore
The rowling ships, and hear the tempest roar;

UNF

Not that another's pain is our delight,
But pains unfelt produce the pleasing sight. Dryden.
UNFENCED. adj.
1. Naked of fortification.
I'd play incessantly upon these jades;
Even till unfenced desolation
Leave them as naked as the vulgar air. Shakespeare.
2. Not furrounded by any inclosure.
UNFERMENTED. adj. Not fermented.
All such vegetables must be unferrmented; for fermentation changes their nature. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
UNFERTILE. adj. Not fruitful; not prolific.
Peace is not such a dry tree, such a tasteless, infertile thing, but that it might fructify and increase. Deacy of Piety.
TO UNFETTER. v. a. To unchain; to free from shackles.
Unfetter me with speed, Dryden.
I see you troubled that I bleed.
This most useful principle may be unfetter'd, and restored to its native freedom of exercise. Addison's Spectator.
The soul in these instances is not entirely loose and unfetter'd from the body. Addison's Spectator.
Th' unfetter'd mind by thee sublim'd. Thomson.
UNFIGURED. adj. Representing no animal form.
In unfigured paintings the noblest is the imitation of marbles, and of architecture, as arches, freezes. Wotton.
UNFILLED. adj. Not filled; not supplied.
Come not to table, but when thy need invites thee; and if thou best in health, leave something of thy appetite unfilled. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
The air did not precisely fill up the vacuities of the vessel, since it left so many unfilled. Boyle.
The throne of my forefathers
Still stands unfill'd. Addison's Cato.
UNFIRM. adj.
1. Weak; feeble.
Our fancies are more giddy and unfirm
Than women's are. Shakespeare. Twelfth Night.
So is the unfirm king.
In three divided; and his coffers found
With hollow poverty and emptiness. Shakespeare.
2. Not stable.
Take the time, while stag'ring yet they stand,
With feet unfirm, and prepossess the strand. Dryden.
UNFULFILL. adj. Unfulfillable to a son.
You offer him a wrong,
Something unfulfill. Shakespeare.
Teach the people, that to hope for heaven is a mercenary,
legal, and therefore unfulfill, affection. Boyle.
UNFINISHED. adj. Incomplete; not brought to an end; not brought to perfection; imperfect; wanting the last hand.
It is for that such outward ornament
Was lavish'd on their sex, that inward gifts
Were left for haste unfinish'd. Milton.
I dedicate to you a very unfinished piece. Dryden.
His hasty hand left his pictures to unfinished, that the beauty in the picture faded sooner than in the person after whom it was drawn. Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 83.
This collection contains not only such pieces as come under our review, but many others, even unfinished. Swift.
UNFIT. adj.
1. Improper; unsuitable.
They easily perceive how unfit that were for the present,
which was for the first age convenient enough. Hooker.
Neither can I think you would impose upon me an unfit and over-ponderous argument. Milton on Education.
2. Unqualified.
Unfit he was for any worldly thing,
And eke unable once to stir or go. Spenser.
Old as I am, for ladies love unfit,
The pow'r of beauty I remember yet. Dryden.
A genius that can hardly take in the connection of three propositions, is utterly unfit for speculative studies. Watts.
TO UNFIT. v. a. To disqualify.
Those excellencies, as they qualified him for dominion, so they unfitted him for a satisfaction or acquiescence in his vassals. Government of the Tongue.
UNFITTING. adj. Not proper.
Although monosyllables, so fit in our tongue, are unfitting for verses, yet are they the most fit for expressing briefly the first conceits of the mind. Camden.
UNFITLY. adv. Not properly; not suitably.
Others, reading to the church those books which the apostles wrote, are neither untruly nor unfitly said to preach. Hooker.
The kingdom of France may be not unfitly compared to a body that hath all its blood drawn up into the arms, breast and back. Howel.
UNFITNESS. n. f.
1. Want of qualifications.
In setting down the form of common prayer, there was no need that the book should mention either the learning of a fit, or the unfitness of an ignorant minister. Hooker.

UNF

It is looked upon as a great weakness, and unfix'd for business, for a man to be so open, as really to think not only what he says, but what he swears. South.
 2. Want of propriety.
 To UNFIX. v. a.
 1. To loosen; to make less fast.
 Plucking to unfix an enemy,
 He doth unfasten a friend. Shakespeare's Hen. IV.
 Who can impress the forest, bid the tree
Unfix his earth-bound root? Shakespeare's Macbeth.
 2. To make fluid.
 Stiff with eternal ice, and hid in snow,
 The mountain stands; nor can the rising sun
Unfix her frosts, and teach them how to run. Dryden.
 UNFIXED. adj.
 1. Wandering; erratic; inconstant; vagrant.
 So vast the noise, as if not fleets did join;
 But lands unfix'd, and flaming nations strove. Dryden.
 Her lovely looks a sprightly mind disclose,
 Quick as her eyes, and as unfix'd as those. Pope.
 2. Not determined.
 Irresolute on which she should rely:
 At last unfix'd in all, is only fix'd to die. Dryden.
 UNFLESHED. adj. That has not yet the full furniture of feathers; young; not completed by time; not having attained full growth.
 The friends thou hast, and their adoption try'd,
 Grapple them to thy soul with hooks of steel;
 But do not dull thy palm with entertainment
 Of each new-hatch'd, unflesh'd comrade. Shakespeare.
 In those unflesh'd days was my wife a girl. Shakespeare.
Unflesh'd actors learn to laugh and cry. Dryden.
 UNFLESHED. adj. Not fleshed; not seasoned to blood; raw.
 Nature his limbs only for war made fit;
 With some less foe thy unflesh'd valour try. Cowley.
 As a generous, unflesh'd hound, that bears
 From far the hunter's horn and cheerful cry.
 So will I hark. Dryden's Cleomenes.
 UNFOILED. adj. Unfolded; not put to the work.
 The uterine powers thought themselves secure in the strength of an unfoiled army of sixty thousand men, and in a revenue proportionable. Temple.
 To UNFOIL. v. a.
 1. To expand; to spread; to open.
 I saw on him rising
 Out of the water, heav'n above the clouds
 Unfold her crystal doors; thence on his head
 A perfect dove descend. Paradise Regain'd.
 Invade his hissing throat, and winding spires,
 'Till stretch'd in length th' unfolding foe retires. Dryden.
 Ah, what avail!
 The vivid green his shining plumes unfold. Pope.
 Sloth unfolds her arms, and wakes;
 Lifting envy drops her snakes. Pope's St. Cecilia.
 2. To tell; to declare.
 What tidings with our cousin Buckingham?
 —Such as my heart doth tremble to unfold. Shakespeare.
 Unfold to me why you are heavy. Shakespeare.
 Unfold the passion of my love;
 Surprise her with discourse of my dear faith. Shakespeare.
 Helen, to you our minds we will unfold. Shakespeare.
 How comes it thus? Unfold, celestial guide! Milton.
 Things of deep sense we may in prose unfold;
 But they move more, in lofty numbers told. Roscommon.
 3. To discover; to reveal.
 Time shall unfold what plaited cunning hides,
 Who covers faults, at last with shame derides. Shakespeare.
 If the object be seen through two or more such convex or concave glasses, every glass shall make a new image, and the object shall appear in the place, and of the bigness of the last image; which consideration unfolds the theory of microscopes and telescopes. Newton's Opticks.
 4. To display; to set to view.
 We are the inhabitants of the earth, and endowed with understanding; doth it then properly belong to us, to examine and unfold the works of God? Burnet.
 UNFOLDING. adj. Directing to unfold.
 The unfolding star calls up the shepherd. Shakespeare.
 To UNFOOL. v. a. To restore from folly.
 Have you any way to unfool me again? Shakespeare.
 UNFORBID. adj. Not prohibited.
 UNFORBIDDEN. adj. Not prohibited.
 If unforbid thou may'st unfold
 What we, not to explore the secrets, ask
 Of his eternal empire. Milton's Par. Lost.
 These are the unforbidden trees; and here we may let loose the reins, and indulge our thoughts. Norris.
 A good man not only forbears those gratifications, which are forbidden by reason and religion, but even refrains himself in unforbidden instances. Atterbury.

UNF

UNFORBIDDENNESS. n. f. The state of being unforbidden.
 The bravery you are so severe to, is no where expressly prohibited in scripture; and this unforbiddenness they think sufficient to evince, that the sumptuousness you condemn is not in its own nature sinful. Boyle.
 UNFORCED. adj.
 1. Not compelled; not constrained.
 His gentle and unforc'd accord of Hamlet Sits smiling to my heart. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Unforc'd by punishment, unaw'd by fear;
 His words were simple, and his soul sincere. Dryden.
 2. Not impelled.
 No more can impure man retain and move
 In that pure region of a worthy love,
 Than earthly substance can, unforc'd, aspire,
 And leave his nature to converse with fire. Dante.
 3. Not feigned.
 Upon these tidings they broke forth into such unforced and unfeigned passions, as it plainly appeared that good-nature did work in them. Hayward.
 4. Not violent.
 Windfor the next above the valley swells
 Into my eye, and doth itself present
 With such an easy and unforc'd ascent,
 That no stupendous precipice denies Access, no horror turns away our eyes. Denham.
 5. Not contrary to sense.
 If one arm is stretched out, the body must be somewhat bow'd on the opposite side, in a situation which is unforc'd. Dryden.
 UNFORCIBLE. adj. Wanting strength.
 The same reason which causeth to yield that they are of some force in the one, will constrain to acknowledge, that they are not in the other altogether unforcible. Hooker.
 UNFOREBODING. adj. Giving no omens.
 Unnumbered birds glide through th' aerial way,
 Vagrants of air, and unforeboding stray. Pope's Odyssey.
 UNFOREKNOWN. adj. Not foreseen by preference.
 Which had no less prov'd certain, unforeknown. Milton.
 UNFORSEEN. adj. Circumcised.
 Won by a Philistine from the unforseen race. Milton.
 UNFORESEEN. adj. Not known before it happened.
Unforeseen, they say, is unprepared. Dryden.
 UNFORFEITED. adj. Not forfeited.
 This was the antient, and is yet the unforfeited glory of our religion. Rogers's Sermon.
 UNFORGOTTEN. adj. Not lost to memory.
 The thankful remembrance of so great a benefit received, shall for ever remain unforgotten. Kassler's Hist. of the Turks.
 UNFORGIVING. adj. Relentless; implacable.
 The fow with her broad snout for rooting up
 Th' intrusted seed, was judg'd to spoil the crop;
 The covetous churl, of unforgiving kind,
 Th' offender to the bloody priest resign'd. Dryden.
 UNFORMED. adj. Not modified into regular shape.
 All putrefaction being a dissolution of the first form, is a mere confusion, and unformed mixture of the parts. Bacon.
 The same boldness discovers itself in the several adventures he meets with during his passage through the regions of un- formed matter. Spektator, N<sup>o</sup>. 309.
 UNFORSAKEN. adj. Not deserted.
 They extend no farther to any sort of sins continued in or unforsaken, than as they are reconcilable with sincere endeavours to forsake them. Hammond's Fundamentals.
 UNFORTIFIED. adj.
 1. Not secured by walls or bulwarks.
 Their weak heads, like towns unfortify'd,
 'Twixt sense and nonsense daily change their side. Pope.
 2. Not strengthened; infirm; weak; feeble.
 It shews a will most incorrect to heav'n;
 A heart unfortify'd, a mind impatient;
 An understanding simple, and unchool'd. Shakespeare.
 3. Wanting securities.
 They will not restrain a secret mischief, which, considering the unfortify'd state of mankind, is a great defect. Collier.
 UNFORTUNATE. adj. Not successful; unprosperous; wanting luck; unhappy.
 All things religiously taken in hand, are prosperously ended;
 because whether men in the end have that which religion did allow to desire, or that which it teacheth them contentedly to suffer, they are in neither event unfortunate. Hooker.
 Whosoever will live altogether out of himself, and study other men's humours, shall never be unfortunate. Raleigh.
 Vindictive persons live the life of witches, who, as they are mischievous, end unfortunate. Bacon.
 He that would hunt a hare with an elephant, is not un- fortunate for missing the mark, but foolish for chusing such an unapt instrument. Taylor.
 The virgins shall on festival days
 Visit his tomb with flowers, only bewailing
 His lot unfortunate in nuptial choice,
 From whence captivity and loss of eyes. Milton's Agonistes.

UNFORTUNATELY. adv. Unhappily; without good luck.
 Unconsulting affection unfortunately born to mewards, made Zelmene borrow so much of her natural modesty, as to leave her more decent raiments. Sidney.
 Most of these artists unfortunately miscarry'd, by falling down and breaking their arms. Wilkins.
 She kept her countenance when the lid remov'd,
 Disclos'd the heart, unfortunately lov'd. Dryden.
 UNFORTUNATENESS. adj. [from unfortunate.] Ill luck. Not in use.
 O me, the only subject of the destinies displeasure, whose greatest fortunateness is more unfortunate, than my sister's greatest unfortunateness. Sidney.
 UNFOUGHT. adj. [un and fought.] Not fought.
 They used such diligence in taking the passages, that it was not possible they should escape unfought with. Krollen.
 UNFOUL'D. adj. Unpolluted; uncorrupted; not soiled.
 The humour and tunics are purely transparent, to let in light unfoul'd and unobscured by any inward tincture. Mare.
 UNFOU'ND. adj. Not found; not met with.
 Somewhat in her excelling all her kind,
 Excited a desire till then unknown;
 Somewhat unfound, or found in her alone. Dryden.
 UNFRA'GABLE. adj. Not to be moulded.
 The cause of their disposition for unframable unto societies, wherein they live, is for that they discern not aright what force these laws ought to have. Hooker.
 UNFRA'GED. adj. Not formed; not fashioned.
 A lifeless lump, unfashion'd and unfram'd,
 Of jarring seeds, and justly chaos nam'd. Dryden.
 UNFREQUENT. adj. Uncommon; not happening often.
 Part thereof is visible unto any situation; but being only discoverable in the night, and when the air is clear, it becomes unfrequent. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 To UNFREQUENT. v. a. To leave; to cease to frequent. A bad word.
 Glad to shun his hostile gripe,
 They quit their thefts, and unfrequent the fields. Philips.
 UNFREQUENTED. adj. Rarely visited; rarely entered.
 Many unfrequent plots there are,
 Fitted by kind for rape and villainy. Shakespeare.
 Retiring from the pop'lar noise, I seek
 This unfrequent place to find some ease. Milton.
 How well your cool and unfrequent shade
 Suits with the chaste retirements of a maid?
 Can he not pass an astronomick line,
 Nor farther yet in liquid æther roll,
 'Till he has gain'd some unfrequent place?
 With what caution does the hen provide herself a nest in places unfrequent, and free from noise. Addison.
 UNFREQUENTLY. adv. Not commonly.
 They, like Judas, desire death, and not unfrequently pursue it. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 UNFRIENDED. adj. Wanting friends; uncountenanced; unsupported.
 These parts to a stranger,
 Unguided and unfriended, often prove Rough and unhelpable. Shakespeare, Twelfth Night.
 Great acts require great means of enterprise;
 Thou art unknown, unfriended, low of birth. Milton.
 O God!
 Who me unfriended brought'st, by wondrous ways,
 The kingdom of my fathers to possess. Dryden.
 UNFRIENDLINESS. n. f. [from unfriendly.] Want of kindness; want of favour.
 You might be apt to look upon such disappointments as the effects of an unfriendliness in nature or fortune to your particular attempts. Boyle.
 UNFRIENDLY. adj. Not benevolent; not kind.
 What signifies an unfriendly parent or brother? 'Tis friendship only that is the cement which effectively combines mankind. Government of the Tongue.
 This fear is not that servile dread, which flies from God as an hostile, unfriendly being, delighting in the misery of his creatures. Rogers's Sermons.
 UNFROZEN. adj. Not congealed to ice.
 Though the more aqueous parts will, by the loss of their motion, be turned into ice, yet the more subtle parts remain unfrozen. Boyle.
 UNFRUITFUL. adj.
 1. Not prolific.
 Ah! hopeless, lasting flames! like those that burn
 To light the dead, and warm th' unfruitful urn. Pope.
 2. Not fructiferous.
 The naked rocks are not unfruitful there;
 Their barren tops with luscious food abound. Waller.

Her robe ungirt. Waller.

Mulciber assigns the proper place
For Carians, and th' ungirt Numidian race. Dryden.
UNGLO'RIED. adj. Not honoured; not exalted with praise and adoration.

Left God should be any way unglorified, the greatest part of our daily service consisteth, according to the blessed apostle's own precise rule, in much variety of palms and hymns; that out of so plentiful a treasure, there might be for every man's heart to chuse out for his own sacrifice. Hooker.

UNGLO'VED. adj. Having the hand naked.
When we were come near to his chair, he stood up, holding forth his hand ungloved, and in posture of blessing. Bacon.

UNG'VING. adj. Not bringing gifts.
In vain at shrines th' ungiving suppliant stands:
This 'tis to make a vow with empty hands. Dryden.

To UNG'VE. v. a. To loose any thing cemented.

His just, avenging ire,
Had driven out th' ungodly from his sight,
And the habitations of the just. Milton's Par. Lost.

The finner here intended is the ungodly finner: he who forgets or defies his God. Rogers.
2. Polluted by wickedness.

Let not the hours of this ungodly day
Wear out in peace. Shakespeare.

UNGOD'ED. adj. Unwounded; unhurt.
I stand aloof, and will no reconciliation;
'Till by some elder masters of known honour,
I have a voice and precedent of peace,
To keep my name ungod'd. Shakespeare. Hamlet.

UNGOD'GED. adj. Not filled; not fated.
The hell-hounds, as ungorged with flesh and blood, Pursue their prey. Dryden.

Oh ungor'd appetite! Oh ravenous thirst
Of a son's blood. Smith's Phœdra and Hippolytus.

UNGOVERNABLE. adj.
1. Not to be ruled; not to be restrained.
They'll judge every thing by models of their own; and thus are rendered unmanageable by any authority, and ungovernable by other laws, but those of the sword. Glanville.

2. Licentious; wild; unbridled.
So wild and ungovernable a poet, cannot be translated literally; his genius is too strong to bear a chain. Dryden.

He was free from any rough, ungovernable passions, which hurry men on to say and do very offensive things. Aiterbury.

UNGVERNED. adj.
1. Being without government.
The estate is yet ungovern'd. Shakespeare. Rich. III.

It pleaseth God above,
And all good men of this ungovern'd isle. Shakespeare.

Seek for him,
Left his ungovern'd rage dissolve the life
That wants the means to lead it. Shakespeare. K. Lear.

Themselves they vilify'd
To serve ungovern'd appetite. Milton's Par. Lost.

Nor what to bid, or what forbid, he knows;
Th' ungovern'd tempest to such fury grows.
From her own back the burthen would remove,
And lays the load on his ungovern'd love. Dryden.

UNG'OT. adj.
1. Not gained; not acquired.
He is as free from touch or foil with her,
As she from one ungot. Shakespeare. Measure for Measure.

His loins yet full of ungot princes; all
His glory in the bud. Waller.

UNGRA'CEFUL. adj. Wanting elegance; wanting beauty.
Raphael answer'd heav'n,
Nor are thy lips ungraceful, fire of men. Milton.

A solicitous watchfulness about one's behaviour, instead of being mended, it will be constrained, uneasy, and ungrace-ful. Locke.

He enjoyed the greatest strength of good sense, and the most exquisite taste of politeness. Without the first learning is but an incumbrance; and without the last is ungraceful. Addison.

UNGRA'CEFULNESS. n. f. Inelegance; awkwardness.
To attempt the putting another genius upon him, will be labour in vain; and what is so plaitered on, will have always hanging to it the ungracefulness of constraint. Locke.

UNGRA'CIOUS. adj.
1. Wicked; odious; hateful.
He, catching hold of her ungracious tongue,
Thereon an iron lock did fasten firm and strong. Spenser.

I'll in the mature time,
With this ungracious paper strike the fight.
Of the death-practis'd duke. Shakespeare. K. Lear.

Do not, as some ungracious pastors do,
Shew me the steep and thorny way to heav'n;
Whilft he, a puffed and reckless libertine,
Himself the primrose path of dalliance treads,
And reck's not his own rede. Shakespeare. Hamlet.

To the gods alone
Our future offspring, and our wives are known;
Th' audacious trumpet, and ungracious son. Dryden.

2. Offensive; unpleasing.
Show me no parts which are ungracious to the sight, as all pre-shortenings usually are. Dryden.

3. Unacceptable; not favoured.
They did not except against the persons of any, though several were most ungracious to them. Clarendon.

Anything of grace towards the Irish rebels, was as ungraceous at Oxford, as at London. Clarendon.

Neither is it rare to observe among excellent and learned divines, a certain ungracious manner, or an unhappy tone of voice, which they never have been able to shake off. Swift.

UNGRA'NTED. adj. Not given; not yielded; not bestowed.
This only from your goodness let me gain,
And this ungranted, all rewards are vain. Dryden.

1. Making no returns, or making ill returns for kindness.
No person is remarkably ungrateful, who was not also insufferably proud. South.

2. Making no returns for culture.
Most when driv'n by winds, the flaming storm
Of the long files destroys the beauteous form;
Nor will the wither'd stock be green again;
But the wild olive shoots, and shades th' ungrateful plain. Dryden.

3. Unpleasing; unacceptable.
It cannot be ungrateful, or without some pleasure to posterity, to see the most exact relation of an action so full of danger. Clarendon.

What is in itself harsh and ungrateful, must make harsh and ungrateful impressions upon us. Aiterbury.

UNGRA'TEFULLY. adv.
1. With ingratitude.
When call'd to distant war,
His vanquish'd heart remain'd a victim here:
Orian's eyes that glorious conquest made;
Nor was his love ungratefully repaid. Glanville.

We often receive the benefit of our prayers, when yet we ungratefully charge heaven with denying our petitions. Wake.

2. Unacceptably; unpleasing.
UNGRA'TEFULNESS. n. f.

1. Ingratitude; ill return for good.
Can I, without the detestable stain of ungratefulness, abstain from loving him, who, far exceeding the beautifulness of his shape with the beautifulness of his mind, is content so to abate himself as to become Dametas's servant for my sake. Sidney.

2. Unacceptableness; unpleasing quality.
UNGRA'VELY. adv. Without seriousness.

His present portance
Gibingly, and ungravelly, he did fashion. Shakespeare.

UNGRO'UNDED. adj. Having no foundation.
Ignorance, with an indifference for truth, is nearer to it than opinion with ungrounded inclination, which is the great source of error. Locke.

This is a confidence the most ungrounded and irrational.
For upon what ground can a man promise himself a future repentance, who cannot promise himself a futurity? South.

UNGRO'DINGLY. adv. Without ill will; willingly; heartily; cheerfully.

If, when all his art and time is spent,
He lay 'twill ne'er be found, yet be content;
Receive from him the doom ungrudgingly,
Because he is the mouth of destiny. Donne.

UNGUA'RD. adj.

1. Undefended.
Proud art thou met? Thy hope was to have reach'd
The throne of God unguarded, and his side Abandon'd. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi. l. 133.

All through th' unguarded gates with joy resort,
To see the slighted camp, the vacant port. Denham.

No door there was th' unguarded house to keep,
On creaking hinges turn'd, to break his sleep. Dryden.

2. Careless; negligent.
All the evils that proceed from an untied tongue, and an unguarded, unlimited will, we put upon the accounts of drunkenness. Taylor.

The spy, which does this treasure keep,
Does the ne'er say her prayers, nor sleep?
Or have not gold and flattery pow'r,
To purchase one unguarded hour? Prior.

With an unguarded look the now devour'd
My nearer face; and now recall'd her eye,
And heav'd, and strove to hide a sudden sigh. Prior.

It was intended only to divert a few young ladies, of good sense and good humour enough to laugh not only at their sex's little unguarded follies, but at their own. Pope.

Are we not encompassed by multitudes, who watch every careless word, every unguarded action of our lives? Rogers.

UNGU'RD. adj. Not directed; not regulated.
The blood weeps from my heart, when I do shape,
In forms imaginary, th' unguided days,
And rotten times that you shall look upon,
When I am sleeping with my ancestors. Shakespeare.

Can unguided matter keep itself to such exact conformi-ties, as not in the least spot to vary from the species? Glanville.

They resolve all into the accidental, unguided motions of blind matter. Locke.

Nature, void of choice,
Does by unguided motion things produce,
Regardless of their order. Blackmore on the Creation.

UNGUENT. n. f. [unguentum, Lat.] Ointment.
Pre-occupation of mind ever requirerh preface of speech, like a fomentation to make the unguent enter. Bacon.

There is an intercourse between the magnetick unguent and the vulnerated body. Glanville.

With unguents smooth, the lucid marble shone.
UNGU'ESSED. adj. Not attained by conjecture.

He me sent, for cause to me unguess'd. Fairy Queen.

UNGHA'BITABLE. adj. [inhabitable, Fr. inhabitable, Lat.] Not capable to support inhabitants; uninhabitable.

The night and day was always a natural day of twenty-four hours, in all places remote from the unhabitable poles of the world, and winter and summer always measured a year. Holder.

Though the course of the sun be curbed between the tropicks, yet are not those parts directly subject to his perpendicular beams, unhabitable, or extremely hot. Ray.

UNGHA'CKED. adj. Not cut; not hewn; not notched with cuts.

With a blessed, and unwe'd retire,
With unhack'd swords, and helmets all unbruise'd,
We will bear home that lusty blood again. Shakespeare.

Part with unhack'd edges, and bear back
Our targe undented. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.

To UNGHA'LOW. v. a. To deprive of holiness; to profane; to defecate.

Perhaps the fact
Is not so heinous now, foretasted fruit;
Profan'd first by the serpent; by him first Made common, and unhallow'd, ere our taste. Milton.

The vanity unhallow'd the virtue. L'Estrange.

This one use left such an indelible sacredness upon them, that the impiety of the design could be no sufficient reason to unhallow and degrade them to common use. South.

UNGHA'LOWED. adj. Unholy; profane.
Thy curish spirit
Govern'd a wolf, who hang'd for human slaughter:
Ev'n from the gallows did his fell soul fleet;
And while thou lay'st in thy unhallow'd dam Infus'd itself in thee. Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.

I had not unlock'd my lips
In this unhallow'd air, but that this jugler
Would think to charm my judgment, as mine eyes,
Obtruding false rules, pranck'd in reason's garb. Milton.

Nor shall presume to violate these bands,
Or touch thy person with unhallow'd hands. Dryden.

Here cease thy flight, nor with unhallow'd lays Touch the fair fame of Albion's golden days. Pope.

To UNGHA'ND. v. a. To loose from the hand.
Still am I call'd. Unhand me, gentlemen. Shakespeare.

Unhand me, traitors. Denham's Sephy.

UNHANDSOME. n. f.
1. Ungraceful; not beautiful.
I was glad I had done so good a deed for a gentlewoman not unhandsome, whom before I had in like sort helped. Sidney.

She that so far the rest out-shin'd;
Silvia the fair, while she was kind,
Seems only not unhandsome now. Waller.

As I cannot admit that there is any thing unhandsome or irregular; so much less can I grant that there is any thing in-commodious in the globe. Woodward.

2. Illiberal; dissingenuous.
UNHANDSOMELY. adv. [from unhandsome.]

1. Inelegantly; ungracefully.
The ruined churches are so unhandsomely patched and thatched, that men do, even shun the places for the uncomeliness thereof. Spenser.

2. Dissingenuously; illiberally.
He raves, Sir, and to cover my disdain,
Unhandsomely would his denial feign. Dryden.

UNHANDSOMENESS. n. f. [from unhandsome.]

1. Want of beauty.
The sweetness of her countenance did give such a grace to what she did, that it did make handsome the unhandsomeness of it; and make the eye force the mind to believe, that there was a praise in that unkindness. Sidney, b. ii.

2. Want of elegance.
Be not troublesome to thyself, or to others, by unhandsomeness or uncleanness. Taylor.

3. Illiberalness; dissingenuity.

UNHA'P. n. f. Misluck; ill fortune.
She visited that place, where first she was so happy as to see the cause of her unhap. Sidney.

UNHA'PIED. [This word seems a participle from unhappy, which yet is never used as a verb.] Made unhappy.
You have mislead a prince,

A happy gentleman in blood and lineament,
By you unhappied, and disfigur'd clean. Shakespeare.

UNHA'PILY. adv. [from unhappy.] Miserably; unfortunately;
wretchedly; calamitously.

You hold a fair assembly: you do well, lord:
You are a churchman, or I'll tell you, cardinal,
I should judge now most unhappily. Shakespeare.

He was unhappily too much used as a check upon the lord
Coventry. Clarendon.

I unweeting have offended,
Unhappily deceiv'd! Milton's Par. Lost.

There is a day a coming, when all these witty fools shall be unhappily undeceived. Tillotson's Sermons.

UNHA'PPINESS. n. f.
1. Misery; infelicity.

If ever he have child, abortive be it,
Prodigious, and untimely brought to light,
And that be heir to his unhappiness. Shakespeare.

The real foundation of our unhappiness would be laid in our reason, and we should be more miserable than the beasts, by how much we have a quicker apprehension. Tillotson.

It is our great unhappiness, when any calamities fall upon us, that we are uneasy, and dissatisfied. Wake.

2. Calamity; distress.
She hath often dream'd of unhappiness, and wak'd herself with laughing. Shakespeare. Much Ado about Nothing.

3. Misfortune; ill luck.
St. Austin hath laid down a rule to this purpose, though he had the unhappiness not to follow it always himself. Burnet.

UNHA'PPY. adj. Wretched; miserable; unfortunate; calamitous; distressed.

Desire of wand'ring this unhappy morn.
You know not, while you here attend,
Th' unworthy fate of your unhappy friend:
Breathless he lies, and his unbury'd ghost
Depriv'd of funeral rites. Dryden.

To UNGHA'BOUR. v. a. To drive from shelter.
UNGHA'BOURED. adj. Affording no shelter.

'Tis chastity:
She that has that is clad in complete steel;
And, like a quiver'd nymph, with arrows keen,
May trace huge forests, and unhallow'd heaths,
Infamous hills, and sandy perilous wilds. Milton.

UNGHA'DENED. adj. Not confirmed; not made hard.
Messengers
Of strong prevailment in unharden'd youth. Shakespeare.

UNGHA'RDY. adj. Feeble; tender; timorous.
The wisest, unexperienc'd, will be ever
Tim'rous and loth, with novice modesty;
Irresolute, unhardy, undaunt'rous. Milton.

UNHARMED. adj. Not adventured; not put in danger.
Here I shoud still enjoy thee day and night
Whole to myself, unharm'd abroad,
Fearless at home. Milton's Agonistes, l. 807.
UNHATCHED. adj.
1. Not disclosed from the eggs.
2. Not brought to light.
Some unhatch'd practice
Hath puddled his clear spirit. Shakespeare.
UNHEALTHFUL. adj. Morbid; unwholesome.
The diseases which make years unhealthy, are spotted fevers; and the unhealthy season is the autumn. Graunt.
At every sentence set his life at stake,
Though the discourse were of no weightier things,
Than sultry fummers, or unhealthy springs. Dryden.
UNHEALTHY. adj. Sickly; wanting health.
No body would have a child cram'd at breakfast, who would not have him dull and unhealthy. Locke on Education.
He, intent on somewhat that may ease
Unhealthy mortals, and with curious search Examines all the properties of herbs. Philips.
TO UNHEART. v. a. To discourage; to depreess.
To bite his lip,
And hum at good Cominius, much unhearts me. Shakesp.
UNHEARD. adj.
1. Not perceived by the ear.
For the noise of drums and timbrels loud,
Their childrens cries unheard. Milton's Par. Lost.

UNBODS'ELLED. adj. Having not the sacrament.
Thus was I sleeping, by a brother's hand,
Of life, of crown, of queen at once dispatch'd;
Cut off even in the blossoms of my fin,
Unbode'd, unanointed, unanell'd. Shakesp. Hamlet.
UNBODS'ELLED. adj. Not humbled; not touched with shame or confusion.
Should I of these the liberty regard,
Who, freed as to their ancient patrimony,
Unboded, unrepented, unreformed,
Headlong would follow. Milton's Par. Regain'd.
UNBODRT. adj. Free from harm.
Of fifteen hundred, eight hundred were slain in the field;
and of the remaining seven hundred, two men only came off
unbort. Bacon's War with Spain.
I tread more lightly on the ground;
My nimble feet from unbort flow's rebound;
I walk in air. Dryden's State of Innocence.
Supported by thy care,
Through burning climes I pass'd unbort,
And breath'd in tainted air. Addison's Spectator.
The stars shall fade away;
But thou shalt flourish in immortal youth,
Unbort, amidst the war of elements,
The wrecks of matter, and the crush of worlds. Addison.
UNBORTFUL. adj. Innoxious; harmless; doing no harm.
You hope the duke will return no more, or
You imagine me too unbortful an opposit. Shakespeare.
Flames unbortful, hovering, dance in air. Blackmore.
UNBORTFULLY. adv. Without harm; innocently.
We laugh at others as innocently and as unbortfully, as at ourselves. Pope to Swift.
UNBORN. n. f. [unbornis, unus and cornu, Lat.]
1. A beast, whether real or fabulous, that has only one horn.
Went thou the unicorn, pride and wrath would confound thee. Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.
Unicorn may be betray'd with trees,
Bears with glasses, men with flatterers. Shakespeare.
Nature in conigerous animals hath placed the horns inverted upwards, as in the rhinoceros, Indian ass, and unicorn beetles. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
It is not of consequence, that because Diocorides hath made no mention of unicorns horn, there is therefore no such thing in nature. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Some unicorns we will allow even among insects, as those naïssimous beetles described by Muffetus. Brown.
Will the fierce unicorn thy voice obey,
Stand at the crib, and feed upon the hay? Sandys.
2. A bird.
Of the unicorn bird, the principal marks are these; headed and footed like the dunghill cock, tailed like a goose, horned on his forehead, with some likeness, as the unicorn is pictured;
spur'd on his wings, bigger than a swan. Grew.
UNIFORM. adj. [unus and forma.]
1. Keeping its tenour; similar to itself.
Though when confusedly mingled, as in this stratum, it may put on a face never so uniform and alike, yet it is in reality very different. Woodward.
2. Conforming to one rule; acting in the same manner; agreeing with each other.
The only doubt is about the manner of their unity, how far churches are bound to be uniform in their ceremonies, and what way they ought to take for that purpose. Hooker.
Creatures of what condition soever, though each in different manner, yet all with uniform consent, admire her, as the mother of their peace and joy. Hooker.
Numbers, being neither uniform in their designs, nor direct in their views, neither could manage nor maintain the power they got. Swift.
UNIFORMITY. n. f. [uniformitè, Fr.]
1. Resemblance to itself; even tenour.
There is no uniformity in the design of Spenser; he aims at the accomplishment of no one action. Dryden.

UNI

Queen Elizabeth was remarkable for that steadiness and uniformity which ran through all her actions. Addison.
2. Conformity to one pattern; resemblance of one to another.
The unity of that visible body and church of Christ, con-sisteth in that uniformity, which all the several persons there-unto belonging have, by reason of that one Lord, whose servants they all profess themselves; that one faith which they all acknowledge; that one baptism wherewith they are all initiated. Hooker, b. iii.
UNIFORMLY. adv. [from uniform.]
1. Without variation; in an even tenour.
That faith received from the apostles, the church, though dispersed throughout the world, doth notwithstanding keep as safe, as if it dwelt within the walls of some one house, and as uniformly hold, as if it had but one only heart and soul. Hooker, b. v.
The capillamenta of the nerves are each of them solid and uniform; and the vibrating motion of the aethereal medium may be propagated along them from one end to the other uniformly, and without interruption. Newton's Opticks.
2. Without diversity of one from another.
UNIMAGINABLE. adj. Not to be imagined by the fancy;
not to be conceived.
Things to their thought
So unimaginable, as hate in heav'n. Milton's Par. Lost.
The skilful organist plies his grave-fancied decant in lofty fugues, or the whole symphony, with artful and unimaginable touches, adorns and graces the well-studied chords of some choice composer. Milton on Education.
An infinite succession of the generations of men, without any permanent foundation, is utterly unimaginable. Tilleyson.
UNIMAGINABLY. adv. To a degree not to be imagined.
Little commissures, where they adhere, may not be porous enough to be pervious to the unimaginably subtle corpuscles, that make up the beams of light. Boyle.
UNIMITABLE. adj. [inimitabilis, Fr. inimitabilis, Lat.] Not to be imitated.
Both these are unimitable. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
UNIMORTAL. adj. Not immortal; mortal.
They betook them several ways,
Both to destroy, or unimmortal make
All kinds. Milton.
UNIMPAIRABLE. adv. Not liable to waste or diminution.
If the superior be unimpairable, it is a strong presumption, that the inferiors are likewise unimpaired. Hakewill.
UNIMPAIRED. adj. Not diminished; not worn out.
Yet unimpair'd with labours, or with time,
Your age but seems to a new youth to climb. Dryden.
If our silver and gold diminishes, our publick credit continues unimpaired. Addison on the State of the War.
UNIMPROVED. adj. Not solicited.
If answerable stile I can obtain
Of my celestial patroness, who deigns
Her nightly visitation unimpro'd. Milton's Par. Lost.
UNIMPROV'NT. adj. Assuming no airs of dignity.
A free, unimpro'nt, natural, easy manner; diverting others just as we diverted ourselves. Pope to Swift.
UNIMPROV'NT. adj. Net solicited; not teased to compliance.
Who ever ran
To danger unimpro'nt, he was then
No better than a sanguine, virtuous man. Denne.
UNIMPROVABLE. adj. Incapable of melioration.
UNIMPROVABLENESS. n. f. [from unimprovable.] Quality of not being improvable.
This must be imputed to their ignorance and unimprovable-
ness in knowledge, being generally without literature. Ham.
UNIMPROVED. adj.
1. Not made more knowing.
Not a mask went unimpro'd away. Pope.
2. Not taught; not meliorated by instruction.
Young Fortinbras,
Of unimproved mettle hot and full. Shakespeare. Hamlet.
Shallow, unimproved intellects, are confident pretenders to certainty. Granville.
UNINCREASABLE. adj. Admitting no increase.
That love, which ought to be appropriated to God, results chiefly from an altogether, or almost unincreasable elevation and vastness of affection. Boyle.
UNINDIFFERENT. adj. Partial; leaning to a side.
His opinion touching the catholic church was as unindiffe- rent, as, touching our church, the opinion of them that favour this pretended reformation is. Hooker, b. iv.
UNINDUSTRIOUS. adj. Not diligent; not laborious.
Pride we cannot think to fluggish or unindustrious an agent, as not to find out expedients for its purpose. Decay of Picty.
UNINFLAMMABLE. adj. Not capable of being set on fire.
The uninflammable spirit of such concretcs, may be pretended to be but a mixture of phlegm and salt. Boyle.
UNINFLAMMED. adj. Not set on fire.
When weak bodies come to be inflamed, they gather a much greater heat than others have uninflamed. Bacon.

Did men know how to distinguish between reports and certainties, this stratagem would be as unskillful, as it is uningenous. *Decay of Piety.*UNINHABITABLE, adj. Unfit to be inhabited.

If there be any place upon earth of that nature that paradise had, the same must be found within that supposed un-inhabitable burnt zone, or within the tropics. Raleigh.

Had not the deep been form'd, that might contain

All the collected treasures of the main;

The earth had still o'erwhelm'd with water flood,

To man an uninhabitable flood. *Blackmore.*UNINHABITABLENESS, n. f. Incapacity of being inhabited.Divers radicated opinions, such as that of the uninhabitable-

ness of the torrid zone, of the solidity of the celestial part of the world, are generally grown out of request. *Boyle.*UNINHABITED, adj. Having no dwellers.The whole island is now uninhabited. Sandys.Uninhabited, until'd, unfownIt lies, and breeds the bleating goat alone. Pope.

I cast anchor on the lee-side of the island, which seemed to be uninhabited. *Gulliver's Travels.*UNINJURED, adj. Unhurt; suffering no harm.You may as well spread out the uninjur'd heaps

Of misers treasure by an outlaw's den,

And tell me it is safe; as bid me hope

Danger will let a helpless maiden pass,

Uninjur'd in this wild, surrounding waste. Milton.

Then in full age, and hoary holiness

Retire, great teacher! to thy promis'd bliss:

Untouch'd thy tomb, uninjur'd be thy dust,As thy own fame among the future just. *Prior.*UNINSCRIPTION, adj. Having no inscription.

My pastoral muse her humble tribute brings,

And yet not wholly uninspir'd she sings. *Dryden.*UNINSTRUCTED, adj. Not taught; not helped by institution.

That fool intrudes, raw in this great affair,

And uninstructed how to stem the tide. Dryden.

It is a prejudice to none but widows and orphans, and others uninstructed in the arts and management of moreskillful men. Locke.

It is an unspeakable blessing to be born in those parts where wisdom flourishes; though there are even in these parts, several poor, uninstructed persons. Addison.

Though we find few amongst us, who profess themselves

Anthropomorphites, yet we may find, amongst the ignorant and uninstructed christians, many of that opinion. *Locke.*UNINSTRUCTIVE, adj. Not conferring any improvement.

Were not men of abilities thus communicative, their wisdom would be in a great measure useless, and their experience uninstructive. *Addison.*UNINTELLIGENT, adj. Not knowing; not skilful; not having any consciousness.

We will give you sleepy drinks, that your senses may be unintelligent of our insufficiency. Shakespeare's Winter Tale.

The visible creation is far otherwise apprehended by the philosophical enquirer, than the unintelligent vulgar. Glanville.

This conclusion, if men allow'd of, they would not destroy ill-formed productions. Ay, but these monsters. Let them be so; what will your drivelling, unintelligent, untract-able changeling be? Locke.

Why then to works of nature is assign'd

An author unintelligent and blind;When others proceed from choice? *Blackmore.*The obvious products of unintelligent nature. *Bentl.*UNINTELLIGIBILITY, n. f. Quality of not being intelligible.Credit the unintelligibility of this union and monon. *Glanville.*If we have truly proved the unintelligibility of it in all otherways, this argumentation is undeniable. *Burnet.*UNINTELLIGIBLE, adj. [unintelligible, Fr.] Not such as can be understood.

The Latin, three hundred years before Tully, was as un-intelligible in his time, as the English and French of the sameperiod are now. Swift.

Did Thetis

These arms thus labour'd for her son prepare;

For that dull soul to stare with stupid eyes,

On the learn'd unintelligible prize! Dryden.

2. Concord; conjunction of mind or interests.

The experience of those profitable emanations from God, most commonly are the first motive of our love; but when we once have tasted his goodness, we love the spring for its own excellency, passing from considering ourselves, to an

union with God. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

3. A pearl. Not in use.

The king shall drink to Hamlet's better breath;

And in the cup an union shall he throw,

Richer than that which four successive kings

In Denmark's crown have worn. *Shakespeare's Hamlet.*4. [In law.] Union is a combining or consolidation of two churches in one, which is done by the consent of the bishop, the patron, and incumbent. And this is properly called an union; but there are two other sorts, as when one church is made subject to the other, and when one man is made prelate of both,

and when a conventual is made cathedral. Touching union in the first signification, there was a statute, an. 37 Hen.

VIII. chap. 21. that it should be lawful in two churches, whereof the value of the one is not above six pounds in the king's books, of the first fruits, and not above one mile distant from the other. Union in this signification is perpetual, and that is for the life of the incumbent; or real, that is, perpetual, who ever is incumbent. *Caval.*UNIFORM, adj. [unus and paria, Lat.] Bringing one at a birth.

Others make good the paucity of their breed with the du-

His unkindness, that in all reason should have quench'd her love, hath, like an impediment in the current, made it more violent and unruly. Shakesp. Measure for Measure.

After their return, the duke executed the same authority in conferring all favours, and in revenging himself upon those who had manifested any unkindness towards him. Clarendon.

Eve--As one who loves, and some unkindness meets,
With sweet, austere composure, thus reply'd. Milton.

Christ, who was the only person to have retained this unkindness, finds an extenuation of it. South's Sermons.

She sigh'd, the wept, the low'd; 'twas all the could;
And with unkindness seem'd to tax the God. Dryden.

To UNKING. v. a. To deprive of royalty.

God gave king Henry, unking'd Richard says,
And send him many years of sunshine days.
It takes the force of law: how then, my lord!
If as they would unking my father now,
To make you way. Southern.

UNKISS'D. adj. Not kiss'd.

Foul words are but foul wind, and foul wind is but foul breath, and foul breath is noisome; therefore I will depart unkiss'd. Shakesp. Much Ado about Nothing.

UNKNIGHTLY. adj. Unbecoming a knight.

With six hours hard riding through wild places, I overgot them a little before night, near an old ill-favoured castle, the place where I perceived they meant to perform their unknightly errand. Sidney, b. ii.

To UNKNIT. v. a.

1. To unweave; to separate.

Would he had continued to his country
As he began, and not unknit himself
The noble knot he made. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

2. To open.

Unknit that threat'ning, unknit brow,
And dart not scornful glances from those eyes. Shakesp.

UNKLE. v. a. [uncle, French.] The brother of a father or mother. See UNCLE.

The English power is near, led on by Malcolm,
His uncle Siward, and the good Macduff. Shakesp.

Give me good fame, ye pow'rs! and make me just:
Thus much the rogue to publick ears will trust:
In private then--when wilt thou, mighty Jove!
My wealthy uncle from this world remove? Dryden.

To UNKNOW. v. a. To cease to know.

It's already known;
Oh! can you keep it from yourselves, unknow it? Smith.

UNKNOWABLE. adj. Not to be known.

Distinguish well between knowables and unknowables. Watts.

UNKNOWING. adj.

1. Ignorant; not knowing.

Let me speak to th' yet unknowing world,
How these things came about. Shakesp. Hamlet.

Though unknowing persons may accuse others, yet can they never the more absolve themselves. Decay of Piety.

Unknowing I prepar'd thy bridal bed;
With empty hopes of happy issue fed. Dryden.

Unknowing he requires it; and when known,
He thinks it his; and values it, 'tis gone. Dryden.

His hounds, unknowing of his change, pursue
The chase, and their mistaken master flew. Dryden.

Proteus, mounting from the hoary deep,
Surveys his charge, unknowing of deceit. Pope.

2. Not practised; not qualified.

So Libyan huntmen, on some sandy plain,
From shady coverts rous'd, the lion chase:
The kingly beast roars out with loud disdain,
And slowly moves, unknowing the furies steel'd,
These were they, whose souls the furies steel'd,
And curs'd, with hearts unknowing how to yield. Pope.

UNKNOWINGLY. adv. Ignorantly; without knowledge.

The beauty I behold has struck me dead:
Unknowingly the strikes, and kills by chance. Dryden.

They are like the Syrians, who were first smitten with blindness, and unknowingly led out of their way, into the capital of their enemy's country. Addison's Freibolder.

UNKNO'WN. adj.

1. Not known.

'Tis not unknow'n to you,
How much I have disabled my estate.
Many are the trees of God, that grow
In paradise, and various, yet unknow'n. Shakesp.

To us. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Here may I always on this downy grass,
Unknow'n, unseen, my easy minutes pass. Rowe.

If any chance has hither brought the name
Of Palamedes, not unknow'n to fame,
Accus'd and sentenc'd for pretended crimes. Dryden.

Though incest is indeed a deadly crime,
You are not guilty, since unknow'n 'twas done,
And known, had been abhor'd. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

At fear of death, that saddens all
With terrors round, can reason hold her throne?
Despite the known, nor tremble at th' unknow'n. Pope.

2. Greater than is imagined.

The planting of hemp and flax would be an unknow'n advantage to the kingdom. Bacon.

3. Not having cohabitation.

I am yet
Unknow'n to woman; never was forsworn. Shakesp.

4. Without communication.

We stopp'd at a little inn, where the man of the house, formerly a servant in the knight's family, to do honour to his old master, had, unknow'n to Sir Roger, put him up in a sign-post. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 122.

UNLABOUR'D. adj.

1. Not produced by labour.

Unlabour'd harvests shall the fields adorn,
And cluster'd grapes shall blush on ev'ry thorn. Dryden.

2. Not cultivated by labour.

Not eastern monarchs on their nuptial day,
In dazzling gold and purple thine to gay,
As the bright natives of th' unlabour'd field,
Unvers'd in spinning, and in looms unskill'd. Blackmore.

3. Spontaneous; voluntary.

Their charms, if charms they have, the truth supplies,
And from the theme unlabour'd beauties rise. Tickell.

To UNLACE. v. a.

1. To loose any thing fastened with strings.

He could not endure so cruel caresses,
But thought his arms to leave, and helmet to unlace. Spenser.

A little river roll'd,
By which there sat a knight with helm unlaced,
Himself refreshing with the liquid cold. Fairy Queen, b. i.

The helmet from my brow unlaced. Pope's Odyssey.

2. To loose a lady's dress.

Can I forget, when they in prison placing her,
With swelling heart, in spite, and due disdainfulness,
She lay for dead, till I help'd with unlacing her. Sidney.

Unlace yourself, for that harmonious chime
Tells me from you that now it is bed-time. Donne.

3. To make loose; to put in danger of being lost. Not in use.

You unlace your reputation,
And spend your rich opinion for the name of a night-brawler. Shakesp.

To UNLACE. v. a.

1. To remove from the vessel which carries.

He's a foolish seaman,
That, when his ship is sinking, will not
Unlace his hopes into another bottom. Denham.

2. To exonerate that which carries.

The vent'rous merchant, who design'd for far,
And touches on our hospitable shores,
Charm'd with the splendour of this northern star,
Shall here unlace him, and depart no more. Dryden.

3. To put out. Ufed of a vessel.

We landed at Tyre; for there the ship was to unlace her burden. Acts xxi. 3.

UNLAC'D. adj.

1. Not placed; not fixed.

Whatever we do behold now in this present world, it was unwrapped within the bowels of divine mercy, written in the book of eternal wisdom, and held in the hands of omnipotent power, the first foundations of the world being as yet unlaced. Hooker, b. v.

2. Not pacified; not stilled.

No evil thing that walks by night,
Blue, meagre hag, or stubborn unlaced ghost,
Hath hurtful pow'r o'er true virginity. Milton.

UNLAMENTED. adj. Not deplored.

After six years spent in outward opulency, and inward murmur that it was not greater, he died unlamented by any. Clarendon.

Thus unlamented pass the proud away,
The pride of fools, and pageant of a day. Pope.

UNL

To UNLATCH. v. a. To open by lifting up the latch.

My worthy wife
The door unlatch'd; and, with repeated calls,
Invites her former lord within my walls. Dryden.

UNLAWFUL. adj. Contrary to law; not permitted by the law.

Before I be convict by course of law,
To threaten me with death is most unlawful. Shakesp.

It is an unlawful thing for a Jew to come unto one of another nation. Acts x. 28.

Shew me when it is our duty, and when unlawful to take these courses, by some general rule of a perpetual, never-failing truth. South.

The secret ceremonies I conceal;
Uncouth, perhaps, unlawful to reveal. Dryden.

UNLAWFULLY. adv.

1. In a manner contrary to law or right.

He that gains all that he can lawfully this year, next year will be tempted to gain something unlawfully. Taylor.

2. Illegitimately; not by marriage.

I had rather my brother die by the law, than my son should be unlawfully born. Shakesp.

Give me your opinion, what part I, being unlawfully born, may claim of the man's affection; who begot me. Addison.

UNLAWFULNESS. n. s. Contrariety to law; state of being not permitted.

If those alledged testimonies of scripture did indeed concern the matter to such effect as was pretended, that which they should infer were unlawfulness. Hooker.

The original reason of the unlawfulness of lying is, that it carries with it an act of injustice, and a violation of the right of him, to whom we were obliged to signify our minds. South's Sermons.

To UNLEARN. v. a. To forget, or disuse what has been learned.

Antisthenes, being asked of one, what learning was most necessary for man's life? answered, to unlearn that which is naught. Bacon.

This were to imply, that all books in being should be destroyed; and that all the age should take new pains to unlearn those habits which have cost them so much labour. Holder.

The government of the tongue is a piece of morality which sober nature dictates, which yet our greatest scholars have unlearn'd. Decay of Piety.

Some cyders have by art, or age, unlearn'd
Their genuine relish, and of sundry wines
Affum'd the flavour. Philips.

What they thus learned from him in one way, they did not unlearn again in another. Atterbury.

A wicked man is not only obliged to learn to do well, but unlearn his former life. Rogers's Sermons.

UNLEARNED. adj.

1. Ignorant; not informed; not instructed.

This selected piece, which you translate,
Foretells your studies may communicate;
From darker dialect of a strange land,
Wisdom that here th' unlearn'd shall understand. D'avenant.

And by succession of unlearned times,
As bards began, so monks rung on the chimes. Rowe.

Some at the bar, with subtilty defend
The cause of an unlearn'd, noble friend. Dryden.

Though unlearned men well enough understood the words white and black, yet there were philosophers found, who had subtilty enough to prove that white was black. Locke.

2. Not gained by study; not known.

Mere words, or such things chiefly as were better unlearned. Milton on Education.

3. Not suitable to a learned man.

I will prove those verses to be very unlearned, neither favouring of poetry, wit, or invention. Shakesp.

UNLEARNEDLY. adv. Ignorantly; grossly.

He, in his epistle, plainly affirmeth, they think unlearnedly, who are of another belief. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

UNLEAVENED. adj. Not fermented; not mixed with fermenting matter.

They baked unleavened cakes of the dough, for it was not leavened. Exod. ii. 39.

Purge out therefore the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, as ye are unleavened. 1 Cor. v. 7.

UNLEISUREDNESS. n. s. Business; want of time; want of leisure. Not in use.

My essay touching the scripture having been written partly in England, partly in another kingdom, it were strange if there did not appear much unevenness, and if it did not betray the unleisuredness of the wandering author. Boyle.

UNLESS. conjunct. Except; if not; supposing that not.

Let us not say, we keep the commandments of the one, when we break the commandments of the other: for, unless we observe both, we obey neither. Hooker.

Unless I look on Sylvia in the day,
There is no day for me to look upon. Shakesp.

What

U N L

What hidden strength,
Unless the strength of heav'n, if you mean that. Milton.
 For sure I am, unless I win in arms,
 To stand excluded from Emilia's charms;
 Nor can my strength avail, unless by thee,
 Endu'd with force, I gain the victory. Dryden.
 The commendation of adversaries is the greatest triumph of a writer, because it never comes unless extorted. Dryden.
 No poet ever sweetly sung,
Unless he were, like Phœbus, young;
 Nor ever nymph inspir'd to rhyme,
Unless, like Venus, in her prime. Swift.
UNLESSONED, adj. Not taught.
 The full fun of me
 Is an unlesson'd girl, unchool'd, unpractis'd;
 Happy in this, she is not yet so old
 But she may learn. Shakespeare.
UNLETTERED, adj. Unlearned; untaught.
 When the apostles of our Lord were ordained to alter the laws of heathenish religion, St. Paul excepted, the rest were unlettered and unlettered men. Hooker, b. iv.
 Such as the jocund flute, or gamefome pipe
 Stirs up among the loose, unletter'd hinds,
 Who thank the gods amifs. Milton.
UNLEVELED, adj. Not cut even.
 Plods on to heav'n, and ne'er is at a loss. Dryden.
UNLIBIDINOUS, adj. Not lustful.
 In those hearts
 Love unlibidinous reign'd; nor jealousy
 Was understood, the injur'd lover's hell. Milton.
UNLICENSED, adj. Having no regular permission.
 Ask what boldness brought him hither
Unlicensed. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iv.
 Warn the thoughtless, self-confiding train,
 No more, unlicensed, thus to brave the main. Pope.
UNLICKED, adj. Shapeless; not formed: from the opinion that the bear licks her young to shape.
 Shape my legs of an unequal size,
 To disproportion me in every part,
 Like to a chaos, or unlick'd bear-whelp. Shakespeare.
 Those unlick'd bear-whelps. Donne.
 The bloody bear, an independent beast,
Unlick'd to form, in groans her hate exprest. Dryden.
UNLIGHTED, adj. Not kindled; not set on fire.
 There lay a log unlighted on the earth:
 For th' unborn chief the fatal fifters came,
 And rais'd it up, and tofs'd it on the flame. Dryden.
 The sacred wood, which on the altar lays,
 Untouch'd, unlighted glows. Prior.
UNLIGHTSOME, adj. Dark; gloomy; wanting light.
 First the sun,
 A mighty sphere! he fram'd, unlightsome first;
 Though of æthereal mould. Milton's Par. Lost.
UNLIKE, adj.
 1. Dissimilar; having no resemblance.
 Where cates are to unlike as theirs and ours, I see not how that which they did, should induce, much less inforce us to the same practice. Hooker, b. v.
 So the twins humours, in our Terence, are
Unlike; this harsh and rude, that smooth and fair. Denham.
 Unlike the niceness of our modern dames;
 Affected nymphs, with new affected names. Dryden.
 Our ideas, whilst we are awake, succeed one another, not much unlike the images in the inside of a lantern. Locke.
 Some she disgrac'd, and some with honours crown'd;
Unlike successes equal merits found. Pope.
 2. Improbable; unlikely; not likely.
 Make not impossible that which but seems unlikely. Shakespeare.
 What befel the empire of Almaine were not unlikely to befall to Spain, if it should break. Bacon.
UNLIKELIHOOD, { [from unlikely.] Improbability.
UNLIKELINESS, {
 The work was carried on, amidst all the unlikelihooods and discouraging circumstances imaginable; the builders holding the sword in one hand, to defend the trowel working with the other. Saunders's Sermons.
 There are degrees herein, from the very neighbourhood of demonstration, quite down to improbability and unlikeliness, even to the confines of impossibility. Locke.
UNLIKELY, adj.
 1. Improbable; not such as can be reasonably expected.
 Suspicion Mopla; for a very unlikely envy the hath stumbled upon. Sidney.
 2. Not promising any particular event.
 My advice and actions both have met
 Success in things unlikely. Denham's Sophy.
 This collection we thought not only unlikely to reach the future, but unworthy of the present age. Swift.
 Effects are miraculous and strange, when they grow by un- likely means. Hooker.

U N L

UNLIKELY, adv. Improbably.
 The pleasures we are to enjoy in that conversation, not unlikely may proceed from the discoveries each shall communicate to another, of God and nature. Pope.
UNLIKENESS, n. f. Dissimilitude; want of resemblance.
 Imitation pleases, because it affords matter for enquiring into the truth or fallhood of imitation, by comparing its likeness, or unlikeness with the original. Dryden.
UNLIMITABLE, adj. Admitting no bounds.
 He tells us 'tis unlimited and unlimited. Locke.
UNLIMITED, adj.
 1. Having no bounds; having no limits.
 So unlimited is our impotence to recompence or repay
 God's dilection, that it fetters our very wishes. Boyle.
 It is some pleasure to a finite understanding, to view un- limited excellencies, which have no bounds, though it cannot comprehend them. Tillotson.
 2. Undefined; not bounded by proper exceptions.
 With gross and popular capacities, nothing doth more prevail than unlimited generalities, because of their plainness at the first sight; nothing less, with men of exact judgment, because such rules are not safe to be trusted over far. Hooker.
 3. Unconfined; not restrained.
 All the evils that can proceed from an united tongue, and an unguarded, unlimited will, we put upon the accounts of drunkenness. Taylor.
 Ascribe not unto God such an unlimited exercise of mercy, as may destroy his justice. Rogers's Sermons.
 Husbands are counselled not to trust too much to their wives owning the doctrine of unlimited conjugal fidelity. Abb.
UNLIMITEDLY, adv. Boundlessly; without bounds.
 Many ascribe too unlimitedly to the force of a good meaning, to think that it is able to bear the stress of whatsoever commissions they shall lay upon it. Decay of Piety.
UNLINEAL, adj. Not coming in the order of succession.
 They put a barren scepter in my gripe,
 Thence to be wrench'd with an unlineal hand,
 No son of mine succeeding. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
 To UNLINEAL, v. a. To untwist; to open.
 About his neck
 A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself;
 Who with her head, nimble in threats, approach'd
 The opening of his mouth; but suddenly
 Seeing Orlando, it unwind'd itself. Shakespeare.
UNLIQUIFIED, adj. Unmelted; undissolved.
 These huge, unwieldy lumps remained in the melted matter, rigid and unliquified, floating in it like cakes of ice in a river. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
 To UNLOAD, v. a.
 1. To disburden; to exonerate.
 Like an ass, whole back with ingots bows,
 Thou bear'st thy heavy riches but a journey,
 And death unloads thee. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.
 Vain man forbear, of cares unload thy mind;
 Forget thy hopes, and give thy fears to wind. Greene.
 Some to unload the fertile branches run. Pope.
 2. To put off any thing burdensome.
 To you duke Humphry must unload his grief. Shakespeare.
 Nor can my tongue unload my heart's great burthen, Shak.
 To UNLOCK, v. a.
 1. To open what is shut with a lock.
 I have seen her unlock her closet, take forth paper. Shakespeare.
 She springs a light,
Unlocks the doors, and cutting out of breath,
 The dying saw, and instruments of death. Dryden.
 2. To open in general.
 My purges, my person, my extremest means,
 Lie all unlock'd to your occasions. Shakespeare, Mer. of Venice.
 I had not thought to have unlock'd my lips
 In this unallow'd air, but that this jugler
 Would think to charm my judgment, as mine eyes,
 Obtruding false rules, pranc'd in in reason's garb. Milton.
 I yielded, and unlock'd her all my heart,
 Who with a grain of manhood well resolv'd,
 Might easily have shook off all her snares. Milton.
 Sand is an advantage to cold clays, in that it warns them,
 and unlocks their binding qualities. Mortimer's History.
 A luxivium of quick-lime unlocks the salts that are entangled in the viscid juices of some scorbuteck persons. Arbutnot.
 Thy forests, Windsor! and thy green retreats
 Invite my lays. Be present, sylvan maids!
Unlock your springs, and open all your shades. Pope.
UNLOCKED, adj. Not fastened with a lock.
UNLOCKED, { adj. Unexpected; not foreseen.
UNLOCKED, {
 Yet perhaps had their number prevail'd, if the king of Pontus had not come unlock'd for to their succour. Sidney.
 How much unlock'd for is this expedition! Shakespeare.
 God, I pray him
 That none of you may live your natural age,
 But by some unlock'd accident cut off. Shakespeare.
 Whatsoever

U N L

Whatsoever is new is unlooked for; and ever it mends some,
 and pares others. Bacon.
 From that high hope, to what relapse
Unlook'd for are we fall'n. Paradise Regain'd.
 Your affairs I have recommended to the king, but with un- look'd success. Denham.
 Nor fame I slight, nor for her favours call;
 She comes unlook'd for, if she comes at all. Pope.
UNLOOKABLE, adj. [A word rarely used.] Not to be looked.
 Whatever may be said of the unlookable mobility of atoms, yet divers parts of matter may compose bodies, that need no other cement to unite them, than the juxta-position, and resting together of their parts, whereby the air, and other fluids that might dissipate them, are excluded. Boyle.
 To UNLOOKABLE, v. a. To lose. A word perhaps barbarous and ungrammatical, the particle prefixed implying negation;
 so that to unlook, is properly to bind.
 York, unlook your long imprison'd thoughts,
 And let thy tongue be equal with thy heart. Shakespeare.
 The weak, wanton Cupid,
 Shall from your neck unlook his am'rous fold;
 And, like a dew-drop from the lion's mane,
 Be shock to air. Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida.
 Turn him to any cause of policy;
 The gordian knot of it he will unlook,
 Familiar as his garter. Shakespeare, Hen. V.
 If rested in you,
 'T' unlook this tied-up justice, when you pleas'd. Shakespeare.
 The latchet of his shoes I am not worthy to stoop down and unlook. Mark i. 7.
 He that should spend all his time in tying intricate knots, only to baffle the industry of those that should attempt to unlook them, would be thought not much to have served his generation. Decay of Piety.
 To UNLOOKABLE, v. n. To fall in pieces; to lose all union and connexion.
 Without this virtue, the publick union must unlook; the strength decay; and the pleasure grow faint. Collier.
UNLOVED, adj. Not loved.
 As love does not always reflect itself, Zelmane, though reason there was to love Palladius, yet could not ever persuade her heart to yield with that pain to Palladius, as they feel, that feel unloved love. Sidney, b. ii.
 What though I be not fortunate;
 But miserable most to love unloved!
 He was generally unloved, as a proud and supercilious person. Clarendon, b. viii.
UNLOVELINESS, n. f. Unamiableness; inability to create love.
 The old man, growing only in age and affection, followed his suit with all means of unhoneft servants, large promises, and each thing else that might help to countervail his own unloveliness. Sidney, b. ii.
UNLOVELY, adj. That cannot excite love. There seems by this word generally more intended than barely negation. See UNLOVELINESS.
UNLOVING, adj. Unkind; not fond.
 Thou, blest with a goodly son,
 Didst yield consent to disinherit him;
 Which argu'd thee a most unloving father. Shakespeare.
UNLUCKY, adv. Unfortunately; by ill luck.
 Things have fallen out to unluckily,
 That we have had no time to move our daughter. Shakespeare.
 An ant dropt unluckily into the water. L'Estrange.
 A fox unluckily crossing the road, drew off a considerable detachment. Addison's Freeholder, N° 3.
UNLUCKY, adj.
 1. Unfortunate; producing unhappiness. This word is generally used of accidents slightly vexatious.
 You may make an experiment often, without meeting with any of those unlucky accidents which make such experiments misfary. Boyle.
 2. Unhappy; miserable; subject to frequent misfortunes.
 Then shall I you recount a rueful case,
 Said he; the which with this unlucky eye
 I late beheld. Fairy Queen, b. i.
 3. Slightly mischievous; mischievously waggish.
 His friendship is counterfeit, seldom to trust;
 His doings unlucky, and ever unjust. Tusser.
 Why, cries an unlucky wag, a less bag might have served. L'Estrange.
 A lad, th' unluckiest of his crew,
 Was still contriving something bad, but new. King.
 4. Ill-omen'd; inauspicious.
 When I appear, see you avoid the place,
 And haunt me not with that unlucky face. Dryden.
UNLUSTRIOUS, adj. Wanting splendour; wanting lustre.
 Should I join gapes with hands
 Made hard with hourly fallhood, as with labour;
 Then glad myself with peeping in an eye,
 Bate and unlustrous as the smoaky light
 That's fed with stinking tallow. Shakespeare.

To UNLU'VE, v. a. To separate vessels closed with chymical cement.
 Our antimony thus handled, affordeth us an ounce of fulphur, of so sulphureous a smell, that upon the unluting the vessels, it infected the room with a scarce supportable stink. Boyle.
UNMA'DE, adj.
 1. Not yet formed; not created.
 Thou wast begot in Demogorgon's hall,
 And saw'st the secrets of the world unmade. Fairy Queen.
 Then might'st thou tear thy hair,
 And fall upon the ground as I do now,
 Taking the measure of an unmade grave. Shakespeare.
 2. Deprived of form or qualities.
 The first earth was perfectly unmade again, taken all to pieces, and framed a-new. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
 3. Omitted to be made.
 You may the world of more defects upbraid,
 That other works by nature are unmade;
 That she did never at her own expence
 A palace rear. Blackmore.
UNMA'IMED, adj. Not deprived of any essential part.
 An interpreter should give his author entire and unmaimed;
 the diction and the verification only are his proper province. Pope's Preface to the Iliad.
UNMA'KABLE, adj. Not possible to be made.
 If the principles of bodies are unalterable, they are also unmakable by any but a divine power. Grew's Cosmology.
 To UNMAKE, v. a. To deprive of former qualities before possessed. To deprive of form or being.
 They've made themselves, and their fitness now
 Does unmake you. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
 God does not make or unmake things, to try experiments. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
 Empire! thou poor and despicable thing,
 When such as these make, or unmake a king. Dryden.
 Bring this guide of the light within to the trial. God, when he makes the prophet, does not unmake the man. Locke.
 To UNMAN, v. a.
 1. To deprive of the constituent qualities of a human being, as reason.
 What, quite unmann'd in folly? Shakespeare, Macbeth.
 Gross errors unman, and strip them of the very principles of reason, and sober discourse. Saunders's Sermons.
 2. To emasculate.
 3. To break into irresolution; to deject.
 Her clamours pierce the Trojans ears,
Unman their courage, and augment their fears. Dryden.
 Ulysses veil'd his pensive head;
 Again unman'd, a shower of sorrows shed. Pope.
UNMANAGEABLE, adj.
 1. Not manageable; not easily governed.
 They'll judge every thing by models of their own, and thus are rendered unmanageable by any authority but that of absolute dominion. Glanville.
 None can be concluded unmanageable by the milder methods of government, till they have been thoroughly tried upon him; and if they will not prevail, we make no excuses for the obstinate. Locke.
 2. Not easily wielded.
UNMANAGED, adj.
 1. Not broken by horsemanship.
 Like colts, or unmanaged horses, we start at dead bones and lifeless blocks. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
 2. Not tutored; not educated.
 Savage princes flash out sometimes into an irregular greatness of thought, and betray, in their actions, an unguided force, and unmanaged virtue. Pelton on the Classics.
UNMANLIKE, { adj.
UNMANLY, {
 1. Unbecoming a human being.
 It is strange to see the unmanlike cruelty of mankind, who, not content with their tyrannous ambition, to have brought the others virtuous patience under them, think their master-hood nothing, without doing injury to them. Sidney.
 Where the act is unmanly, or the expectation contradictory to the attributes of God, our hopes we ought never to entertain. Collier against Despair.
 2. Unfitable to a man; effeminate.
 By the greatness of the cry, it was the voice of man;
 though it were a very unmanlike voice, so to cry. Sidney.
 New customs,
 Though never so ridiculous,
 Nay, let them be unmanly, yet are follow'd. Shakespeare.
 This is in thee a nature but affected;
 A poor unmanly melancholy, sprung
 From change of fortune. Shakespeare, Timon of Athens.
 My servitude, ignoble, unmanly, ignominious, infamous. Milton's Agonistes.
 Think not thy friend can ever feel the soft
Unmanly warmth, and tenderness of love. Addison.

U N M

Unmanly dread invades the French astony'd,
And straight their useless arms they quit. Philips.
UNMANNERED. adj. Rude; brutal; uncivil.
You have a slanderous, beastly, unwash'd tongue,
In your rude mouth, and favouring yourself,
Unmanner'd lord. B. Johnson's Catiline.
If your barking dog disturb her ease,
Th' unmanner'd malefactor is arraign'd. Dryden's Juvenal.
UNMANNERLINESS. n. s. Breach of civility; ill behaviour.
A sort of unmannerliness is apt to grow up with young people, if not early restrain'd; and that is a forwardness to interrupt others speaking. Locke on Education.
UNMANNERLY. adj. Ill bred; not civil; not complaisant.
Sweetheart,
I were unmannerly to take you out,
And not to kiss you. Shakespeare. Hen. VIII.
He call'd them untaught knaves, unmannerly,
To bring a slovenly, unhandsome coarse Betwixt the wind and his nobility. Shakespeare. Hen. IV.
He will prove the weeping philosopher, when he grows old, being so full of unmannerly sadness in his youth. Shakespeare.
Bare-faced ribaldry is both unmannerly in itself, and fulsome to the reader. Dryden.
A divine dares hardly shew his person among fine gentlemen;
or, if he fall into such company, he is in continual apprehension that some pert man of pleasure should break an unmannerly jest, and render him ridiculous. Swift.
UNMANNERLY. adv. Uncivilly.
Forgive me,
If I have us'd myself unmannerly. Shakespeare.
UNMANUR'D. adj. Not cultivated.
The land,
In antique times was savage wilderness;
Unpeopled, unmanur'd, unprov'd, unprais'd. Fairy Queen.
UNMARKED. adj. Not observed; not regarded.
I got a time, unmarked by any, to steal away, I cared not whither, so I might escape them. Sidney.
This place unmark'd, though oft I walk'd the green,
In all my progress I had never seen. Dryden.
Entering at the gate, conceal'd in clouds,
He mix'd, unmark'd, among the busy throngs,
Borne by the tide, and pass'd unseen along. Dryden.
Unmark'd, unhonour'd at a monarch's gate. Pope.
UNMARKED. adj. Having no husband, or no wife.
Unmarried men are best friends, best masters, best servants, but not always best subjects, for they are light to run away. Bacon.
Husbands and wives, boys and unmarried maids. Dryden.
TO UNMARR. v. a.
1. To strip of a mark.
2. To strip of any disguise.
With full cups they had unmarr'd his soul. Rowson.
Though in Greek or Latin they amuse us, yet a translation
unmarrs them, whereby the cheat is transparent. Glanville.
TO UNMARR. v. n. To put off the mark.
My husband bids me; now I will unmarr.
This is that face was worth the looking on. Shakespeare.
UNMARR'D. adj. Naked; open to the view.
O I am yet to learn a statesman's art;
My kindness, and my hate unmarr'd I wear,
For friends to trust, and enemies to fear. Dryden.
UNMARRABLE. adj. Unconquerable; not to be subdued.
The factor is unmarrable by the natural heat of man; not to be dulcified by concoction, beyond unfavourable condition.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.
UNMARRABLE. adj.
1. Not subdued.
2. Not conquerable.
Weigh what loss your honour may sustain, if you
Or lose your heart, or your chaste treasure open
To his unmarr'd importunity. Shakespeare. Hamlet.
He cannot his unmarr'd grief sustain.
But yields to rage, to madness and disdain. Dryden.
UNMATCHABLE. adj. Unparalleled; unequalled.
The soul of Christ, that saw in this life the face of God, was, through so visible presence of Deity, filled with all manner of graces and virtues in that unmatchable degree of perfection; for which, of him we read it written, that God with the oil of gladness anointed him. Hooker, b. v.
Most radiant, exquisite, and unmatchable beauty, tell me,
if this be the lady of the house. Shakespeare.
England breeds very valiant creatures; their matiffs are of unmatchable courage. Shakespeare. Hen. V.
UNMATCHED. adj. Matchless; having no match, or equal.
That glorious day, which two such navies saw,
As each, unmatch'd, might to the world give law;
Neptune, yet doubtful whom he should obey,
Held to them both the trident of the sea. Dryden.
UNMEANING. adj. Expressing no meaning,
With round, unmeaning face. Pope.

UNMEANT. adj. Not intended.
The flying spear was after Ius sent:
But Rhæus happen'd on a death unmeant. Dryden.
UNMEASURABLE. adj. Boundless; unbounded.
Common mother! thou
Whose womb unmeasurable, and infinite breast Teems and feeds all. Shakespeare. Timon of Athens.
You preserved the lustre of that noble family, which the unmeasurable profusion of ancestors had eclipsed. Swift.
UNMEASURED. adj.
1. Immense; infinite.
Does the sun dread th' imaginary sign,
Nor farther yet in liquid æther roll,
'Till he has gain'd some unfrequented place,
Lost to the world, in vast, unmeasured space. Blackmore.
2. Not measured; plentiful.
From him all perfect good, unmeasured out, descends. Milton.
UNMEASURED. adj. Not formed by previous thought.
Neither various style,
Nor holy rapture, wanted they, to praise
Their maker, in fit strains pronounced, or sung
Unmeasured. Milton's Par. Lost, b. v.
UNMEASURED. adj. Not touched; not altered.
The flood-gate is opened and closed for six days, continuing other ten days unmeasured. Carew.

Madam was young, unmeet the rule of sway. Spenser.
I am unmeet;
For I cannot flatter thee in pride.
O my father!
Prove you that any man with me convers'd
At hours unmeet, refuse me, hate me. Shakespeare.
Alack! my hand is sworn Ne'er to pluck thee from thy thorn;
Vow, alack! for youth unmeet,
Youth so apt to pluck a sweet. Shakespeare.
Its fellowship unmeet for thee,
Good reason was thou freely should'st dislike. Milton.
That muse desires the last, the lowest place,
Who, though unmeet, yet touch'd the trembling string
For the fair fame of Anne. Prior.
UNMELLOWED. adj. Not fully ripened.
His years but young, but his experience old;
His head unmellow'd, but his judgment ripe. Shakespeare.
UNMELTED. adj. Undissolved by heat.

Whence rowling flames, and scatter'd cinders fly. Waller.
UNMENTIONED. adj. Not told; not named.
They left not any error in government unmentioned or unpressed, with the sharpest and most pathetic expressions. Clar.
Oh let me here sink down
Into my grave, unmentioned and unmourn'd! Southern.
UNMERCHANTABLE. adj. Unsaleable; not vendible.
They feed on salt, unmerchantable pichard. Carew.
UNMERCIFUL. adj.
1. Cruel; severe; inclement.
For the humbling of this unmerciful pride in the eagle, providence has found out a way. L'Estrange.
The pleasant lustre of flame delights children at first; but when experience has convinced them, by the exquisite pain it has put them to, how cruel and unmerciful it is, they are afraid to touch it. Locke.
Whatsoever doctrine represents God as unjust and unmerciful, cannot be from God, because it subverts the very foundation of religion. Rogers's Sermons.
2. Unconscionable; exorbitant.
Not only the peace of the honest, unwriting subject was daily molested, but unmerciful demands were made of his applaus.
Pope.
UNMERCIFULLY. adv. Without mercy; without tenderness.
A little warm fellow fell most unmercifully upon his Gallic majesty. Addison.
UNMERCIFULNESS. n. s. Inclemency; cruelty; want of tenderness.
Consider the rules of friendship, left justice turn into unmercifulness.
Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
UNMERITED. adj. Not deserved; not obtained otherwise than by favour.
This day, in whom all nations shall be blest,
Favour unmerited by me, who sought
Forbidden knowledge by forbidden means. Milton.
A tottering pinnacle unmerited greatness is. Gov. Tongue.
UNMERTABLE. adj. Having no desert. Not in use.
Your love deserves my thanks; but my desert
Unmerited, shuns your high request. Shakespeare.
UNMERITEDNESS. n. s. State of being undeserved.
As to the freeness or unmeritedness of God's love; we need but consider, that we so little could at first deserve his love, that he loved us even before we had a being. Boyle.
UNMILKED. adj. Not milked.
The ewes still folded, with distended thighs,
Unmilk'd, lay bleating in distressful cries. Pope.

UNMINDED. adj. Not heeded; not regarded.
He was
A poor, unminded outlaw, sneaking home;
My father gave him welcome to the shore. Shakespeare.
He, after Eve seduc'd, unminded, slunk
Into the wood. Milton.
UNMINDFUL. adj. Not heedful; not regardful; negligent;
inattentive.
Worldly wights in place
Leave off their work, unmindful of this law,
To gaze on them. Fairy Queen.
I shall let you see, that I am not unmindful of the things you would have me remember. Boyle.
Who now enjoys thee, credulous, all gold;
Who always vacant, in always amiable,
Hopes thee; of flattering gales. Milton.
Unmindful.
Unmindful of the crown that virtue gives,
After this mortal change, to her true servants,
Amongst the enthroned gods on faintest seats. Milton.
He, not unmindful of his usual art,
First in dissembled fire attempts to part;
Then roaring beats he tries. Dryden's Virgil.
When those who dislike the constitution, are so very zealous in their offers for the service of their country, they are not wholly unmindful of their party, or themselves. Swift.
TO UNMINGLE. v. a. To separate things mixed.
It will unmingle the wine from the water; the wine ascend, ing, and the water descending. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
UNMINGLED. adj. Pure; not vitiated by any thing mingled.
As easy may'st thou fall
A drop of water in the breaking gulph,
And take unmingled thence your drop again,
Without addition or diminishing. Shakespeare. Bacon.
Springs on high hills, are pure and unmingled. Taylor.
His cup is full of pure and unmingled sorrow.
Vessels of unmingled wine,
Mellifluous, undecaying, and divine. Pope.
UNMINGLEABLE. adj. Not susceptible of mixture. Not used.
The sulphur of the concrete loses by the fermentation, the property of oil being unmingleable with water. Boyle.
The unmingleable liquors retain their distinct surfaces. Boyle.
UNMIXED. adj. Not fouled with dirt.
Pais, with false, unmixed feet,
Where the rais'd pavement leads athwart the street. Gay.

With public accusation, uncovered slander, unmixed
rancour. Shakespeare's Much Ado about Nothing.
UNMIXED. adj. Not mingled with any thing; pure; not corrupted by additions.
Thy commandment all alone shall live
Within the book and volume of my brain,
Unmixed with baser matter. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
It exhibits a mixture of new conceits and old; whereas the instauration gives the new, unmixed otherwise than with some little asperion of the old. Bacon.
Thy constant quiet fills my peaceful breast,
With unmixed joy, uninterrupted rest. Rowson.
What is glory but the blaze of fame,
The people's praise, if always praise unmixed? Milton.
Thy Ærethusan stream remains unfoild;
Unmixed with foreign filth, and undefild. Dryden.
Together out they fly,
Inseparable now, the truth and lie:
And this or that unmixed, no mortal ear shall find. Pope.
UNMIXED. adj. Not lamented.
Fatherless distress was left unmixed;
Your widow dolours likewise be unwept. Shakespeare.

Wherein consists the precise and unmovable boundaries of that species. Locke.
UNMOVED. adj.
1. Not put out of one place into another.
Vipers that do fly
The light, oft under unmov'd stalls do lie. May's Virgil.
Nor winds, nor winter's rage o'erthrows
His bulky body, but unmov'd he grows. Dryden.
Chess-men, standing on the same squares of the chess-board, we say they are all in the same place, or unmoved;
though, perhaps, the chess-board hath been carried out of one room into another. Locke.
2. Not changed in resolution.
Among innumerable false, unmov'd,
Unshaken, uneduc'd. Milton.
3. Not affected; not touched with any passion.
Cæsar, the world's great master and his own,
Unmov'd, superior still in ev'ry state,
And scarce detested in his country's fate. Pope.
4. Unaltered by passion.
I meant to meet
My fate with face unmov'd, and eyes unwet. Dryden.
UNMOVING. adj.
1. Having no motion.
The celestial bodies, without impulse, had continued un- active, unmoving heaps of matter. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.
2. Having no power to raise the passions; unaffecting.
TO UNMOLD. v. a. To change as to the form.
Its pleasing poison
The visage quite transforms of him that drinks,
And the inglorious likeness of a beast
Fixes instead, unmoulding reason's mintage, Character'd in the face. Milton.
UNMOURNED. adj. Not lamented; not deplored.
O let me here sink down
Into my grave unmention'd and unmourn'd. Southern.
TO UNMUZZLE. v. a. To loose from a muzzle.
Now unmuzzle your wildom.
Have you not set mine honour at the stake,
And baited it with all th' unmuzzel'd thoughts
Thy tyrannous heart can think? Shakespeare. Twelfth Night.
TO UNMUFFLE. v. a. To put off a covering from the face.
Unmuffle, ye faint stars! and thou, fair moon,
That won't to love the traveller's benizon,
Stoop thy pale visage through an amber cloud,
And disinherit chaos, that reigns here
In double night, of darkness and of shades. Milton.
UNMUSICAL. adj. Not harmonious; not pleasing by sound.
Let argument bear no unmusical sound,
Nor jars interpose, sacred friendship to grieve. B. Johnson.
One man's ambition wants satisfaction, another's avarice, a third's spleen; and this discord makes up the very unmusical
harmony of our murmurs. Decay of Piety.
UNNAMED. adj. Not mentioned.
Author of evil, unknown till thy revolt,
Unnam'd in heav'n. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi.
UNNATURAL. adj.
1. Contrary to the laws of nature; contrary to the common instincts.
Her offence
Must be of such unnatural degree,
That monsters it. Shakespeare. K. Lear.
People of weak heads on the one hand, and vile affections on the other, have made an unnatural divorce between being wife and good. Glanville's Scipio.
'Tis irreverent and unnatural, to scoff at the infirmities of old age. L'Estrange.
2. Acting without the affections implanted by nature.
Rome, whole gratitude
Tow'rd her deserving children, is enroll'd
In Jove's own book, like an unnatural dam,
Should now eat up her own. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
If the tyrant were, to a son so noble, so unnatural,
What will be to us? Denham's Scipio.
3. Forced;

Pindar's unnavigable fong.

Like a swift stream from mountains pours along. Cowley.

Some who the depths of eloquence have found,

In that unnavigable stream were drown'd. Dryden.

Let wit her sails, her oars let wisdom lend;

The helm let pollicuck experience guide:

Yet cease to hope thy short-liv'd bark shall ride

Down spreading fate's unnavigable tide. Prior.

The Indian seas were believ'd to be unnavigable. Arbutnot.

UNNECESSARILY. adv. Without necessity; without need; needlessly.

To abrogate, without constraint of manifest harm thereby arising, had been to alter unnecessarily, in their judgment, the ancient, received custom of the whole church. Hooker.

'Tis highly imprudent in the greatest of men, unnecessarily to provoke the meanest. L'Estrange.

These words come in without any connexion with the story, and consequently unnecessarily. Broome.

UNNECESSARINESS. n. f. Needlessness.

These are such extremes as afford no middle for industry to exist, hope being equally out-dated by the desperateness or unnecessariness of an undertaking. Decay of Piety.

UNNECESSARY. adj. Needless; not wanted; useless.

The doing of things unnecessary, is many times the cause

why the most necessary are not done. Hooker, b. v.

Thou whereof zed; thou unnecessary letter. Shakespeare.

Let brave spirits, fitted for command by sea or land, not be laid by, as persons unnecessary for the time. Bacon.

Lay that unnecessary fear aside;

Mine be the care new people to provide. Dryden.

Unnecessary coinage, as well as unnecessary revival of words, runs into affectation; a fault to be avoided on either hand. Dryden.

They did not only shun persecution, but affirmed, that it was unnecessary for their followers to bear their religion through such fiery trials. Addison.

The reader can easily discover how the plot will be unravelled at last; but the unnecessary intricacies in unravelling it, still remain to be accounted for. Shakespeare, Illustrated.

UNNEIGHBOURLY. adj. Not kind; not suitable to the duties of a neighbour.

Parnassus is but a barren mountain, and its inhabitants make it more so, by their unneighbourly deportment. Garrick.

UNNEIGHBOURLY. adv. In a manner not suitable to a neighbour; with malevolence; with mutual mischief.

These two christian armies might combine

The blood of malice in a vein of league,

And not to spend it so unneighbourly. Shakespeare.

UNNEURVATE. adj. Weak; feeble. A bad word.

Scaliger calls them fine and lively in Museus; but abject,

unneurved, and unharmonious in Homer. Broome.

TO UNNEURVE. v. a. To weaken; to enfeeble.

The precepts are often so minute and full of circumstances, that they weaken and unneurve his verse. Addison.

UNNEURVED. adj. Weak; feeble.

Pyrrhus at Priam drives, in rage strikes wide;

But with the whiff and wind of his fell sword,

Th' unneurved father falls. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

UNNEURVED. adv. [This is from un and ead, Saxon, easy; and

UNNEURVED. } ought therefore to be written uneath.] Scarcely; hardly; not without difficulty. Obsolete.

Diggon, I am so stiff and itanke,

That unneeth I may stand any more;

And how the western wind bloweth fore,

Beating the wither'd leaf from the tree. Spenser.

A shepherd's boy,

When winter's wasteful spight was almost spent,

Led forth his flocke, that had been long ypent;

So faint they waxe, and feeble in the fold,

That now unneeth their feet could 'em uphold. Spenser.

UNO'BLE. adj. Mean; ignominious; ignoble.

I have offended reputation;

A most unoble swerving. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.

UNO

UNO'TED. adj. Not observed; not regarded; not heeded; not celebrated.

They may jest,

'Till their own scorn return to them unoted. Shakespeare.

He drew his seat familiar to her side,

Far from the sutor train, a brutal crowd;

Where the free guest unoted might relate,

If haply conscious of his father's fate. Pope.

A shameful fate now hides my hopeless head,

Unwept, unoted, and for ever dead. Pope's Odyssey.

UNNUMBERED. adj. Innumerable.

The skies are painted with unnumber'd sparks;

They are all fire, and every one doth shine. Shakespeare.

Our bodies are but the anvils of pain and diseases, and our minds the whives of unnumbered cares and passions. Raleigh.

Of various forms, unnumber'd spectres, more

Centaur, and double shapes, besiege the door. Dryden.

Pitchy and dark the night sometimes appears;

Our joy and wonder sometimes the excites,

With stars unnumber'd. Prior.

UNOBSE'QUIOUSNESS. n. f. Incompliance; disobedience.

They make one man's particular failings, confining laws to others; and convey them, as such, to their successors, who are bold to misname all unobsequiousness to their inco-gnitancy, presumption. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

UNOBEYED. adj. Not obeyed.

Not leave

Unworship'd, unobey'd, the throne supreme. Milton.

UNOBEY'CED. adj. Not charged as a fault, or contrary argument.

What will he leave unobey'd to Luther, when he makes it his crime that he defied the devil. Atterbury.

UNOBNOXIOUS. adj. Not liable; not exposed to any hurt.

So unobnoxious now, she hath buried both;

For none to death fins, that to fin is loth. Dome.

In fight they stood

Unwearied, unobnoxious to be pain'd. Milton's Par. Lost.

UNOBSERVABLE. adj. Not to be observed; not discover-

able.

A piece of glass reduced to powder, the same which, when entire, freely transmitted the beams of light, acquiring by confusion, a multitude of minute surfaces, reflects, in a confused manner, little and singly unobservable images of the lucid body, that from a diaphanous, it degenerates into a white body. Boyle on Colours.

UNOBSERVANT. adj.

1. Not obsequious.

2. Not attentive.

The unobservant multitude may have some general, confused apprehensions of a beauty, that gilds the outside frame of the universe. Glennville.

UNOBSERVED. adj. Not regarded; not attended to; not heeded; not minded.

The motion in the minute parts of any solid body, which is the principal cause of violent motion, though unobserved, passeth without found. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

They the son of God, our Saviour meek,

Sung victor; and from heav'nly seat refresh'd,

Brought on his way with joy; he, unobserved,

Home to his mother's house private return'd. Milton.

Every unwonted meteor is portentous, and the appearance of any unobserved star, some divine prognostick. Glennville.

Such was the Boyne, a poor, inglorious stream,

That in Hibernian vales obscurely stay'd,

And, unobserved, in wild meanders play'd. Addison.

Had I err'd in this case, it had been a well-meant mistake, and might have pass'd unobserved. Atterbury.

UNOBSERVING. adj. Inattentive; not heedful.

His similitudes are not placed, as our unobserving critics tell us, in the heat of any action; but commonly in its declining. Dryden.

UNOBS'TRUCTED. adj. Not hindered; not stopped.

Unobstructed matter flies away,

Ranges the void, and knows not where to stay. Blackmore.

UNOBS'TRUCTIVE. adj. Not raising any obstacle.

Why should he halt at either station? why

Not forward run in unobstructive way? Blackmore.

UNOBTAINED. adj. Not gained; not acquired.

As the will doth now work upon that object by desire, which is motion towards the end, as yet unobtained: so likewise upon the same heretofore received, it shall work also by love. Hooker.

UNO'VIOUS. adj. Not readily occurring.

Of all the metals, not any so constantly discolours its un-obvious colour, as copper. Boyle on Colours.

UNOCCUPIED. adj. Unpossessed.

If we shall discover further to the north pole, we shall find all that tract not to be vain, useless, or unoccupied. Ray.

The fancy hath power to create them in the senses, then unoccupied by external impressions. Green's Cosmology.

UNP

UNOFFERED. adj. Not proposed to acceptance.
For the sad business of Ireland, he could not express a greater sense, there being nothing left on his part unoffered or undone. Clarendon.

UNOFFENDING. adj.

1. Harmless; innocent.

Thy unoffending life I could not save; Dryden.

2. Sinless; pure from fault.

If those holy and unoffending spirits, the angels, veil their faces before the throne of his majesty; with what awe should we, sinful dust and ashes, approach that infinite power we have so grievously offended. Rogers's Sermons.

To UNOIL. v. a. To free from oil.

A tight maid, ere he for wine can ask,

Gustles his meaning, and unails the flask. Dryden.

UNOPENING. adj. Not opening.

Benighted wanderers, the forest o'er,

Curse the fav'd candle, and unopening door. Pope.

UNOPERATIVE. adj. Producing no effects.

The wishing of a thing is not properly the willing of it;

but an imperfect velocity, and imports no more than an idle,

unoperative complacency in the end, with a direct abhorrence of the means. South's Sermons.

UNOPPOSE'D. adj. Not encountered by any hostility or obstruction.

Proud, art thou met? thy hope was to have reach'd

The height of thy aspiring unoppos'd,

The throne of God unguarded. Milton's Par. Lost.

To every nobler portion of the town,

The curling billows roll their restless tide:

In parties now they struggle up and down,

As armies, unoppos'd, for prey divide. Dryden.

The people, like a headlong torrent go,

And ev'ry dam they break or overflow:

But unoppos'd they either lose their force,

Or wind in volumes to their former course. Dryden.

UNORDERLY. Disordered; irregular.

Since some ceremonies must be used, every man would have his own fashion; whereof what other would be the issue, but infinite distraction, and unorderly confusion in the church. Sanderfon.

UNORDINARY. adj. Uncommon; unusual.

I do not know how they can be excused from murder, who kill monstrous births, because of an unordinary shape, without knowing whether they have a rational soul or no. Lectre.

UNORGANIZED. adj. Having no parts instrumental to the nourishment of the rest.

It is impossible for any organ to regulate itself: much less may we refer this regulation to the animal spirits, an un- organized fluid. Green's Cosmology.

UNORIGINAL. adj. Having no birth; ungenerated.

UNORIGINAL. adj. Having no birth; ungenerated.

I toil'd out my uncouth passage, forc'd to ride

Th' untractable abyss, plung'd in the womb

Of unoriginal night, and chaos wild. Milton's Par. Lost.

In scripture, Jehovah signifies, that God is undervied, unoriginated, and self-existent. Stephens's Sermons.

UNORTHODOX. adj. Not holding pure doctrine.

A fat benefice became a crime against its incumbent; and he was sure to be unorthodox, that was worth the plundering. Decay of Piety.

UNOWNED. adj. Having no owner.

England now is left

To tug and scramble, and to part by th' teeth

The unowned interest of proud, swelling state. Shakespeare.

UNOWNED. adj.

1. Having no owner.

UNP

UNPASSABLE. adj. Admitting no passage.
Every country, which shall not do according to these things, shall be made not only unpassable for men, but most hateful to wild beasts. Esth. xvi. 24.
They are vast and unpassable mountains, which the labour and curiosity of no mortal has ever yet known. Temple.
Making a new standard for money, must make all money which is lighter than that standard, unpassable. Locke.
You swell yourself as though you were a man of learning already; you are thereby building a most unpassable barrier against all improvement. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
UNPASSIONATE. adj. Free from passion; calm; impassioned. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
UNPASSIONATED. adj. Free from passion; calm; impassioned. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
He attended the king into Scotland, and was sworn a counsellor in that kingdom; where, as I have been instructed by unpassionate men, he did carry himself with singular sweetness. Wotton's Buckingham.
More sober heads have a set of misconceits, which are as absurd to an unpassionate reason, as those to our unbiassed senses. Glanville's Scipio. c. 13.
The rebukes, which their faults will make hardly to be avoided, should not only be in sober, grave, and unpassionate words, but also alone and in private. Locke on Education.
UNPASSIONATELY. adv. Without passion.
Make us unpassionately to see the light of reason and religion. K. Charles.
UNPATHE. adj. Untracked; unmarked by passage.
A course more promising,
Than a wild dedication of yourselves
To unpath'd waters, undream'd shores; most certain
To miseries enough. Shakespeare's Winter Tale.
UNPAWNED. adj. Not given to pledge.
He roll'd his eyes, that witness'd huge dismay,
Where yet, unpaw'd, much learned lumber lay. Pope.
To UNPAY. v. a. To undo. A low ludicrous word.
Pay her the debt you owe her, and unpay the villainy you have done her: the one you may do with sterling money, and the other with current repentance. Shakespeare.
UNPEACEABLE. adj. Quarrelsome; inclined to disturb the tranquillity of others.
Lord, purge out of all hearts those unpeaceable, rebellious, mutinous, and tyrannizing, cruel spirits; those prides and haughtinesses, judging and condemning, and despising of others. Hammond's Fundamentals.
The design is to restrain men from things, which make them miserable to themselves, unpeaceable and troublesome to the world. Tillotson.
To UNPEG. v. a. To open any thing closed with a peg.
Unpeg the basket on the house's top;
Let the birds fly. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
UNPENSIONED. adj. Not kept in dependance by a pension.
Could pension'd Boileau lash in honest strain
Flat'ers and bigots, ev'n in Louis' reign;
And I not stir the gilding off a knave,
Unplac'd, unpension'd, no man's heir or slave? Pope.
To UNPEOPLE. v. a. To depopulate; to deprive of inhabitants.
The land
In antique times was savage wilderness,
Unpeop'd, unmanur'd. Fairy Queen.
Shall war unpeople this my realm?
To few unknown Shakespeare.
Long after; now unpeop'd, and untrod. Milton.
The lofty mountains feed the savage race,
Yet few, and strangers in th' unpeop'd place. Dryden.
He must be thirty-five years old, a doctor of the faculty, and eminent for his religion and honesty; that his rashness and ignorance may not unpeople the commonwealth. Addison.
UNPERCEIVED. adj. Not observed; not heeded; not sensibly discovered; not known.
The ashes, wind unperceived shakes off; Bacon.
He alone
To find where Adam shelter'd, took his way,
Not unperceiv'd of Adam. Milton's Par. Lost.
Thus daily changing, by degrees I'd waste,
Still quitting ground, by unperceiv'd decay,
And steal myself from life, and melt away. Dryden.
Unperceiv'd the heav'ns with stars were hung.
Oft in pleasing tasks we wear the day,
While summer suns roll unperceiv'd away. Pope.
UNPERCEIVEDLY. adv. So as not to be perceived.
Some oleaginous particles, unperceivedly, associated themselves to it. Boyle.
UNPERFECT. adj. [impe-fait, Fr. imperfectus, Lat.] Incomplete.
Apelles' picture of Alexander at Ephesus, and his Venus, which he left at his death unperfected in Chios, were the chiefest. Peachment on Drawing.
UNPERFECTNESS. n. f. Imperfection; incompleteness.
Virgil and Horace spying the unperfectness in Ennius and Plautus, by true imitation of Homer and Euripides, brought poetry to perfectness. Afchan's Schoolmaster.

UNP

UNPERFORMED. adj. Undone; not done.
A good law without execution, is like an unperformed promise. Taylor's Rule of Holy Living.
UNPERISHABLE. adj. Lasting to perpetuity; exempt from decay.
We are secured to reap in another world everlasting, unperishable felicities. Hammond's Fundamentals.
UNPERJURED. adj. Free from perjury.
Beware of death; thou can't not die unperjur'd,
And leave an unaccomplish'd love behind.
Thy vows are mine. Dryden.
UNPERPLEXED. adj. Disentangled; not embarrassed.
In learning, little should be proposed to the mind at once; and that being fully mastered, proceed to the next adjoining part, yet unknown, simple, unperplexed proposition. Locke.
UNPERSPIRABLE. adj. Not to be emitted through the pores of the skin.
Bile is the most unperspirable of animal fluids. Arbuthnot.
UNPERSUADABLE. adj. Inexorable; not to be persuaded.
He, finding his filter's unpersuadable melancholy, through the love of Amphialus, had for a time left her court. Silvery.
UNPERTURBED. adj. Not turned to stone.
In many concreted plants, some parts remain unperturb'd; that is, the quick and livelier parts remain as words, and were never yet converted. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
UNPHILOSOPHICAL. adj. Unfuitable to the rules of philosophy, or right reason.
Your conceptions are unphilosophical. You forget that the brain has a great many small fibres in its texture; which, according to the different strokes they receive from the animal spirits, awaken a correspondent idea. Collier.
It became him who created them, to set them in order; and if he did so, it is unphilosophical to seek for any other origin of the world, or to pretend that it might arise out of a chaos by the mere laws of nature. Newton's Opticks.
UNPHILOSOPHICALLY. adv. In a manner contrary to the rules of right reason.
They forget that he is the first cause of all things, and discourse most unphilosophically, absurdly, and unfavourably to the nature of an infinite being; whose influence must set the first wheel a-going. South's Sermons.
UNPHILOSOPHICALNESS. n. f. Incongruity with philosophy.
I could dispense with the unphilosophicalness of this their hypothesis, were it not unchristian. Norris.
To UNPHILOSOPHIZE. v. a. To degrade from the character of a philosopher. A word made by Pope.
Our passions, our interests flow in upon us, and unphilosophize us into mere mortals. Pope.
UNPIERCED. adj. Not penetrated; not pierced.
Th' unpierced shade imbrown'd the noontide bow's. Mit.
True Witney broad-cloth, with its flag uniform,
Unpierced, is in the lasting tempest worn. Goy.
UNPIERCED. adj. Divested of pillars.
See the cirque falls! th' unpill'd temple nods!
Streets pav'd with heroes! Tiber choak'd with gods! Pope.
UNPILOWED. adj. Wanting a pillow.
Perhaps some cold bank is her bolster now,
Or gambit the rugged bark of some broad elm,
Leans her unpillow'd head, fraught with sad fears. Mit.
To UNPIN. v. a. To open what is shut, or fastened with a pin.
My love doth so approve him,
That even his stubbornness, his checks and frowns, (Pr'ythee unpin me) have grace and favour in them. Shakespeare.
Unpin that spangled breast-plate which you wear,
That th' eyes of busy fools may be stop'd there. Deane.
Who is the honest man?
He that doth still and strongly good pursue,
To God, his neighbour, and himself most true:
Whom neither force, nor fawning can
Unpin, or wrench from giving all their due. Herbert.
UNPINNED. adj. Not marked with eyelid holes.
Gabriel's pumps were all unpinn'd if th' heel. Shakespeare.
UNPITIED. adj. Not compassionated; not regarded with sympathetic sorrow.
Richard yet lives; but at hand, at hand
Insues his piteous and unpitied end. Shakespeare's Rich. III.
Rich in the world's opinion, and men's praise,
And full in all we could desire, but days:
He that is warn'd of this, and shall forbear
To vent a sigh for him, or shed a tear;
May he live long scorn'd, and unpitied fall,
And want a mourner at his funeral. Bp. Corbet.
But he whose words and fortunes disagree,
Absurd, unpitied, grows a publick jest.
He that does not secure himself of a flock of reputation in his greatness, shall most certainly fall unpitied in his adversity. L'Estrange.
As the greatest curse that I can give,
Unpitied be depos'd, and after live. Dryden's Aurengzeb.
As

UNP

As some sad turtle his lost love deplores;
Thus, far from Delia, to the winds I mourn;
Alike unheard, unpitied, and forlorn. Pope.
Passion unpitied, and successful love,
Plant daggers in my heart, and aggravate
My other griefs. Addison's Cato.
UNPITIFULLY. adv. Unmercifully; without mercy.
He beat him most pitifully.
—Nay, that he did not; he beat him most unpitifully. Shakespeare.
UNPITYING. adj. Having no compassion.
To shame, to chains, or to a certain grave,
Lead on, unpitying guides, behold your slave. Granville.
UNPLACED. adj. Having no place of dependance.
Could pension'd Boileau lash in honest strain
Flat'ers and bigots, ev'n in Louis' reign;
And I not stir the gilding off a knave, Unplac'd, unpension'd? Pope.
UNPLACED. adj. Not tormented.
Ladies, that have your feet
Unplac'd with corns, we'll have a bout with you. Shakespeare.
UNPLANTED. adj. Not planted; spontaneous.
Figs there unplanted through the fields do grow,
Such as fierce Cato did the Romans show. Waller.
UNPLAUSIBLE. adj. Not plausible; not such as has a fair appearance.
There was a mention of granting five subsidies; and that meeting being, upon very unplausible, and unplausible reasons, immediately dissolved, those five subsidies were exacted, as if an act had passed to that purpose. Clarendon.
I, under fair pretence of friendly ends,
And well-plac'd words of glowing courtesy,
Baited with reasons not unplausible,
Win me into the easy-hearted man,
And hug him into snares. Milton.
UNPLAUSIVELY. adv. Not approving.
'Tis like he'll question me,
Why such unplausible eyes are bent on him. Shakespeare.
UNPLEASANT. adj. Not delighting; troublesome; uneasy.
Their skilful ears perceive certain harsh and unpleasant discords in the sound of our common prayer, such as the rules of divine harmony, such as the laws of God cannot bear. Hooker.
O sweet Portia!
Here are a few of the unpleasant words
That ever blotted paper. Shakespeare's Merch. of Venice.
Wildom is very unpleasant to the unlearned. Eichsf. v. 20.
Upon Adam's disobedience, God chafed him out of paradise, the most delicious part of the earth, into some other, the most barren and unpleasant. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
UNPLEASANTLY. adv. Not delightfully; uneasily.
We cannot boast of good-breeding, and the art of life; but yet we don't live unpleasantly in primitive simplicity and good humour. Pope.
UNPLEASANTNESS. n. f. Want of qualities to give delight.
As for unpleasantness of sound, if it doth happen the good of men's souls doth deceive our ears, that we note it not, or aim them with patience to endure it. Hooker.
Many people cannot at all endure the air of London, not only for its unpleasantness, but for the suffocations which it causes. Grant's Bills of Mortality.
All men are willing to skulk out of such company; the sober for the hazards, and the jovial for the unpleasantness of it. Government of the Tongue.
UNPLEASSED. adj. Not pleased; not delighted.
Me rather had, my heart might feel your love,
Than my unpleas'd eye feel your courtesy. Shakespeare.
Condemn'd to live with subjects ever mute,
A salvage prince, unpleas'd, though absolute. Dryden.
UNPLEASING. adj. Offensive; disgusting; giving no delight.
Set to dress this garden:
How darest thy tongue found this unpleasing news? Shakespeare.
Hence the many mistakes, which have made learning so unpleasing and so unsuccessful. Milton.
If all those great painters, who have left us such fair platforms, had rigorously observed it in their figures, they had made things more regularly true, but withal very unpleasing. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
Howe'er unpleasing be the news you bring,
I blame not you, but your imperious king. Dryden.
UNPLIANT. adj. Not easily bent; not conforming to the will.
The chisel hath more glory than the pencil; that being so hard an instrument, and working upon so unpliant stuff, can yet leave strokes of so gentle appearance. Wotton.
UNPLIANT. adj. Not plowed.
Good sound land, that hath lain long unplowed. Mortimer.
To UNPLUME. adj. To strip of plumes; to degrade.
In the most ordinary phenomena in nature, we shall find enough to shame confidence, and unplume dogmatizing. Glanville.
UNPOETICAL. adj. Not such as becomes a poet.
Nor for an epithet that fails,
Bite off your unpoetical nails.

UNP

Unjust! why you shou'd in such veins
Reward your fingers for your brains? Bp. Corbet.
UNPOLISHED. adj.
1. Not smoothed; not brightened by attrition.
Palladio, having noted in an old arch at Verona, some part of the materials cut in fine forms, and some unpolished, doth conclude, that the ancients did leave the outward face of their marbles, or free-stone, without any sculpture, till they were laid in the body of the building. Wotton.
He affirms it to have been the ancient custom of all the Greeks, to set up unpolished stones instead of images, to the honour of the gods. Stillingfleet.
2. Not civilized; not refined.
Finding new words,
Such as of old wife bards employ'd to make
Unpolish'd men their wild retreats forsake. Waller.
Those first unpolish'd matrons, big and bold,
Gave suck to infants of gigantic mould. Dryden.
UNPOLITE. adj. [impoli, Fr. impolitus, Lat.] Not elegant; not refined; not civil.
Discourses for the pulpit should be cast into a plain method, and the reasons ranged under the words, first, secondly, and thirdly; however they may be now fancied to sound unpolite, or unfashionable. Watts's Improv. of the Mind.
UNPOLLUTED. adj. [impollutus, Lat.] Not corrupted; not defiled.
Lay her i' th' earth;
And from her fair and unpolluted flesh
May violets spring! Shakespeare's Hamlet.
'Till oft converse with heav'nly habitants
Begin to cast a beam on th' outward shape,
The unpolluted temple of the mind,
And turns it by degrees to the soul's essence,
'Till all be made immortal. Milton.
Though unpolluted yet with actual ill,
She half commits, who sins but in her will. Dryden.
UNPOPULAR. adj. Not fitted to please the people.
The practices of these men, under the covert of feigned zeal, made the appearance of sincere devotion ridiculous and unpopular. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup> 37.
UNPORTABLE. adj. [im and portabile.] Not to be carried.
Had their cables of iron chains had any great length, they had been unportable; and being short, the ships must have sunk at an anchor in any stream of weather or counter-tide. Raleigh.
UNPOSSESS'D. adj. Not had; not obtained.
He claims the crown.—
—Is the chair empty? is the sword unpossew'd?
Is the king dead? the empire unpossew'd? Shakespeare.
Such vast room in nature unpossew'd
By living soul, desert, and desolate,
Only to shine, yet scarce to contribute
Each orb a glimpse of light. Milton.
The cruel something unpossew'd,
Corrodes and leavens all the rest. Prior.
UNPOSSESSING. adj. Having no possession.
Thou unpossew'd ballard, dost thou think,
That I would stand against thee? Shakespeare.
UNPRACTICABLE. adj. Not feasible.
I try'd such of the things that came into my thoughts, as were not in that place and time unpracticable. Boyle.
UNPRACTISED. adj. Not skilful by use and experience; raw; being in the state of a novice.
The full sum of me
Is an uncleson'd girl, unschool'd, unpractis'd. Shakespeare.
Unpractis'd, unprepar'd, and still to seek. Milton.
I am young, a novice in the trade;
The fool of love, unpractis'd to persuade,
And want the soothing arts. Dryden.
His tender eye, by too direct a ray,
Wounded, and flying from unpractis'd day. Prior.
UNPRAISED. adj. Not celebrated; not praised.
The land,
In antique times was salvage wilderness;
Unpeop'd, unmanur'd, unprov'd, unprais'd. Fairy Queen.
If all the world
Sould in a pet of temperance feed on pulse,
Drink the clear stream, and nothing wear but frieze,
Th' all-giver would be unthank'd, wou'd be unprais'd. Mit.
If young African for fame
His wasted country freed from Punick rage,
The deed becomes unprais'd, the man at least,
And loses, though but verbal, his reward. Milton.
Nor pass unprais'd the vest and veil divine,
Which wand'ring foliage, and rich flow'rs entwine. Dryden.
UNPRECEDENTED. adj. Not dependent on another.
The stars, which grace the high expansion bright,
By their own beams, and unprecious light,
At a vast distance from each other lie. Blackmore.
UNPRECEDENTED. adj. Not justifiable by any example.
The secret of all this unprecedented proceeding in their masters, they must not impute to freedom. Swift.

UNP

To UNPREDICT. v. a. To retract prediction.
Means I must use, thou say'st prediction else
Will unpredic't, and fail me of the throne. Milton.
UNPREFERRED. adj. Not advanced.
To make a scholar, keep him under, while he is young, or unpreferred. Collier on Pride.
UNPREGNANT. adj. Not prolific.
This deed unshapes me quite, makes me unpregnant,
And dull to all proceedings. Shakespeare.
UNPREJUDICATE. adj. Not prepossessed by any settled notions.
A pure mind in a chaste body, is the mother of wisdom, sincere principles, and unprejudicate understanding. Taylor.
UNPREJUDICED. adj. Free from prejudice; free from pre-possession; not pre-occupied by opinion; void of preconceived notions.
The meaning of them may be so plain, as that any unprejudiced and reasonable man may certainly understand them. Tilghen.
Several, when they had informed themselves of our Saviour's history, and examined, with unprejudiced minds, the doctrines and manners of his disciples, were so struck, that they professed themselves of that sect. Addison.
UNPREL'ATIOUS. Unsuitable to a prelate.
The archbishop of York, by such unprelatical, ignominious arguments, in plain terms advised him to pass that act. Claren.
UNPREMEDITATED. adj. Not prepared in the mind beforehand.
Ask me what question thou canst possible,
And I will answer unpremeditated. Shakespeare. Hen. VI.
He dictates to me slumbering; or inspires Easy my unpremeditated verse. Milton's Par. Lost.
The flow of speech make unpremeditated harangues, or converse readily in languages that they are but little acquainted with. Addison.
UNPREPARED. adj.
1. Not fitted by previous measures.
Unpractis'd, unprepar'd, and still to seek. Milton.
To come unprepar'd before him, is an argument that we do not esteem God. Dryden's Rules for Devotion.
Fields are full of eyes, and woods have ears;
For this the wife are ever on their guard,
For, unforeseen, they say, is unprepar'd. Dryden.
2. Not made fit for the dreadful moment of departure.
I would not kill thy unprepared spirit;
No; heavens forefend. Shakespeare. Othello.
My unprepar'd, and unrepenting breath,
Was snatch'd away by the swift hand of death. Rescommon.
UNPREPAREDNESS. n. f. State of being unprepared.
I believe my innocence and unpreparedness to assert my rights and honour, make me the most guilty in their esteem; who would not so easily have declared a war against me, if I had first assaulted them. K. Charles.
UNPREPOSSESED. Not prepossessed; not pre-occupied by notions.
The unprepossessed on the one hand, and the well-disposed on the other, are affected with a due fear of these things. South.
It finds the mind naked and unprepossessed with any former notions, and so easily and insensibly gains upon the affections. South.
UNPREPRESSED. adj.
1. Not pressed.
Have I my pillow left unpress'd in Rome? Shakespeare.
In these soft shades, unpress'd by human feet,
Thy happy Phoenix keeps his balmy seat. Tickell.
2. Not enforced.
They left not any error in government unmentioned, or unpressed, with the sharpest and most pathetic expressions. Clarendon.
UNPRETENDING. adj. Not claiming any distinctions.
Bad writers are not ridiculed, because ridicule ought to be a pleasure; but to undecieve and vindicate the honest and unpretending part of mankind from imposition. Pope.
UNPREVAILING. adj. Being of no force.
Throw to earth this unprevailing woe. Shakespeare. Hamlet.
UNPREVENTED. adj.
1. Not previously hindered.
A pack of sorrows, which wou'd press you down,
If unprevent'd, to your timeless grave. Shakespeare.
2. Not preceded by any thing.
Thy grace
Comes unprevent'd, unimplo'd, unsought. Milton.
UNPRINCIPALLY. adj. Unsuitable to a prince.
I could not have given my enemies greater advantages, than by so unprincipally an inconstancy. K. Charles.
UNPRINTED. adj. Not printed.
Defer it, till you have finished these that are yet unprinted. Pope.
UNPRINCIPLED. adj. Not settled in tenets or opinions.
I do not think my sister so to seek,
Or so unprincipled in virtue's book,
As that the single want of light and noise
Could stir the constant mood of her calm thoughts. Milton.
Others betake them to state affairs, with souls so unprinci-

UNP

pled in virtue, and true generous breeding, that flatter, and court shifts, and tyrannous aphorisms, appear to them the highest points of wisdom. Milton on Education.
UNPROMISING. adj. Not valued; not of estimation.
A baubling vessel was he captain of,
For shallow draught and bulk unprofitable. Shakespeare.
UNPROCLAIMED. adj. Not notified by a publick declaration.
The Syrian king, who to surprize
One man, assassin-like, had levy'd war,
War unproclaim'd. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.
UNPROFITABLE. adj. Useless; serving no purpose.
The church being eased of unprofitable labours, needful offices may the better be attended. Hooker.
Should he reason with unprofitable talk?
My son Onesimus I have begotten in my bonds; which in time past was to thee unprofitable, but now profitable to thee and me. Philemon 11.
They receive alimnt sufficient, and yet no more than they can well digest; and withal sweat out the coarsest and unprofitablest juice. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
It is better to fall honourably, than to survive in an unprofitable and unglorious life. L'Estrange.
Then they who brothers better claim disown,
Defraud their clients, and to lucre sold,
Sit brooding on unprofitable gold. Dryden.
With shame and sorrow fill'd,
For plotting an unprofitable crime. Dryden.
An ox that waits the coming blow,
Old and unprofitable to the plough. Dryden.
With tears to tender,
As any heart, but only hers, could move;
Trembling before her bolted doors he flood,
And there pour'd out th' unprofitable blood. Dryden.
UNPROS'ONED. adj. Set free from confinement,
Several desires led parts away,
Water declin'd with earth, the air did fly;
Fire rose, and each from other but unt'y'd,
Themselves unpross'on'd were, and purify'd. Donne.
UNPRIZED. adj. Not valued.
Not all the dukes of wat'rish Burgundy,
Can buy this unpriz'd, precious maid of me. Shakespeare.
UNPROFANED. adj. Not violated.
Unspoil'd shall be her arms, and unpross'on'd
Her holy limbs with any human hand;
And in a marble tomb laid in her native land. Dryden.
UNPROFITABLENESS. n. f. Uselessness.
We are so persuaded of the unprofitableness of your science, that you can but leave us where you find us; but if you succeed, you increase the number of your party. Addison.
UNPROFITABLY. adv. Uselessly; without advantage.
I shou'd not now unprofitably spend Myself in words, or catch at empty hope,
By airy ways, for solid certainties. B. Johnson.
Our country's cause,
That drew our swords, now wreaths 'em from our hands,
And bids us not delight in Roman blood
Unprofitably shed. Addison's Cato.
UNPROFITED. adj. Having no gain.
Be clamorous, and leap all civil bounds,
Rather than make unprofit'd return. Shakespeare.
UNPROFITICK. adj. Barren; not productive.
Great rains drown many insects, and render their eggs unprofitick, or destroy them. Hale.
UNPROMISING. adj. Giving no promise of excellence; having no appearance of value.
If he be naturally listless and dreaming, this unpromising disposition is none of the easiest to be dealt with. Locke.
An attempt as difficult and unpromising of success, as if he should make the essay, to produce some new kinds of animals out of such senseless materials. Bentley.
UNPROSOUNCED. adj. Not uttered; not spoken.
Mad fit imperfect words, with childish trips,
Half-pronounc'd, slide through my infant lips. Milton.
UNPROPER. adj. Not peculiar.
Millions nightly lie in those unproper beds,
Which they dare swear peculiar. Shakespeare. Othello.
UNPROPERLY. adv. Contrarily to propriety; improperly.
I kneel before thee, and unproperly
Shew duty as mistaken all the while Between the child and parent. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
UNPROPTIOUS. adj. Not favourable; unpropitious.
'Twas when the dog-star's unpropitious ray Smote ev'ry brain, and wither'd ev'ry day, Sick was the sun. Pope.
UNPROPORTIONED. adj. Not suited to something else.
Give thy thoughts no tongue,
Nor any unproportion'd thought's act. Shakespeare.
UNPROPEED. adj. Not supported; not upheld.
He lives at random, carelessly diffus'd,
With languish'd head unprop'd,
As one past hope, abandon'd,
And by himself given over. Milton's Agonistes.

UNP

The fatal fang drove deep within his thigh,
And cut the nerves; the nerves no more sustain
The bulk; the bulk, unprop'd, falls headlong on the plain.
Dryden.
UNPROPOSED. adj. Not proposed.
The means are unprop'd. Dryden.
UNPROSPEROUS. adj. [improsper, Lat.] Unfortunate; not properous.
The winter had been very unprosperous and unsuccessful to the king. Clarendon.
Nought unprosperous shall thy ways attend,
Born with good omens, and with heav'n thy friend. Pope.
UNPROSPEROUSLY. adv. Unsuccessfully.
When a prince fights justly, and yet unprosperously, if he could see all those reasons for which God hath so ordered it, he would think it the most reasonable thing in the world. Taylor.
UNPROTECTED. adj. Not protected; not supported.
By woeful experience, thy both did learn, that to forsake the true God of heaven, is to fall into all such evils upon the face of the earth, as men, either destitute of grace divine, may commit, or unprotected from above, endure. Hooker.
UNPROVED. adj. Not evinced by arguments.
The land,
In antique times was savage wilderness,
Unpeopled, unmanur'd, unprov'd, unprais'd. Spenser.
There I found a fresh, unprov'd knight,
Whose many hands, imbrui'd in guilty blood,
Had never been. Fairy Queen, b. i.
There is much of what should be demonstrated, left unprov'd by those chymical experiments. Boyle.
TO UNPROVIDE. v. a. To divest of resolution or qualifications.
I'll not expostulate with her, lest
Her beauty unprovide my mind again. Shakespeare. Othello.
Prosperity inviting every sense,
With various arts to unprovide my mind;
What but a Spartan spirit can sustain
The shock of such temptations? Southern.
UNPROVIDED. adj.
1. Not secured or qualified by previous measures.
Where shall I find one that can steal well? O, for a fine thief of two and twenty, or thereabout; I am heinously unprovided. Shakespeare. Hen. IV.
With his prepared sword he charges home
My unprovided body, land'd my arm. Shakespeare.
Tears, for a stroke foreseen, afford relief;
But unprovided for a sudden blow,
Like Niobe we marble grow,
And petrify with grief. Dryden.
2. Not furnished.
Those unprovided of tackling and victual, are forced to sea. K. Charles.
The seditions had neither weapons, order, nor counsel; but being in all things unprovided, were slain like beasts. Hayward.
Th' ambitious empress with her son is join'd,
And, in his brother's absence, has design'd
Th' unprovided town to take. Dryden.
True zeal is not a solitary, melancholy grace, as if only fit to dwell in mean minds; such are utterly unprovided of all other natural, moral, or spiritual abilities. Sprat.
Courts are seldom unprovided of persons under this character, on whom most employments naturally fall. Swift.
UNPROVOKED. adj. Not provoked.
The teeming earth, yet guiltless of the plough,
And unprovok'd, did fruitful stores allow. Dryden.
Let them forbear all open and secret methods of encouraging a rebellion to destructive, and so unprovoked. Addison.
UNPROV'D. adj. Not cut; not lopped.
The whole land is full of weeds;
Her fruit trees all unprov'd. Shakespeare.
UNPUNISHED. adj. [unpunis, Lat.] Not punished; suffered to continue in impunity.
Bind not one sin upon another, for in one thou shalt not be unpunished. Ecclesi viii. 8.
Divine justice will not let oppression go unpunished. L'Estr.
The vent'rous victor, march'd unpunish'd hence,
And seem'd to boast his fortunate offence. Dryden.
UNPURCHASED. adj. Unbought.
Unpurchas'd plenty our full tables loads,
And part of what they lent, return t'our gods. Denham.
UNPURGED. adj. Not purged.
Is Brutus sick?
And will he steal out of his wholesome bed,
To tempt the rheumy and unpurg'd air,
To add unto his sickness? Shakespeare. Julius Caesar.
UNPURPOSED. adj. Not designed.
Do it
Or thy precedent services are all
But accidents unpurpos'd. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.
UNPUNLICK. adj. Private; not generally known.
Virginius must be retired and unpublish'd; for all freedom of society is a violence done to virginity, not in its natural, but in its moral capacity; that is, it loses part of its severity and

UNQ

strictness, by publishing that person, whose work is religious, whose thoughts must dwell in heaven. Taylor.
UNPUBLISHED. adj.
1. Secret; unknown.
All blest secrets;
All you unpublish'd virtues of the earth,
Spring with my tears. Shakespeare. K. Lear.
2. Not given to the publick.
Apply your care wholly to those which are unpublish'd. Pope.
UNPURGED. adj. Not purged; unpurified.
In her visage round those spots, unpurg'd Vapours not yet into her substance turn'd. Milton.
UNPURIFIED. adj.
1. Not freed from recreation.
2. Not cleansed from sin.
Our sinful nation having been long in the furnace, is now come out, but unpurified. Decay of Piety.
UNPURSUED. adj. Not pursued.
All night the dreadful angel unpurs'd
Through heav'n's wide champain held his way. Milton.
UNPUTRIFIED. adj. Not corrupted by rottenness.
Meat and drink last longer unpurified, or unlowered, in winter than in summer. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
No animal unpurified, being burnt, yields any alkaline salt, but putrified, yields a volatile alkali. Arbutnot.
UNQUALIFIED. adj. Not fit.
Till he has denuded himself of all these incumbrances,
he is utterly unqualified for these agonies. Decay of Piety.
All the writers against christianity, since the revolution, have been of the lowest rank in regard to literature, wit, and sense; and upon that account wholly unqualified to propagate heresies, unless among a people already abandoned. Sw.
Tories are more hated by the zealous whigs, than the very papists, and as much unqualified for the smallest offices. Sw.
TO UNQUALIFY. v. a. To disqualify; to divest of qualification.
Arbitrary power so diminishes the basis of the female figure, as to unqualify a woman for an evening walk. Addison.
Our private misfortunes may unqualify us for charity: but reflect, whether they may not have been inflicted by God, as a just punishment of our former unmercifulness. Atterbury.
Deafness unqualifies me for all company. Swift.
UNQUALIFIABLE. adj. Such as cannot be impugned.
There arise unto the examination such satisfactory and unqualifiable reasons, as may confirm the causes generally received. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
TO UNQUEEN. v. a. To divest of the dignity of queen.
Embaln me,
Then lay me forth; although unqueen'd, yet like
A queen, and daughter to a king, inter me. Shakespeare.
UNQUEENCHABLE. adj. Unextinguishable.
Were present wildfires burning in water and unquenchable. Bac.
The people on their holidays,
Impetuous, insolent, unquenchable. Milton's Agonistes.
The criminal's penitence may have number'd him among the faints, when our unretreated uncharitableness may send us to unquenchable flames. Government of the Tongue.
Our love of God, our unquenchable desires to promote our well-grounded hopes to enjoy his glory, should take the chief place in our zeal. Sprat's Sermons.
UNQUENCHED. adj.
1. Not extinguished.
We have heats of dungs, and of lime unquenched. Bacon.
2. Not extinguishable.
Sadness, or great joy, equally dissipate the spirits, and immoderate exercise in hot air, with unquenched thirst. Arbut.
UNQUENCHABLENESS. n. f. Unextinguishableness.
I was amazed to see the unquenchableness of this fire. Flakewill.
UNQUESTIONABLE. adj.
1. Indubitable; not to be doubted.
The duke's carriage was surely noble throughout; of unquestionable courage in himself, and rather fearful of fame than danger. Wotton.
One reason that mathematical demonstrations are uncon-troverted, is because interest hath no place in those unquestionable verities. Glanville's Scept.
There is an unquestionable magnificence in every part of Paradise Lost. Addison.
2. Such as cannot bear to be questioned without impatience;
this seems to be the meaning here.
What were his marks?
—A lean cheek, which you have not; an unquestionable spirit, which you have not. Shakespeare.
UNQUESTIONABLY. adv. Indubitably; without doubt.
If the fathers were unquestionably of the household of faith, and all to do good to them; then certainly their children cannot be strangers in this household. Sprat.
St. Austin was unquestionably a man of parts, but interposing in a controversy where his talent did not lie, shewed his zeal against the antipodes to very ill purpose. Barnet.
UNQUESTIONED. adj.
1. Not doubted; passed without doubt.

U N R

Other relations in good authors, though we do not positively deny, yet have they not been unquestioned by some. Brown.
 2. Indisputable; not to be opposed.
 It did not please the gods, who instruct the people;
 And their unquestion'd pleasures must be serv'd. B. Johnson.
 3. Not interrogated; not examined.
 Muttering pray'rs as holy rites she meant,
 Through the divided crowd unquestion'd went. Dryden.
UNQUI'CK. adj. Motionless.
 His senses droop, his steady eyes unquick;
 And much he ails, and yet he is not sick. Daniel's Civ. War.
UNQUICKENED. adj. Not animated; not ripened to vitality.
 Every fetus bears a secret hoard,
 With sleeping, unexpanded issue stor'd;
 Which num'rous, but unquicken'd progeny,
 Clasp'd, and enwrap'd, within each other lie. Blackmore.
UNQUI'ET. adj. [inquiet, Fr. inquietus, Lat.]
 1. Moved with perpetual agitation; not calm; not still.
 From grammatic flats and shallows, they are on the sudden transported to be tossed and turmoiled with their unballasted wits, in fathomless and unquiet depths of controversy. Milton.
 2. Disturbed; full of perturbation; not at peace.
 Go with me to church, and call me wife,
 And then away to Venice to your friend;
 For never shall you lie by Portia's side
 With an unquiet soul. Shakefp. Mer. of Venice.
 Thy love hopeful to regain,
 From thee I will not hide
 What thoughts in my unquiet breast are ris'n. Milton.
 3. Restless; unsatisfied.
 She glares in balls, front boxes, and the ring;
 A vain, unquiet, glit'ring, wretched thing.
 Mirth from company is but a fluttering, unquiet motion, that beats about the breast for a few moments, and after leaves it empty. Pope.
UNQUIETLY. adv. Without rest.
 Who's there besides foul weather?—
 —One minded like the weather, most Unquietly. Shakefp. K. Lear.
UNQUIETNESS. n. f.
 1. Want of tranquillity.
 Thou, like a violent noise, cam'st rushing in,
 And mak'st them wake and start to new unquietness. Denham.
 2. Want of peace.
 It is most enemy to war, and most hateth unquietness. Spens.
 3. Restlessness; turbulence.
 What pleasure can there be in that estate,
 Which your unquietness has made me hate? Dryden.
 4. Perturbation; uneasiness.
 Is my lord angry?—
 —He went hence but now,
 And certainly in strange unquietness. Shakefp. Othello.
 From inordinate love, and vain fear, comes all unquietness of spirit, and distraction of our senses. Taylor.
UNRA'CKED. adj. Not poured from the lees.
 Rack the one vessel from the lees, and pour the lees of the racked vessel into the unracked vessel. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
UNRA'KED. adj. Not thrown together and covered. Used only of fires.
 Cricket, to Windfor chimnies shalt thou leap:
 Where fires thou find'st unrak'd, and hearths unswept,
 There pinch the maids. Shakefp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
UNRA'NSACKED. adj. Not pillaged.
 He gave that rich city for a prey unto his soldiers, who left neither house, nor corner thereof unransacked. Knolles.
UNRA'NSOMED. adj. Not set free by payment for liberty.
 Unransom'd here receive the spotless fair,
 Accept the hecatomb the Greeks prepare. Pope's Iliad.
 To UNRA'VEL. v. a.
 1. To disentangle; to extricate; to clear.
 There unravell all
 This dark design, this mystery of fate. Addison's Cato.
 With Machinavelian sagacity thou unravell'st intrigues of state. Arbutnot.
 2. To disorder; to throw out of the present constitution.
 How can any thing succeed well with people that are to be pleased with nothing, unless the ball of the universe may be unravell'd, and the laws of providence reversed. L'Estrange.
 O the traitor's name!
 I'll know it; I will: art thou be conjur'd for it,
 And nature all unravell'd. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.
 So prophane and sceptical an age, takes a pride in unravelling all the received principles of reason and religion. Tillotson.
 3. To clear up the intrigue of a play.
 The solution, or unravelling of the intrigue, commences, when the reader begins to see the doubts cleared up. Pope.
 Thus supernaturally is the plot brought to perfection;
 nor is the unravelling of it less happily imagined. Shakefp. Illust.
UNRA'ZED. adj. Unhewn.
 As smooth as Hebe's their unravaz'd lips. Milton.

U N R

UNRE'ACHED. adj. Not attained.
 Labour with unequal force to climb
 That lofty hill, unreach'd by former time. Dryden.
UNRE'AD. adj.
 1. Not read; not publicly pronounced.
 These books are safer and better to be left publicly un-read. Hooker, b. v.
 His muse had starv'd, had not a piece unread,
 And by a player bought, supply'd her bread. Dryden.
 2. Untaught; not learned in books.
 Uncertain whose the narrower span,
 The clown unread, or half-read gentleman. Dryden.
UNRE'ADINESS. n. f.
 1. Want of readiness; want of promptness.
 This imprecation and unreadiness, when they find in us, then turn it to the soothing up of themselves in that accursed fancy. Hooker, b. v.
 2. Want of preparation.
 Nothing is so great an enemy to tranquillity, and a contented spirit, as the amazement and confusions of unreadiness and inconsideration. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
UNRE'ADV. adj.
 1. Not prepared; not fit.
 The fairy knight
 Departed thence, albe his wounds wide,
 Not thoroughly heal'd, unready were to ride. Fairy Queen.
 How now, my lords? what all unready to? Shakefp.
 2. Not prompt; not quick.
 From a temperate inactivity, we are unready to put in execution the suggestions of reason; or by a content in every species of truth, we embrace the shadow thereof. Brown.
 3. Awkward; ungain.
 Young men, in the conduct of actions, use extreme remedies at first, and that which doubleth all errors, will not acknowledge or retract them; like an unready horse, that will neither stop nor turn. Bacon.
UNREAL. adj. Unsubstantial.
 Hence, terrible shadow!
 Unreal mock'ry, hence!
 I with pain Shakefp. Macbeth.
 Voyag'd th' unreal, vast, unbounded deep
 Of horrible confusion. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.
UNRE'ASONABLE. adj.
 1. Exorbitant; claiming, or insisting on more than is fit.
 Since every language is so full of its own proprieties, that what is beautiful in one, is often barbarous in another, it would be unreasonable to limit a translator to the narrow com-pacts of his author's words. Dryden's Pref. to Ovid.
 My intention in prefixing your name, is not to desire your protection of the following papers, which I take to be a very unreasonable request; since, by being inscribed to you, you cannot recommend them without some suspicion of partiality. Swift's Project for the Advancement of Religion.
 2. Not agreeable to reason.
 No reason known to us; but that there is no reason thereof, I judge most unreasonable to imagine. Hooker, b. i.
 It is unreasonable for men to be judges in their own cases;
 self-love will make men partial to themselves and their friends. Lake.
 She entertained many unreasonable prejudices against him, before she was acquainted with his personal worth. Addison.
 3. Greater than is fit; immoderate.
 Those that place their hope in another world, have, in a great measure, conquer'd dread of death, and unreasonable love of life. Atterbury.
UNRE'ASONABLENESS. n. f.
 1. Exorbitance; excessive demand.
 The unreasonableness of propositions is not more evident, than that they are not the joint desires of their major number. K. Charles.
 A young university disputant was complaining of the unreasonableness of a lady, with whom he was engaged in a point of controversy. Addison's Freeholders, N<sup>o</sup> 32.
 2. Inconsistency with reason.
 The unreasonableness and presumption of those that thus project, have not so much as a thought, all their lives long, to advance so far as attrition. Hammond.
UNRE'ASONABLY. adv.
 1. In a manner contrary to reason.
 I'll not over the threshold, till my lord return from the wars. Shakefp.
 —Fye! you confine yourself most unreasonably. Shakefp.
 To UNRE'AVE. v. a. [now unravel; from un and reave, or ravel; perhaps the same with rive, to tear, or break asunder.]
 To unwind; to disentangle.
 Penelope, for her Ulysses' fake,
 Devis'd a web her woe to deceive;
 In which the work that the all day did make,
 The same at night she did unrave. Spenser.

UNREPA'TED. adj. Not blunted.
 A number of fencers try it out with unrepa'ted swords. Hakew.
UNREPU'KEABLE. adj. Obnoxious to no censure.
 Keep this commandment without spot, unrepukeable, until the appearing of Christ. 1 Tim. vi. 14.
UNRECEIVED. adj. Not received.
 Where the signs and sacraments of his grace are not, through contempt, unreceived, or received with contempt, they really give what they promise, and are what they signify. Hooker.
UNRECLA'IMED. adj.
 1. Not turned.
 A savageness of unreclaimed blood,
 Of general assault. Shakefp. Hamlet.
 2. Not reformed.
 This is the most favourable treatment a sinner can hope for, who continues unreclaimed by the goodness of God. Rogers.
UNRECON'ILEABLE. adj.
 1. Not to be appeased; implacable.
 He had many infirmities and sins, unreconcilable with perfect righteousness. Hammond's Pract. Catechism.
 2. Not to be made consistent with.
 Let me lament,
 That our stars, unreconcilable, should have divided
 Our equalness to this. Shakefp. Ant. and Cleop.
UNRE'CONCILED. adj. Not reconciled.
 If you bethink yourself of any crime
Unreconcil'd as yet to heav'n and grace, Solicit for it straight. Shakefp. Othello.
UNRECO'RDED. adj. Not kept in remembrance by publick monuments.
 Unrecorded left through many an age,
 Worthy 'have not remain'd so long unsung. Milton.
 The great Anticlus' a name
 Not unrecorded in the rolls of fame. Pope's Odyssey.
UNRECO'UNTED. adj. Not told; not related.
 This is yet but young, and may be left
 To some ears unrecounted. Shakefp. Hen. VIII.
UNRECU'ITABLE. adj. Incapable of repairing the deficiencies of an army.
 Empty and unrecruitable colonels of twenty men in a company. Milton on Education.
UNRECU'RING. adj. Irremediable.
 I found her straying in the park,
 Seeking to hide herself; as doth the deer,
 That hath received some unrecuring wound. Shakefp.
UNREDUC'ED. adj. Not reduced.
 The earl divided all the rest of the Irish countries unreduced, into shires. Davies's Ireland.
UNREFO'RMA'BLE. adj. Not to be put into a new form.
 The rule of faith is alone unmoveable and unreformable;
 to wit, of believing in one only God omnipotent, creator of the world, and in his son Jesus Christ, born of the virgin Mary. Hammond's Fundamentals.
UNREFORMED. adj.
 1. Not amended; not corrected.
 This general revolt, when overcome, produced a general reformation of the Irish, which ever before had been unre-formed. Davies's Ireland.
 We retain the Julian constitution of the year, unreformed, without consideration of the defective minutes. Holder.
 2. Not brought to newness of life.
 If he may believe that Christ died for him, as now he is, an unreformed Christian, then what needs his reformation? Hammi.
 Unhumbled, unrepentant, unreform'd. Milton.
UNREFRA'CTED. adj. Not refracted.
 The sun's circular image is made by an unrefracted beam of light. Newton's Opticks.
UNREFRE'SHED. adj. Not cheered; not relieved.
 Its symptoms are a spontaneous lassitude, being unrefreshed
 by sleep. Arbutnot.
UNREGAR'DED. adj. Not heeded; not respected; neglected.
 We, ever by his might,
 Had thrown to ground the unregard'd night. Fairy Queen.
 Do'st see, how unregarded now
 That piece of beauty passes?
 There was a time when I did vow
 To that alone;
 But mark the fate of faces.
 On the cold earth lies th' unregarded king;
 A headless carcass, and a nameless thing.
 Me you have often counsell'd to remove
 My vain pursuit of unregarded love. Suckling.
 Laws against immorality have not been executed, and proclamations to enforce them, are wholly unregard'd. Denham.
UNREGIST'ERED. adj. Not recorded.
 Hotter hours,
 Unregist'ed in vulgar fame, you have Luxuriously pick'd out. Dryden.
UNREGENERATE. adj. Not brought to a new life.
 This is not to be understood promiscuously of all men, unregenerate persons, as well as regenerate. Shakefp. Ant. and Cleopatra.
 Swift.

UNRE'INED. adj. Not restrained by the bridle.
 Left from thy flying steed unrein'd, as once
 Bellerophon, though from a lower clime
 Dismounted, on th' Aelian field I fall. Milton.
UNRELE'NTING. adj. Hard; cruel; feeling no pity.
 By many hands your father was subdu'd;
 But only slaughter'd by the cruel arm
 Of unrelenting Clifford. Shakefp. Hen. VI.
 Place pitchy barrels on the fatal stake,
 That so her torture may be shortened.
 Will nothing turn your unrelenting hearts?
 These are the realms of unrelenting fate;
 And awful Rhadamanthus rules the state. Dryden.
 False tears shall wet his unrelenting eyes,
 And his glad heart with artful sighs shall heave. Smith.
UNRELIE'VABLE. adj. Admitting no succour.
 As no degree of distress is unrelievable by his power, so no extremity of it is inconsistent with his compassion. Boyle.
UNREL'EVED. adj.
 1. Not succoured.
 The goddess griev'd,
 Her favour'd host thou'd perish unreliev'd. Dryden.
 2. Not eased.
 The uneasiness of unrelieved thirst is not lessened by continuance, but grows the more unupportable. Boyle.
UNREMA'RKABLE. adj.
 1. Not capable of being observed.
 Our understanding, to make a complete notion, must add something else to this fleeting and unremarkable superficies, that may bring it to our acquaintance. Digby.
 2. Not worthy of notice.
UNREME'DIABLE. adj. Admitting no remedy.
 He so handled it, that it rather seem'd he had more come into a defence of an unremediable mischief already committed, than that they had done it at first by his consent. Sidney.
UNREME'MBERING. adj. Having no memory.
 That unremem'ring of its former pain,
 The soul may suffer mortal flesh again. Dryden.
UNREME'MBERED. adj. Not retained in the mind; not recollected.
 I cannot pass unremembered, their manner of disguising the shafts of chimnies in various fashions, whereof the noblest is the pyramidal. Watson's Architecture.
UNREME'MBRANCE. n. f. Forgetfulness; want of remembrance.
 Some words are negative in their original language, but seem positive, because the negation is unknown; as amnesty, an unremembrance, or general pardon. Watts's Logic.
UNREMO'VEABLE. adj. Not to be taken away.
 Never was there any woman, that with more unremovable determination gave herself to love, after the had once set before her mind the worthiness of Amphialus. Sidney, b. ii.
 You know the fiery quality of the duke,
 How unremovable and fixt he is
 In his own course. Shakefp.
UNREMO'VED. adj.
 1. Not taken away.
 It is impossible, where this opinion is imbibed and unremoved, to found any convincing argument. Hammond.
 We could have had no certain prospect of his happiness,
 while the last obstacle was unremoved. Dryden's Virgil.
 2. Not capable of being removed.
 Like Teneriff or Atlas unremov'd. Milton.
UNREMO'VEABLY. adv. In a manner that admits no removal.
 His discontents are unremovably coupled to his nature. Sha.
UNREPA'ID. adj. Not recompensed; not compensated.
 Hadst thou full pow'r
 To measure out his torments by thy will;
 Yet what could'st thou, tormentor, hope to gain?
 Thy lois continues, unrepaid by pain. Dryden.
UNREPE'AL'D. adj. Not revoked; not abrogated.
 When you are pinched with any unrepeal'd act of parliament, you declare you will not be obliged by it. Dryden.
 Nature's law, and unrepeal'd command,
 That gives to lighter things the greatest height. Blackmore.
UNREPE'NTED. adj. Not regarded with penitential sorrow.
 They are no supplicants to seek his mercy in the behalf of others, whose own unrepented sins provoked his just indignation. Hooker, b. v.
 If I, vent'ring to displease
 God for the fear of man, and man prefer,
 Set God behind: which in his jealousy
 Shall never, unrepented, find forgiveness. Milton's Agonistes.
 As in unrepented sin the dy'd,
 Doom'd to the same bad place, is punish'd for her pride. Dryden.
 With what confusion will he hear all his unrepented sins produced before men and angels? Rogers's Sermons.
UNREPE'NTING. adj. Not repenting; not penitent; not UNREPE'NTANT. } sorrowful for sin.
 Should

Should I of these the liberty regard,
Who freed, as to their ancient patrimony,
Unhumb'd, unrepentant, uninform'd,
Headlong would follow. Milton's Par. Regain'd.
My unrepaid, and unrepenting breath,
Was snatch'd away by the swift hand of death. Roscommon.
All his arts reveal,
From the first moment of his vital breath,
To his last hour of unrepenting death. Dryden.
Nor tyrants fierce, that unrepenting die,
E'er felt such rage as thou. Pope's Rape of the Lock.
UNREP'NING. adj. Not peevishly complaining.
Barefoot as the trod the flinty pavement,
Her footsteps all along were mark'd with blood;
Yet silent on the pass'd, and unrepining. Rowe.
UNREPLE'NISHED. adj. Not filled.
Some air retreated thither, kept the mercury out of the unreplenish'd space. Boyle.
UNREPRI'EABLE. adj. Not to be repited from penal death.
Within me is a hell; and there the poison
Is, as a fiend, confin'd, to tyrannize
In unretrievable condemned blood. Shaksp. K. John.
UNREPRO'ACHED. adj. Not upbraided; not censured.
Sir John Hotham, unreproach'd, uncurs'd by any imprecation of mine, pays his head. K. Charles.
UNREPRO'VEABLE. adj. Not liable to blame.
You bath he reconciled, to present you holy, unblameable, and unreprovable in his fight. Col. i. 22.
UNREPRO'VED. adj.
1. Not censured.
Christians have their churches, and unreproved exercise of religion. Sandys's Journey.
2. Not liable to censure.
The antique world, in his first flow'ring youth,
With gladome thanks, and unreproved truth,
The gifts of foreign bounty did embrace. Fairy Queen.
If I give thee honour due,
Mirth, admit me of thy crew,
To live with her, and live with thee,
In unreproved pleasures free. Milton.
UNREPU'GNANT. adj. Not opposite.
When scripture doth yield us natural laws, what particular order is thereunto most agreeable; when positive, which way to make laws unrepugnant unto them. Hooker, b. iii.
UNREPUTABLE. adj. Not creditable.
When we see wife men examples of duty, we are convinced that piety is no unreputable qualification, and that we are not to be ashamed of our virtue. Rogers.
UNREQUESTED. adj. Not asked.
With what security can our ambassadors go, unrequested of the Turkish emperor, without his safe conduct? Knolles.
UNREQUITABLE. adj. Not to be retaliated.
Some will have it that all mediocrity of folly is foolish, and because an unrequitable evil may ensue, an indifferent convenience must be omitted. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
So unrequitable is God's love, and so insolvent are we,
that that love vastly improves the benefit, by which alone we might have pretended to some ability of retribution. Boyle.
UNRESENTED. adj. Not regarded with anger.
The failings of these holy persons, passed not unresented by God; and the same scripture which informs us of the sin, records the punishment. Rogers.
UNRESERVED. adj.
1. Not limited by any private convenience.
The piety our heavenly father will accept, must consist in an entire, unreserved obedience to his commands; since whosoever offends in one precept, is guilty of the whole law. Rogers.
2. Open; frank; concealing nothing.
UNRESERVEDNESS. n. f. Unlimitedness; frankness; largeness.
The tenderness and unreservedness of his love, made him think those his friends or enemies, that were so to God. Boyle.
UNRESERVEDLY. adv.
1. Without limitations.
I am not to embrace absolutely and unreservedly the opinion of Aristotle. Boyle.
2. Without concealment; openly.
I know your friendship to me is extensive; and it is what I owe to that friendship, to open my mind unreservedly to you. Pope.
UNRESE'RVEDNESS. n. f. Openness; frankness.
I write with more unreservedness than ever man wrote. Pope.
UNRESISTED. adj.
1. Not opposed.
The æthereal spaces are perfectly fluid; they neither assist, nor retard, the planets, which roll through as free and unresisted, as if they moved in a vacuum. Bentley's Sermons.
2. Resistless; such as cannot be opposed.
Those gods! whose unresisted might Have sent me to these regions void of light. Dryden.
What wonder then, thy hairs should feel
The conquering force of unresisted steel? Pope.

UNRESISTING. adj. Not opposing; not making resistance.
What noise? that spirit's posses'd with haste,
That wounds th' unresisting postern with these strokes. Shaksp.
The sheep was sacrific'd on no pretence,
But meek and unresisting innocence:
A patient, useful creature. Dryden.
Since the planets move horizontally through the liquid and unresisting spaces of the heav'ns, where no bodies at all, or inconsiderable ones, occur, they may preserve the same velocity which the first impulse impress'd. Bentley's Sermons.
UNRESOLVABLE. adj. Not to be solved; insoluble.
For a man to run headlong, while his ruin stares him in the face; still to press on to the embraces of sin, is a problem unresolvable upon any other ground, but that sin insinuates before it destroys. South's Sermons.
UNRESOLV'D. adj.
1. Not determined; having made no resolution.
On the western coast
Rideth a puissant navy: to our shores
Throng many doubtful, hollow-hearted friends,
Unarm'd, and unresolv'd to beat them back. Shaksp.
Turns, unresolv'd of fight,
Moves tardy back, and just recedes from fight. Dryden.
2. Not solved; not cleared.
I do not so magnify this method, to think it will perfectly clear every hard place, and leave no doubt unresolv'd. Locke.
UNRESOLV'ING. adj. Not resolving.
She her aims about her unresolving husband threw. Dryden.
UNRESPE'CTIVE. adj. Inattentive; taking little notice.
I will converse with iron-witted fools,
And unrespective boys; none are for me
That look into me with confid'rate eyes. Shaksp.
UNREST. n. f. Disquiet; want of tranquillity; inquietness.
Wife behest, those creeping flames by reason to subdue,
Before their rage grew to so great unrest. Fairy Queen.
Repose, sweet gold, for their unrest,
That have their aims out of the emper's chest. Shaksp.
Dismay'd confusion all posses'd;
Th' afflicted troop, hearing their plot deceiv'd:
Then runs amaz'd distress, with sad unrest.
To this, to that; to fly, to stand, to hide. Daniel.
Silence, in truth, would speak my sorrows best;
For deep wounds, can least their feelings tell;
Yet, let me borrow from mine own unrest,
But time to bid him, whom I lov'd, farewell. Wilton.
Up they rose,
As from unrest; and each the other viewing,
Soon found their eyes how open'd, and their minds
How darken'd! Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.
UNRESTOR'D. adj.
1. Not restored.
2. Not cleared from an attainder.
The son of an unrestored traitor has no pretences to the quality of his ancestors. Collier on Duelling.
UNRESTRAINED. adj.
1. Not confined; not hindered.
My tender age, in luxury was train'd,
With idle ease, and pageants entertain'd,
My hours my own, my pleasures unrestrain'd. Dryden.
2. Licentious; loose.
The taverns he daily doth frequent,
With unrestrained, loose companions. Shaksp.
3. Not limited.
Were there in this aphorism an unrestrained truth, yet were it not reasonable to infer from a caution, a non-usage, or abolition. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
UNRETRAC'TED. adj. Not revoked; not recalled.
The penitence of the criminal may have numbered him amongst the saints, when our unretracted uncharitableness may lend us to unquenchable flames. Govern. of the Tongue.
Nothing but plain malevolence can justify disunion. Malevolence shewn in a single, outward act, unretracted, or in habitual ill-nature. Collier on Friendship.
UNREVE'ALED. adj. Not told; not discovered.
Had ye once seen these her celestial treasures,
And unrevealed pleasures,
Then would ye wonder, and her praises sing. Spenser.
"Dear, fatal name! rest ever unrevealed;
Nor pass these lips, in holy silence seal'd." Pope.
UNREVENGED. adj. Not revenged.
So might we die, not envying them that live;
So would we die, not unrevenge'd all. Paisan.
Unhonour'd though I am,
Not unrevenge'd that impious act shall be. Dryden.
Great Pompey's shade complains that we are slow,
And Scipio's ghost walks unrevenge'd amongst us. Addison.
UNREVEREND. adj. Irreverent; disrespectful.
See not your bride in these unreverend robes. Shaksp.
Fie! unreverend tongue! to call her bad,
Whose sov'reignty so oft thou hast prefer'd,
With twenty thousand soul-confining oaths. Shaksp.
UNREVERENTLY. adv. Disrespectfully.
I did unreverently blame the gods,
Who wake for thee, though thou snore for thyself. B. Johns.
UNREVERSED. adj. Not revoked; not repealed.
She hath offer'd to the doom,
Which unreversed stands in effectual force,
A sea of melting tears. Shaksp.
UNREVO'KED. adj. Not recalled.
Hear my decree, which unrevok'd shall stand. Milton.
UNREWARD'ED. adj. Not rewarded; not recompensed.
Providence takes care that good offices may not pass unrewarded.
Since for common good I yield the fair,
My private loss let grateful Greece repair;
Not unrewarded let your prince complain,
That he alone has fought and bled in vain. Pope.
TO UNRID'DLE. v. a. To solve an enigma; to explain a problem.
Some kind power unriddle where it lies,
Whether my heart be faulty, or her eyes! Suckling.
The Platonic principles will not unriddle the doubt. Glavin.
A reverse often clears up the passage of an old poet, as the poet often serves to unriddle the reverse. Addison.
UNRID'ICULOUS. adj. Not ridiculous.
If an indifferent and unridiculous object could draw this au-stereous unto a smile, he hardly could with perpetuity resist proper motives thereof. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
TO UNRIG. v. a. To strip of the tackle.
Rhodes is the sovereign of the sea no more;
Their ships unrigg'd, and spent their naval store. Dryden.
UNRIG'HT. Wrong. In Spenser, this word should perhaps be unright.
What in most English writers useth to be loose, and as it were unright, in this author is well grounded, timely framed, and strongly trussed up together. Glossary to Spenser's Kal.
Shew that thy judgment is not unright. Wisd. xii.
UNRIG'HTOUS. adj. Unjust; wicked; sinful; bad.
Octavius here leapt into his room,
And it usurp'd by unrighteous doom;
But he this title justifi'd by might. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
Within a month!
Ere yet the salt of most unrighteous tears,
Had left the flushing in her galled eyes,
She married.—Oh most wicked speed!
Let the wicked man forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord. I. a. lv.
UNRIG'HTOUSLY. adv. Unjustly; wickedly; sinfully.
For them
Their foes a deadly Shibboleth devise:
By which unrightously it was decreed,
That none to trust, or profit should succeed,
Who would not swallow first a poi'sonous wicked weed. Dryden.
A man may fall undeserv'dly under publick disgrace, or is unrightously oppressed. Collier on Pride.
UNRIG'HTOUSNESS. n. f. Wickedness; injustice.
Our Romanists can no more abide this proposition converted, than themselves. All sin, say they, is a transgression of the law; but every transgression of the law is not sin. The apostle, therefore, turns it for us: all unrighteous- ness, says he, is sin; but every transgression of the law is un- righteousness, faith Austin upon this place. Hall.
Some things have a natural deformity in them, as perjury, perfidiousness, unrighteousness, and ingratitude. Tillotson.
UNRIG'HTUL. adj. Not right; not just.
Thou, which know'st the way
To plant unrightful kings, wilt know again
To pluck him headlong from th' usurp'd throne. Shaksp.
TO UNRIG. v. a. To deprive of a ring.
Be forc'd to impeach a broken hedge,
And pigs unring'd at vil. franc. pledge. Hudibras.
TO UNRIPE. v. a. [This word is improper; there being no difference between ripe and unripe; and the negative particle is therefore of no force; yet it is well authorized.] To cut open.
Like a traitor
Didst break that vow, and, with thy treach'rous blade,
Unrip'd the bowels of thy sov'reign's son. Shaksp.
He could not now, with his honour, so unripe, and put a lie upon all that he had said and done before, as to deliver him up. Bacon's Hen. VII.
We are angry with searchers, when they break open trunks, and unripe packs, and open sealed letters. Taylor.
Cato well observes, that friendship ought not to be un- ripped, but unfringed. Collier.
UNRIPE. n. f.
1. Immature; not fully concocted.
Purpose of is violent birth, but poor validity;
Which now, like fruits unripe, sticks on the tree,
But fall unshaken when they mellow be. Shaksp.
In this northern tract our hoarse throats,
Utter unripe, and ill-constrained notes. Waller.

He fix'd his unripe vengeance to defer,
Sought not the garden, but retir'd unseen,
To brood in secret on his gather'd spleen. Dryden.
2. Too early.
Who hath not heard of the valiant, wife, and just Doris-laus, whose unripe death doth yet, so many years since, draw tears from virtuous eyes? Sidney, b. ii.
UNRIPE'NED. adj. Not matured.
Were you with these, you'd soon forget
The pale, unripe beauties of the north. Addison's Cato.
UNRIPE'NESS. n. f. Immaturity; want of ripeness.
The ripeness, or unripeness, of the occasion, must ever be well weighed; and generally it is good to commit the beginnings of all great actions to Argus, with his hundred eyes;
and the ends to Briareus, with his hundred hands. Bacon.
UNRI'VALED. adj.
1. Having no competitor.
Honour forbid! at whose unrivall'd shrine,
Ease, pleasure, virtue, all our sex resign. Pope.
2. Having no peer or equal.
TO UNRO'L. v. a. To open what is rolled or convolved.
O honor!
The queen of nations, from her antient seat,
Is sunk for ever in the dark abyss;
Time has unroll'd her glories to the last,
And now clos'd up the volume. Dryden's Ann. for 1700.
UNROMANTICK. adj. Contrary to romance.
It is a base, unromantick spirit not to wait on you. Swift.
TO UNROOF. v. a. To strip off the roof or covering of houses.
The rabble should have first unroof'd the city,
Ere to prevail'd with me. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
UNROO'STED. adj. Driven from the roof.
Thou dotard! thou art woman-tir'd, unroosted,
By thy old dame Parlet here. Shaksp. Winter Tale.
UNROUGH. adj. Smooth.
Siward's son,
And many unrough youths, that even now
Protect their first of manhood. Shaksp. Macbeth.
TO UNROO'T. v. a. To tear from the roots; to extirpate; to eradicate.
Since you've made the days and nights as one,
To wear your gentle limbs in my affairs,
Be bold; you do so grow in my requital,
That nothing can unroot you. Shaksp.
Unroot the forest oaks, and bear away
Flocks, folds, and trees, an undistinguish'd prey. Dryden.
UNRO'UNDED. adj. Not shaped, not cut to a round,
Those unsh'd pistolets,
That more than cannon-shot avails or lets;
Which, negligently left unrounded, look Like many-angled figures in the book
Of some dread conjurer. Dornes.
UNRO'YAL. adj. Unprincipally; not royal.
By the advice of his envious counsellors, he sent them with unroyal reproaches to Mufidorus and Pyrocles, as if they had done traitorously. Sidney.
TO UNRU'FFLE. v. n. To cease from commotion, or agitation.
Where'er he guides his finny courtiers,
The waves unruffle, and the sea subsides. Dryden.
UNRU'FFLED. adj. Calm; tranquil; not tumultuous.
Vent all thy passion, and I'll stand its shock,
Calm and unruffled as a summer's tea,
When not a breath of wind flies o'er its surface. Addison.
UNRU'LED. adj. Not directed by any superiour power.
The realm was left, like a ship in a storm, amidst all the raging furies, unruled and undirected of any; for they to whom the was committed, faint in their labour, or forsook their charge. Spenser.
UNRU'LINESS. n. f. [from unruly.] Turbulence; tumultuousness; licentiousness.
By the negligence of some who were hardly to be commanded, and by the unruliness of others, who without leave were gone a-shore, so fair an occasion of victory was neglected. Knol.
No care was had to curb the unruliness of anger, or the exorbitance of desire. Amongst all their sacrifices, they never sacrificed so much as one lust. South's Sermons.
UNRU'LY. adj. Turbulent; ungovernable; licentious; tumultuous.
In sacred bands of wedlock ty'd
To Thetis, a loose unruly swain;
Who had more joy to range the forest wide,
And chase the savage beast with bulky pain. Fairy Queen.
Wanting the manage of unruly jades. Shaksp. Rich. II.
The best and fountest of his time hath been but rash;
then must we look from his age, to receive but unruly waywardness. Shaksp. K. Lear.
The tongue is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison. Ia. iii.
Thou dost a better life, and nobler vigour give;
Dost each unruly appetite controul. Roscommon.

Love

UNS

Love insults, disguised in the cloud,
And welcome force of that unuly croud.
Passions kept their place, and transgressed not the boundaries of their proper natures; nor were the disorders begun, which are occasioned by the licence of unuly appetites. Glauco.
You must not go where you may dangers meet.
Th' unuly sword will no distinction make,
And beastly will not there give wounds, but take. Dryden.
UNSAFE. adj. Not secure; hazardous; dangerous.
If they would not be drawn to seem his adversaries, yet others should be taught how unsafe it was to continue his friends. Hooker, b. v.
With speed retir'd
Where erst was thickest fight, th' angelick throng,
And left large field, unsafe within the wind
Of such commotion. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi.
Uncertain ways unsafe are,
And doubt a greater mischief than despair. Denham.
Phlegyan robbers made unsafe the road. Dryden.
UNSAFELY. adv. Not securely; dangerously.
Take it, while yet 'tis praise, before my rage,
Unsafely just, break loose on this bad age;
So bad, that thou thyself hadst no defence
From vice, but barely by departing hence. Dryden.
As no man can walk, so neither can he think, uneasily or unsafely; but in using, as his legs, so his thoughts amiss, which a virtuous man never doth. Grew.
UNSAID. adj. Not uttered; not mentioned.
Chanticleer shall with his words unsaid. Dryden.
That I may leave nothing material unsaid, among the feveral ways of imitation, I shall place translation and paraphrase. Fulton's Clastics.
UNSAILED. adj. Not pickled or seasoned with salt.
The murietick scurvy, induced by two great quantity of sea-salt, and common among mariners, is cured by a diet of fresh unsalted things, and watery liquor acidulated. Arbutnot.
UNSALED. adj. [in salutatur, Lat.] Not saluted.
Gods! I prate;
And the most noble mother of the world
Leave unsaluted. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.
UNSACTIFIED. adj. Unholy; not consecrated.
Her obsequies have been so far enlarged
As we have warranty; her death was doubtful;
And but that great command o'erways the order,
She should in ground unsanctified have lodg'd
'Till the last trump. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
UNSATISFIED. adj. [in satisfabilis, Lat.] Not to be satisfied;
greedy without bounds.
Unsatisfiable in their longing to do all manner of good to all the creatures of God, but especially men. Hooker, b. i.
Craffus the Roman, for his unsatisfiable greediness, was called the gulph of avarice. Raleigh.
UNSATISFACTORY. n. f. Failure of giving satisfaction.
That which most deters me from such trials, is their un- satisfactoriness, though they should succeed. Boyle.
UNSATISFACTORY. adj. Not giving satisfaction; not clearing the difficulty.
That speech of Adam, The woman thou gavest me to be with me, she gave me of the tree, and I did eat, is an un- satisfactory reply, and therein was involved a very important error. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
Latria to the cross, is point blank against the definition of the council of Nice; and it is an unsatisfactory answer to say, they only were against latria given to images for themselves. Stillingfleet.
UNSATISFIEDNESS. n. f. [from unsatisfied.] The state of being not satisfied; want of fulness.
Between my own unsatisfiedness in conscience, and a necessity of satisfying the importunities of some, I was persuaded to chuse rather what was safe, than what seemed just. K. Charles.
That unsatisfiedness with transitory fruitions, that men deplore as the unhappiness of their nature, is indeed the privilege of it, as it is the prerogative of men not to be pleased with such fond toys as children doat upon. Boyle.
UNSATISFIED. adj.
1. Not contented; not pleased.
O Elizabeth being to resolve upon a great officer, and being by some put in some doubt of that person, whom she meant to advance, said, she was like one with a lantern seeking a man, and seemed unsatisfied in the choice of a man for that place. Bacon.
Flashy wits, who cannot fathom a large discourse, must be very much unsatisfied of me.
Concerning the analytical preparation of gold, they have persons unsatisfied. Boyle.
2. Not filled; not gratified to the full.
Though he were unsatisfied in getting,
Yet in bestowing he was most princely. Shakespeare.

Whether shall I, by justly plaguing
Him whom I hate, be more unjustly cruel
To her I love? or, being kind to her,
Be cruel to myself, and leave unsatisfied
My anger and revenge? Denham's Song.
Eternity, human nature can't look into, without a religious awe: our thoughts are lost in the endless view, and return to us weary and unsatisfied, without finding bounds or place to fix on. Rogers's Sermon.
UNSATISFYING. adj. Unable to gratify to the full.
Nor is fame only unsatisfying in itself, but the desire of it lays us open to many accidental troubles. Addison.
UNSAVOURINESS. adj. [from unsavoury.]
1. Bad taste.
2. Bad smell.
If we concede a national unsavouriness in any people, yet shall we find the Jews less subject hereto than any. Brown.
UNSAVOURY. adj.
1. Taffles.
Can that which is unsavoury be eaten without salt? or is there any taste in the white of an egg? Job vi. 6.
2. Having a bad taste.
Unsavoury food, perhaps,
To spiritual natures. Milton's Par. Lost.
3. Having an ill smell; fetid.
Some may emit an unsavoury odour, which may happen from the quality of what they have taken. Brown.
4. Unpleasant; disgusting.
Things of so mean regard, although necessary to be ordered, are notwithstanding very unsavoury, when they come to be disputed of; because disputation pre-supposeth some difficulty in the matter. Hooker, b. v.
Unsavoury news; but how made he escape? Shakespeare.
To UNSAVY. v. a. To retract; to recant; to deny what has been said.
Call you me fair? that fair again unsav;
Demetrius loves you, fair. Shakespeare.
Say and unsav, feign, flatter, or abjure. Milton.
How soon
Would height recall high thoughts, how soon unsav
What feign'd submission frow. Milton's Par. Lost.
To say, and ftrait unsav, pretending first
To fly pain, professing next the spy,
Argues no leader, but a liar trac'd. Milton.
There is nothing said there, which you may have occasion to unsav hereafter. Atterbury.
UNSCALY. adj. Having no scales.
The jointed lobster, and unscale foale.
UNSCARRED. adj. Not marked with wounds.
And must she die for this? O let her live;
So she may live unscar'd from bleeding slaughter,
I will confess she was not Edward's daughter. Shakespeare.
UNSCOLASTICK. adj. Not bred to literature.
Notwithstanding these learned disputants, it was to the un- scholastick statesman, that the world owed their peace and liberties. Lake.
UNSCHOLED. adj. Uneducated; not learned.
When the apostles were ordained to alter the laws of heathenish religion, they were, St. Paul excepted, unscholed and unlettered men. Hooker, b. v.
UNSCORCHED. adj. Not touched by fire.
His hand,
Not sensible of fire, remain'd unscor'd. Shakespeare.
UNSCOURED. adj. Not cleaned by rubbing.
Th' enrolled penalties,
Which have, like unscor'd armour, hung by th' wall,
And none of them been worn. Shakespeare.
UNSCRAITCHED. adj. Not torn.
I with much expedient march
Have brought a counter-check before your gates,
To save unscritch'd your city's threaten'd cheeks. Shakespeare.
UNSCREENED. adj. Not covered; not protected.
Those balls of burnished brass, the tops of churches are adorned with, derive their glittering brightness from their being exposed, unscreened, to the sun's refulgent beams. Boyle.
UNSCRIPTURAL. adj. Not defensible by scripture.
The doctrine delivered in my sermon was neither new nor unscriptural, nor in itself false. Atterbury.
To UNSEAL. v. a. To open any thing sealed.
This new glare of light
Cast sudden on his face, unseal'd his sight. Dryden.
UNSEAL'D. adj.
1. Wanting a seal.
Your oaths
Are words, and poor conditions but unseal'd. Shakespeare.
2. Having the seal broken.
To UNSEAM. v. a. To rip; to cut open.
He ne'er shook hands, nor bid farewell to him,
'Till he unseam'd him from the nape to th' chops,
And fix'd his head upon our battlements. Shakespeare.

UNSEARCHABLE. adj. Inscrutable; not to be explored.
All is best, though we often doubt
What th' unsearchable disposer
Of highest wisdom brings about,
And ever best found in the close. Milton's Agonistes.
Thou hast vouchsaf'd
This friendly condescension, to relate Things else by me unsearchable. Milton's Par. Lost.
Job discourseth of the secrets of nature, and unsearchable
perfections of the works of God. Tillotson.
These counsels of God are to us unsearchable; neither has he left us in scripture any marks, by which we may infallibly conclude ourselves in that happy number he has chosen. Rogers.
It is a vast hindrance to the enrichment of our understandings, if we spend too much of our time among infinities and unsearchables. Watts's Logic.
UNSEARCHABLENESS. n. f. Impossibility to be explored.
The unsearchableness of God's ways should be a bridle to restrain presumption, and not a sanctuary for spirits of error. Bramhall's Answer to Hobbes.
UNSEASONABLE. adj.
1. Not suitable to time or occasion; unfit; untimely; ill-timed.
Zeal, unless it be rightly guided, when it endeavours the most busily to please God, forceth upon him those unseasonable offices which please him not. Hooker, b. v.
Their counsel must seem very unseasonable, who advise men to suspect that wherewith the world hath had, by their own account, twelve hundred years acquaintance. Hooker.
It is then a very unseasonable time to plead laws, when swords are in the hands of the vulgar. Spenser's Ireland.
The commissioners pulled down or defaced all images in churches, in such unseasonable fashion, as is done in hostility. Hayward.
This digression I conceived not unseasonable for this place, nor upon this occasion. Clarendon.
Haply mention may arise
Of something not unseasonable to ask. Milton.
Timothy lay out a-nights, and went abroad often at un- seasonable hours. Arbutnot.
2. Not agreeable to the time of the year.
Like an unseasonable stormy day,
Which makes the silver rivers down their shores,
As if the world were all dissolv'd in tears. Shakespeare.
3. Late; as, unseasonable time of night.
UNSEASONABLENESS. n. f. Disagreement with time or place.
The moral goodness, unfitness, and unseasonableness of moral or natural actions, falls not within the verge of a brutal faculty. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
UNSEASONABLY. adv. Not seasonably; not agreeably to time or occasion.
Some things it asketh unseasonably, when they need not to be prayed for, as deliverance from thunder and tempest, when no danger is nigh. Hooker, b. v.
Leave to fathom such high points as these,
Nor be ambitious, ere the time, to please;
Unseasonably wise, till age and cares
Have form'd thy soul to manage great affairs. Dryden.
By the methods prescribed, more good, and less mischief, will be done in acute distempers, than by medicines improperly and unseasonably applied. Arbutnot.
Ulysses yielded unseasonably, and the strong passion for his country should have given him vigilance. Brown.
UNSEASONED. adj.
1. Unseasonable; untimely; ill-timed. Out of use.
Your majesty hath been this fortnight ill,
And these unseason'd hours perforce must add Unto your sickness. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.
I think myself in a better plight for a lender than you are;
the which hath something emboldened me to this unseasoned intrusion. Shakespeare.
2. Unformed; not qualified by use.
'Tis an unseason'd courtier; advise him. Shakespeare.
3. Irregular; inordinate.
The commissioners pulled down or defaced all images in churches, in such, unseasonable and unseasoned fashion, as if done in hostility. Hayward.
4. Not kept till fit for use.
5. Not salted; as, unseasoned meat.
UNSECONDED. adj.
1. Not supported.
Him did you leave
Second to none, unseconded by you,
To look upon the hideous god of war
In disadvantage. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.
2. Not exemplified a second time.
Strange and unseconded shapes of worms succeeded. Brown.
To UNSECRET. v. a. To disclose; to divulge.
He that consulteth what he should do, should not declare what he will do; but let princes beware, that the unsecreting of their affairs comes not from themselves. Bacon.

UNS

UNSECRET. adj. Not close; not trusty.
Who shall be true to us,
When we are so unsecret to ourselves? Shakespeare.
UNSECURE. adj. Not safe.
Love, though most sure,
Yet always to itself seems unsecure. Denham.
UNSEDUCT. adj. Not drawn to ill.
If she remain unseduct'd, you not making it appear otherwise; for your ill opinion, and th' assault you have made to her chastity, you shall answer me with your sword. Shakespeare.
Among innumerable false, unmov'd,
Unshaken, unseduct'd, unterrify'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.
UNSEEING. adj. Wanting the power of vision.
I shou'd have scratch'd out your unseeing eyes,
To make my master out of love with thee. Shakespeare.
To UNSEEM. v. n. Not to seem. Not in use.
You wrong the reputation of your name,
In so unseemly to confess receipt
Of that, which hath so faithfully been paid. Shakespeare.
UNSEEMLINESS. n. f. Indecency; indecorum; uncomeliness.
All as before his fight, whom we fear, and whose presence to offend with any the least unseemliness, we would be surely as loth as they, who most reprehend or deride that we do. Hooker, b. v.
UNSEMLY. n. f. Indecent; uncomely; unbecoming.
Contentions as yet were never able to prevent two evils;
the one a mutual exchange of unseemly and unjust disgraces offered by men, whose tongues and passions are out of rule;
the other a common hazard of both, to be made a prey by such as study how to work with most advantage in private. Hooker.
Let us now devise
What best may for the present serve to hide
The parts of each from other, that seem most
To shame obnoxious, and unseemly seen. Milton.
Her gifts
Were such, as under government well seem'd;
Unseemly to bear rule. Milton's Par. Lost.
My sons, let your unseemly discord cease;
If not in friendship, live at least in peace. Dryden.
I wish every unseemly idea, and wanton expression had been banish'd from amongst them. Watts.
UNSEMLY. adj. Indecently; unbecomingly.
Charity doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own. 1 Cor. xiii. 5.
Unmanly dread invades the French atony'd;
Unseemly yelling; distant hills return
The hideous noise. Philips.
UNSEEN. adj.
1. Not seen; not discovered.
A jest unseen, inscrutable, invisible,
As a nose on a man's face, or a weathercock on a steeple. Sh.
Her father and myself
Will to dispose ourselves, that seeing, unseen,
We may of the encounter frankly judge. Shakespeare, Hamlet.
A painter became a physician; whereupon one said to him, you have done well; for before the faults of your work were seen, but now they are unseen. Bacon.
Here may I always on this downy grass,
Unknown, unseen, my easy minutes pass.
Millions of spiritual creatures walk the earth
Unseen, both when we wake, and when we sleep. Milton.
At his birth a star
Unseen before in heaven, proclaims him come;
And guides the eastern sages who enquire
His place, to offer incense, myrrh, and gold. Milton.
He that on her his bold hand lays,
With Cupid's pointed arrows plays:
They with a touch, they are so keen,
Wound us unshot, and the unseen. Waller.
The footsteps of the deity he treads,
And secret moves along the crowded space,
Unseen of all the rude Pheacian race. Pope's Odyssey.
2. Invisible; undiscoverable.
The weeds of heresy being grown into ripeness, do, even in the very cutting down, scatter oftentimes those seeds which for a while lie unseen and buried in the earth; but afterward freshly spring up again no less pernicious than at the first. Hooker.
On the came,
Led by her heavenly maker, though unseen
And guided by his voice. Milton's Par. Lost.
3. Unkilled; unexperienced.
He was not unseen in the affections of the court, but had not reputation enough to reform it. Clarendon.
UNSEMLISH. adj. Not addicted to private interest.
The most interested cannot purpose any thing so much to their own advantage, notwithstanding which the inclination is nevertheless unselfish. Speator, N. 588.
UNSENT. adj.
1. Not sent.
2. Un-

2. UNSENT for. Not called by letter or messenger.
If a physician should go from house to house unsent for, and enquire what woman hath a cancer, or what man a fistula, he would be as unwelcome as the disease itself. Taylor.
Somewhat of weighty consequence brings you here to often, and unsent for. Dryden.
UNSEPARABLE adj. Not to be parted; not to be divided.
Oh world, thy slippery turns! Friends now fast sworn,
Who twine as 'twere in love
Unseparable, shall, within this hour,
Break out to bitterest enmity. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
UNSEPARATED adj. Not parted.
There seek the Theban bard;
To whom Persephone, entire and whole,
Gave to retain th' unseparated soul. Pope's Odyssey.
UNSERVCEABLE adj. Useless; bringing no advantage or convenience.
The beast, impatient of his smarting wound,
Thought with his wings to fly above the ground;
But his late wounded wing unservceable found. Spenser.
'Tis certainly demonstrated, that the condensation and expansion of any proportion of the air, is always proportional to the weight incumbent upon it: so that if the atmosphere had been much greater or less than it is, it would on the surface of the earth, have been unservceable for vegetation and life. Bentley's Sermons.
It can be no unservceable design to religion, to undeceive men in so important a point. Rogers's Sermons.
UNSERVCEABLY adj. Without use; without advantage.
It does not enlarge the dimensions of the globe, or lie idly and unservceably there, but part of it is introduced into the plants which grow thereon, and the rest either remounts again, with the ascending vapour, or is wash'd down into rivers. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
UNSET adj. Not set; not placed.
They urge that God left nothing in his word undescribed, nothing unset down; and therefore charged them strictly to keep themselves into that without any alteration. Hooker.
TO UNSETTLE v. a.
1. To make uncertain.
Such a doctrine unsettles the titles to kingdoms and estates; for if the actions from which such settlements spring were illegal, all that is built upon them must be so too: but the last is absurd, therefore the first must be so likewise. Arbutnot.
2. To move from a place.
As big as he was, did there need any great matter to unsettle him. L'Estrange.
3. To overthrow.
UNSETTLED adj.
1. Not fixed in resolution; not determined; not steady.
Impartially judge, whether from the very first day that our religion was unsettled, and church government flung out of doors, the civil government has ever been able to fix upon a sure foundation. South's Sermons.
A solemn air, and the best comforter
To an unsettled fancy, cure thy brains. Shakespeare.
Prepar'd I was not
For such a business; there am I found
So much unsettled. Shakespeare.
With them, a bastard of the king deca'd,
And all th' unsettled humours of the land,
Rash, inconsiderate, fiery, voluntary.
Uncertain and unsettled he remains
Deep vers'd in books, and shallow in himself. Milton.
A covetous man deliberated betwixt the qualms of a wambling stomach, and an unsettled mind. L'Estrange.
Unsettled virtue stormy may appear;
Honour, like mine, serenely is severe. Dryden.
2. Unequable; not regular; changeable.
March and September, the two equinoxes, are the most windy and tempestuous, the most unsettled and unquable seasons in most countries. Bentley's Sermons.
3. Not established.
My cruel fate,
And doubts attending an unsettled state,
Forc'd me to guard my coast. Dryden.
4. Not fixed in a place or abode.
David supposed that it could not stand with the duty which he owed unto God, to set himself in an house of cedar trees, and to behold the ark of the Lord's covenant unsettled. Hooker.
UNSETTLEDNESS n. s.
1. Irresolution; undetermined state of mind.
2. Uncertainty; fluctuation.
The unsettledness of my condition has hitherto put a stop to my thoughts concerning it. Dryden.
3. Want of fixity.
When the sun shines upon a river, though its waves roll this way and that by the wind, yet, for all their unsettledness, the sun strikes them with a direct and certain beam. South.
UNSHIVERED adj. Not parted; not divided.
Honour and policy, like unshiver'd friends,
I th' war do grow together. Shakespeare. Coriolanus

UNS

Their bands, though slack, no dissolution fear;
Th' unshiver'd parts the greatest pressure bear;
Though loose, and fit to flow, they still cohere. Blackmore.
To UNSHAKE v. a. To make otherways than the sex commonly is.
All you spirits
That tend on mortal thoughts, unsex me here,
And fill me, from the crown to th' toe, top full
Of direct cruelty. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
UNSHADOWED adj. Not clouded; not darkened.
He alone sees all things with an unshadowed, comprehensive vision, who eminently is all. Glaville.
UNSHAKEABLE adj. Not subject to concussion.
Your ile stands,
As Neptune's park, ribbed and paled in
With rocks unshakeable, and roaring waters. Shakespeare.
UNSHAKED adj. Not shaken. Not in use.
I know but one,
That unaffailable holds on his rank,
Unshak'd of motion. Shakespeare. Julius Caesar.
UNSHAKEN adj.
1. Not agitated; not moved.
Purpose is
Of violent birth, but poor validity;
Which now, like fruits unripe, sticks on the tree,
But fall unshaken, when they mellow be. Shakespeare.
The wicked's spite against God, is but like a madman's running his head against the wall, that leaves the wall unshaken, but daffes his own brains out. Boyle.
2. Not subject to concussion.
3. Not weakened in resolution; not moved.
Among innumerable false, unmov'd,
Unshaken, uneduc'd, untir'd.
Ill wast thou shroudest then,
O patient son of God! yet only flood't
Unshaken. Milton's Par. Regain'd, b. iv.
Employ it in unfeigned piety towards God, in unshaken duty to his vicegerent. Sprat.
His principles were founded in reason, and supported by virtue, and therefore did not lie at the mercy of ambition: his notions were no less steady and unshaken, than just and upright. Addison.
TO UNSHAKLE v. a. To loose from bonds.
A laudable freedom of thought unshakes their minds from the narrow prejudices of education, and opens their eyes to a more extensive view of the publick good. Addison.
UNSHAKED adj. Not shamed.
The brave man seeks not popular applause;
Unsham'd, though foil'd, he does the best he can:
Force is of brutes, but honour is of man. Dryden.
UNSHAPEN adj. Mismatched; deformed.
This unshapen earth we now inhabit, is the form it was found in, when the waters had retired. Burnet.
Gasping for breath, th' unshapen Phocæe die,
And on the boiling wave extended lie. Addison.
UNSHAKED adj. Not partaken; not had in common.
Bliss, as thou hast part, to me is bliss;
Tediuous unshar'd with thee, and odious soon. Milton.
TO UNSHATH v. a. To draw from the scabbard.
Executioner, unshath thy sword;
Clifford's manhood lies upon his tongue. Shakespeare.
Mowbray, the bishop Scroop, Hastings, and all
Are brought to the correction of your law:
There is not now a rebel's sword unshath'd. Shakespeare.
Viewing the Trojan reliques, the unshath'd
Æneas's sword. Denham.
Arcite, his sword unshath'd. Dryden.
Far hence be souls profane!
Now, Trojan, take the way thy fates afford;
Assume thy courage, and unshath thy sword. Dryden.
The Roman senate has resolv'd,
'Till time give better prospects, still to keep
The sword unshath'd, and turn its edge on Cæsar. Addison.
Each chief his sev'nfold shield display'd,
And half unshath'd the shining blade. Pope.
UNSHED adj. Not split.
To blood unshed the rivers must be turn'd. Milton.
UNSHETERED adj. Wanting a screen; wanting protection.
He is breeding that worm, which will smite this gourd, and leave him unshetered to that scorching wrath of God, which will make the improvement of Jonah's passionate wish, that God would take away his life, his most rational desire. Decay of Piety.
UNSHIELDED adj. Not guarded by the shield.
He try'd a tough, well-chosen spear!
Though Cygnus then did no defence provide,
But scornful offer'd his unshielded side. Dryden.
TO UNSHIRT v. a. To take out of a ship.
At the cape we landed for fresh water; but discovering a leak, we unshipped our goods, and watered there. Guliver.
UNSHO adj. Not shod.

UNS

Their feet unshod, their bodies wrapt in rags;
And both as swift on foot, as chafed flags. Fairy Queen. Fer. ii.
Withhold thy foot from being unshod. Clarendon.
The king's army, naked and unshod, would, through those inclosed parts, have done them little harm. Pope.
UNSHOOK part. adj. Not shaken.
Pit, box, and gallery in convulsions hurl'd,
Thou stand'st unshook amidst a bustling world.
UNSHORN adj. Not clipped.
This strength, diffus'd
No less through all my sinews, joints and bones,
Than thine, while I preserv'd these locks unshorn,
The pledge of my unviolated vow. Milton's Agonistes.
Straight as a line in beauteous order stood,
Of oaks unshorn, a venerable wood. Dryden.
UNSHOT part. adj. Not hit by shot.
He that on her his bold hand lays,
With Cupid's pointed arrow plays;
They, with a touch, they are so keen,
Wound us unshot, and the unken. Waller.
TO UNSHOUT v. a. To annihilate, or retract a shout.
Unshout the noise that banish'd Marcus;
Repeal him, with the welcome of his mother. Shakespeare.
UNSHOWERED adj. Not watered by showers.
Nor is Oris seen
In Memphian grove or green,
Trampling th' unshower'd grass with lowings loud. Milton.
UNSHRINKING adj. Not recoiling; not shunning danger or pain.
Your son, my lord, has paid a soldier's debt;
He only liv'd but till he was a man;
The which no sooner had his prowess confirm'd,
In the unshrinking station where he fought,
But, like a man, he died. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
UNSHUNNABLE adj. Inevitable.
'Tis the plague of great ones,
Prerogativ'd are they less than the bafe;
'Tis destiny unshunnable like death. Shakespeare. Othello.
UNSTAYED adj.
1. Not parted by a sieve.
The ground one year at rest, forget not thou
With richest dung to hearten it again,
Or with unstayed alhes. May's Virgil.
2. Not tried.
Affection! puh! you speak like a green girl,
Unstayed in such perilous circumstance. Shakespeare.
UNSTAYED adj. Not seeing. A low word, used only with unseen, as in the example following. Probably formed by corruption of unsteady.
They'll say our business to reform
The church and state is but a worm;
For to subscribe, unsteady, unseen,
To an unknown church discipline. Hudibras.
UNSTAYED adj. Invisibile; not seen.
Beauties that from worth arise,
Are like the grace of deities,
Still present with us, though unsteady. Suckling.
UNSTAYEDLINESS n. s. [from unsteady.] Deformity; disagreeableness to the eye.
The *unsteadyline*s in the legs, may be helped, by wearing a laced stocking. Wife's Man's Surgery.
UNSTAYEDLY adj. Disagreeable to the sight.
On my knees I beg,
That you'll vouchsafe me raiment, bed, and food.—
—Good Sir, no more: these are unsteady tricks. Shakespeare.
Those blossoms also, and those dropping gums,
That lie bestrown, unsteady, and unsmooth,
Ask riddance, if we mean to tread with ease. Milton.
Amongst the rest, a small, unsteady root,
But of divine effect, he call'd me out. Milton.
It must have been a fine genius for gardenings, that could have formed such an unsteady hollow, into so beautiful an area. Speculator, N° 477.
UNSWERABLE adj. [from insincerus, Lat.]
1. Not hearty; not faithful.
2. Not genuine; impure; adulterated.
I have so often met with chymical preparations, which I have found unswearable, that I dare scarce trust any. Boyle.
3. Not sound; not solid.
Myrrha was joy'd the welcome news to hear;
But, clogg'd with guilt, the joy was unswearable. Dryden.
UNSWERABLE adj. Adulterated; cheat.
A spirit of sea-salt may, without any unswearableness, be so prepared, as to dissolve crude gold. Boyle.
TO UNSWEAT v. a. To deprive of strength.
Not are the nerves of his compacted strength,
Stretch'd and dissolv'd into unswear'd length. Denham.

UNS

Now toys and trifles from their Athens come,
And dates and pepper have unswear'd Rome. Dryden.
The affected purity of the French has unswear'd their heroic verse. The language of an epic poem is almost wholly figurative: yet are they so fearful of a metaphor, that no example of Virgil can encourage them to be bold with safety. Dryden.
UNSWORN adj. Not sworn to.
By the command of Domitian, when cast into a chaldron of burning oil, he came out unsworn. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Three men passed through a fiery furnace, untouch'd, unsworn. Stephen's Sermons.
UNSWORN adj. Not sworn to.
Anxur feels the cool refreshing breeze
Blown off the sea, and all the dewy strand
Lies cover'd with a smooth, unsworn sand. Addison.
UNSWORN adj. Nerveless; weak.
Two special reasons
May to you, perhaps, seem much unsworn'd,
And yet to me are strong. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
UNSWORN adj. Impeccable.
A perfect unsworn obedience, free from particular acts of transgression. Rogers.
UNSWORN adj. Not measured; not computed.
This tiger-footed rage, when it shall find
The harm of unsworn'd swiftness will, too late,
Tie leaden pounds to's heels. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
UNSWORN adj. Wanting skill; wanting knowledge.
Unsworn'd in Hellebore, if thou shouldst try
To mix it, and mistake the quantity,
The rules of physick would against thee cry. Dryden.
Unsworn'd and young, yet something still I writ,
Of Cæsar's beauty, join'd to Cecil's wit. Prior.
Not eastern monarchs on their nuptial day,
In dazzling gold and purple shine to gay,
As the bright natives of th' unlabour'd field,
Unvers'd in spinning, and in looms unsworn'd. Blackmore.
Poets, like painters, thus unsworn'd to trace
The naked nature, and the living grace,
With gold and jewels cover every part,
And hide with ornaments their want of art. Pope.
UNSWORN adj. Wanting art; wanting knowledge.
This overdone, or come tardy off, though it make the unsworn laugh, cannot but make the judicious grieve. Shakespeare.
Hear his sighs, though mute:
Unsworn with what words to pray, let me Interpret for him. Milton's Par. Lost.
A man, unsworn in syllogism, could perceive the weakness and inconclusiveness of a long, artificial, and plausible discourse. Locke.
Using a man's words, according to the propriety of the language, though it be not always understood, leaves the blame on him, who is so unsworn in the language, as not to understand it, when used as it ought. Locke.
UNSWORN adv. Without knowledge; without art.
You speak unswornly; or, if your knowledge be more, it is much darkened in your malice. Shakespeare.
UNSWORN n. s. Want of art; want of knowledge.
The sweetness of her countenance did give such a grace to what she did, that it did make handsome the unhandfome-ness, and make the eye force the mind to believe that there was a praise in that unswornness. Sidney.
Let no prices be heightened by the necessity or unswornness of the contractor. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
UNSLAIN adj. Not killed.
If there were any who felt a pity of so great a fall, and had yet any sparks of unslain duty left in them towards me, yet durst they not shew it. Sidney, b. iii.
Not hecatomb unslain, nor vows unpaid,
On Greeks accurs'd, this dire contagion bring. Dryden.
UNSLAKED adj. Not quenched.
Her desires new rous'd,
And yet unslak'd, will kindle in her fancy,
And make her eager to renew the feast. Dryden.

She gathers tribute large, and on the board
Heaps with unsparring hand. Milton.

UNSPER'AK. v. a. To retract; to recant.
I put myself to thy direction, and
Unspoke mine own detraction; here abjure
The taints and blames I laid upon myself. Shakespeare.

UNSPER'ABLE. adj. Not to be expreffed.
A thing, which uttered with true devotion and zeal of heart, affordeth to God himself that glory, that aid to the weakest sort of men, to the most perfect that solid comfort, which is unspokeable. Hooker, b. v.
A heavier task could not have been impos'd,
Than I to speak my grief unspokeable. Shakespeare.
Both address for fight
Unspokeable: for who, though with the tongue
Of angels, can relate?
The comfort it conveys is something bigger than the capacities of mortality; mighty, and unspokeable; and not to be understood, till it comes to be felt.
This fills the minds of weak men with groundless fears, and unspokeable rage towards their fellow subjects. Addison.

Venus withdraws,
Unsped the service of the common cause. Garth.

UNSPER'NT. adj. Not wasted; not diminished; not weakened;
not exhausted.
The found inclosed within the sides of the bell, cometh forth at the holes unspent and more strong. Bacon.
Thy fame, not circumscrib'd with English ground,
Flies like the nimble journeys of the light,
And is, like that, unspent too in its flight. Dryden.

UNSPER'RE. v. a. To remove from its orb.
You put me off with limber vows; but I,
Though you would seek to unspere the stars with oaths,
Should yet say, Sir, no going. Shakespeare.

UNSPER'RY. v. a. To remove from its orb.
Let my lamp at midnight hour
Be seen in some high lonely tow'r,
Where I may oft out-watch the bear,
With three-fold Hermes, or unspere
The spirit of Plato, to unfold
What worlds, or what vast regions hold
Th' immortal mind. Milton.

UNSPER'ED. adj. Not discovered; not seen.
With narrow search I must walk round
This garden, and no corner leave unspyr'd. Milton.

UNSPER'RY. v. a. To dispirit; to depress; to deject.
Denmark has continued ever since weak and unspirited,
bent only upon safety.
Could it be in the power of any temporal loss, so much to discompose and unspire my soul? Norris.

UNSPER'LT. adj.
1. Not shed.
That blood which thou and thy great grandfire shed;
And all that since these sister nations bled,
Had been unspilt, had happy Edward known,
That all the blood he spilt had been his own. Denham.

2. Not spoiled; not marred.
To borrow to-day, and to-morrow to mis,
For lender or borrower noance it is;
Then have of thine own, without lending unspilt. Tupper.

UNSPER'RY. v. a. To dispirit; to depress; to deject.
Denmark has continued ever since weak and unspirited,
bent only upon safety.
Could it be in the power of any temporal loss, so much
to discompose and unspire my soul? Norris.

UNSPER'LT. adj.
1. Not plundered; not pillaged.
All the way that they fled, for very despatch, in their return they utterly wasted whatsoever they had before left un- spoiled. Spenser's State of Ireland.
The English search'd the rivers in such sort, as they left few ships unspoiled or untaken. Hayward.
Her holy limbs
Her holy limbs. Dryden.

2. Not marred.
UNSPER'TED. adj.
1. Not marked with any stain.
A milk-white hind,
Without unspotted, innocent within.
Seven bullocks yet unyok'd for Phœbus chuse,
And for Diana seven unspotted ewes. Dryden.

2. Immaculate; not tainted with guilt.
Satyrus bid him other business ply,
Than hunt the steps of pure, unspotted maid. Fairy Queen.
A heart unspotted is not easily daunted. Shakespeare. Hen. VI.
There is no king, be his cause never so spotless, if it come to the arbitrement of swords, can try it out with all unspotted soldiers. Shakespeare. Hen. V.
Pure religion and undefiled is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world. James i. 27.
Wisdom is the grey hair to men, and an unspotted life is old age. Apocrypha.
Make her his eternal bride;
And from her fair unspotted tide
Two blissful twins are to be born.
Thou wilt not leave me in the loathsome grave
His prey, nor suffer my unspotted soul
For ever with corruption there to dwell. Milton.
Vindicate the honour of religion, by a pure and unspotted
obedience to its precepts. Rogers's Sermons.

UNSPER'UED. adj. Not formed; irregular.
When he speaks,
'Tis like a chime a mending, with terms unspuar'd;

Would seem hyperboles. Shakespeare. Troilus and Cressida.

UNSTA'BLE. adj. [instabilis, Lat.]
1. Not fixed; not fast.
Where gentry, title, wisdom,
Cannot conclude by the yea and no
Of gen'ral ignorance, it must omit
Real necessities, and give way the while T' unstable flightives. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
A popular state not founded on the general interests of the people, is of all others the most uncertain, unstable, and subject to the most easy changes. Temple.
Thus air was void of light, and earth unstable. Dryden.
See harness'd steeds desert the stony town,
And wander roads unstable, not their own. Gay.

2. Inconstant; irresolute.
A double-minded man is unstable. James i. 8.

UNSTA'ID. adj. Not cool; not prudent; not settled into difcretion; not steady; mutable.
His unslaid youth had long wandered in the common labyrinth of love; in which time, to warn young people of his unfortunate folly, he compiled these twelve oeglogues. Spenser.
To the gay gardens his unslaid desire
Him wholly carried, to refresh his fighths. Spenser.
Will the king come, that I may breathe my last
In wholesome counsel to his unslaid youth. Shakespeare.
Tell me, how will the world repute me,
For undertaking so unslaid a journey?
I fear it will make me scandalized. Shakespeare.
Wo to that land,
Which gasps beneath a child's unslaid command. Sandys.
Vice leads
Vain unslay'd youth to beggary and shame. Richards.

UNSTA'IDNESS. n. f. Indiscretion; volatile mind.
The oft changing of his colour, with a kind of shaking unslaidness over all his body, he might see in his countenance some great determination mixed with fear. Sidney.

UNSTA'INED. adj. Not stained; not died; not discoloured.
Pure and unstained religion ought to be the highest of all cares appertaining to public regimen. Hooker, b. v.
Ne let her waves with any filth be dy'd,
But ever, like herself, unstained hath been try'd. Fa. Queen.
I do commit into your hand
Th' unstained sword that you have us'd to bear,
With this remembrance, that you use the same
With a like bold, just, and impartial spirit,
As you have done 'gainst me. Shakespeare. Hen. IV.
I will do it without fear or doubt,
To live an unstain'd wife to my sweet love. Shakespeare.
Your youth,
And the true blood which peeps forth faintly through it,
Do plainly give you out an unstain'd shepherd. Shakespeare.
The hooked chariot flood
Unstain'd with hostile blood. Milton.
That good earl, once president
Of England's council, and her treasury;
Who liv'd in both unstain'd with gold or fee,
And left them both, more in himself content. Milton.
Her people guiltless, and her fields unstain'd. Roscommon.
These, of the garter call'd, of faith unstain'd,
In fighting fields the laurel have obtain'd. Dryden.

UNSTA'RE. v. a. To put out of state.
High-battled Cæsar will
Unstate his happiness, and be stag'd to th' shew Against a sword. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.
I would unstate myself, to be in a due resolution. Shakespeare.

UNSTA'TUTABLE. adj. Contrary to statute.
That plea did not avail, although the lease were notoriously unstatutable, the rent reserv'd, being not a seventh part of the real value. Swift.

UNSTA'UNCHED. adj. Not stopped; not stayed.
With the issuing blood
Stille the villain, whose unslashed thirst York and young Rutland could not satisfy. Shakespeare.

UNSTEADILY. adv.
1. Without any certainty.
2. Inconstantly; not consistently.
He that uses his words loosely and unsteadily, will not be minded, or not understood. Locke.

UNSTEADINESS. n. f. Want of constancy; irresolution; mutability.
A prince of this character, will instruct us by his example, to fix the unsteadiness of our politics. Addison.
In the result, we find the same spirit of cruelty, the same blindness, and obstinacy, and unsteadiness. Swift.

UNSTEADY. adj.
1. Inconstant; irresolute.
And her unsteady hand hath often plac'd
Men in high pow'r, but seldom holds them fast. Denham.
No measures can be taken of an unsteady mind; still 'tis too much or too little. L'Estrange.

While choice remains, he will be full unsteady,
And nothing but necessity can fix him. Rowe.
2. Mutable; variable; changeable.
If the motion of the sun were as unequal as that of a ship driven by unsteady winds, it would not at all help us to measure time. Locke.
3. Not fixed; not settled.
UNSTEADFAST, adj. Not fixed; not fast.
I'll read you matter,
As full of peril and adventurous spirit,
As to o'erwalk a current, roaring loud,
On the unsteady footing of a spear. Shakespeare.
UNSTEERED, adj. Not steered.
Other wheat was sown unsteered, but watered twice a day. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
To UNSTING, v. a. To disarm of a sting.
He has disarmed his afflictions, unstung his miseries; and though he has not the proper happiness of the world, yet he has the greatest that is to be enjoyed in it. South's Sermons.
UNSTINTED, adj. Not limited.
In the works of nature is unstinted goodness shewn us by their author. Stelton.
UNSTIRRED, adj. Not stirred; not agitated.
Such seeming milks suffered to stand unstirred, let fall to the bottom a reinous substance. Boyle on Colours.
To UNSTITCH, v. a. To open by picking the stitches.
Cato well observes, though in the phrase of a taylor, friendship ought not to be unripped, but unstitched. Collier.
UNSTOOPING, adj. Not bending; not yielding.
Such neighbour meanness to our sacred blood
Should nothing privilege him, nor partialize
Th' unstooping firmness of my upright soul. Shakespeare.
To UNSTOP, v. a. To free from stop or obstruction; to open.
Such white fumes have been afforded, by *unstop*ping a liquor diaphanous and red. Boyle on Colours.
The eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf unstopped. Isa. xxxv. 5.
One would wonder to find such a multitude of niches un-stopped. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
UNSTOPPED, adj. Meeting no resistance.
The flame *unstop*ped, at first more fury gains,
And Vulcan rides at large with loosen'd reigns. Dryden.
UNSTRAINED, adj. Easy; not forced.
By an easy and unstrained derivation, it implies the breath of God. Hakewill on Providence.
UNSTRATENED, adj. Not contracted.
The eternal wisdom, from which we derive our beings, enriched us with all these ennoblements that were suitable to the measures of an unstratened goodness, and the capacity of such a creature. Glansville.
UNSTRENGTHENED, adj. Not supported; not assisted.
The church of God is neither of capacity so weak, nor so unstrengthened with authority from above, but that her laws may exact obedience at the hands of her own children. Hooker.
To UNSTRING, v. a.
1. To relax any thing string; to deprive of strings.
My tongue's use is to me no more,
Than an unstringed viol or harp. Shakespeare. Rich. III.
Eternal structures let them raise,
On William and Maria's praise;
Nor fear they can exhaust the store,
'Till nature's music lies *unstring*ed.
'Till thou, great God! shalt lose thy double pow'r,
And touch thy lyre, and shoot thy beams no more. Prior.
His idle horn on fragrant myrtles hung;
His arrows scatter'd, and his bow *unstring*ed. Smith.
2. To loose; to untie.
Invaded thus, for want of better bands,
His garland they *unstring*ed, and bind his hands. Dryden.
UNSTRUCK, adj. Not moved; not affected.
Over dank and dry,
They journey toilsome, unstruck with length
Of march, unstruck with horror at the sight
Of Alpine ridges bleak. Philips.
UNSTUDIED, adj. Not premeditated; not laboured.
In your conversation I could observe a clearness of notion, express'd in ready and unstudied words. Dryden.
UNSTUFFED, adj. Unfilled; unfurnished.
Care keeps his watch in every old man's eye;
And where care lodgeth, sleep will never lie;
But where unbruised youth, with unstuff brain,
Doth couch his limbs, there golden sleep doth reign. Shak.
UNSUBSTANTIAL, adj.
1. Not solid; not palpable.
Welcome, thou unsubstantial air that I embrace;
'T he wretch that thou hast blown unto the worst,
Owes nothing to thy blasts. Shakespeare. K. Lear.
Darkness now rofe,
As daylight sunk, and brought in low'ring night,
Her shadowy offsprings, unsubstantial both,
Privation more of light and absent day. Milton.

2. Not real.
If such empty, unsubstantial beings may be ever made use of on this occasion, there were never any more nicely imagined and employed.
UNSUCCESSFUL, adj. Not succeeded.
Unjust equal o'er equals to let reign;
One over all, with unsuccessful power. Milton.
UNSUCCESSFUL, adj. Not having the wished event; not fortunate; not well received.
O the sad fate of unsuccessful fin!
You see yon heads without, there's worse within. Cleveland.
Ye pow'r return'd!
From unsuccessful charge! be not dismay'd.
Hence appear the many mistakes, which have made learning generally so unpleasing and so unsuccessful. Milton.
My counsels may be unsuccessful, but my prayers
Shall wait on all your actions. Denham.
By the celestial choirs,
Half yet remains *unsuccess*ful; but narrower bound Within the visible diurnal sphere. Milton's Par. Lost.
Here the muse so oft her harp has strung,
That not a mountain rears its head *unsuccess*ful. Addison.
UNSUCCESSFUL, adj. Not exposed to the sun.
I thought her as chaste as *unsuccess*ful snow. Shakespeare.
You may as well spread out the *unsuccess*ful heaps
Of misers' treasure by an outlaw's den,
And tell me it is safe, as bid me hope
Danger will wink an opportunity,
And let a single, helpless maiden pass
Uninjur'd in this wild surrounding waste. Milton.
UNSUCCESSFUL, adj. Not more than enough.
Nature's full blessings would be well dispens'd
In *unsuccess*ful, even proportion,
And the no whit encumber'd with her store. Milton.
UNSUCCESSFUL, adj. Not proceeding by flux of parts.
We cannot sum up the *unsuccess*ful and stable direction of God. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
The *unsuccess*ful duration of God with relation to himself, doth not communicate unto other created beings, the same manner of duration. Hale.
UNSUCCESSFUL, adj. Not having the breasts drawn.
*Unsuccess*ful of lamb or kid, that tend their play. Milton.
UNSUFFERABLE, n. f. Not supportable; intolerable; not to be endured.
The irksome deformities, whereby through endless and senseless effusions of indigested prayers, they oftentimes disgrace, in most unsufferable manner, the worthiest part of christian duty towards God. Hooker, b. v.
That glorious form, that light unsufferable,
And that far-beaming blaze of majesty,
Wherewith he went at heav'n's high council table
To fit the midst of trinal unity, Milton.
He laid aside.
A flinking breath, and twenty ill smells besides, are more unsufferable by her natural stultifness. Swift.
UNSUFFICIENT, n. f. [Insufficiency, Fr.] Inability to answer the end proposed.
The error and insufficiency of the arguments, doth make it on the contrary side against them, a strong presumption that God hath not moved their hearts to think such things as he hath not enabled them to prove. Hooker, b. v.
UNSUFFICIENT, adj. [Insufficient, Fr.] Unable; inadequate.
Malebranche having shewed the difficulties of the other ways, and how insufficient they are, to give a satisfactory account of the ideas we have, erects this, of seeing all things in God, upon their ruin, as the true. Locke.
UNUS'GARED, adj. Not sweetened with sugar.
Try it with sugar put into water formerly sugared, and into other water unusgared. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
UNUS'GARED, adj. Not congruous; not equal; not proportionate.
Virginity, like an old courtier, wears her cap out of fashion; richly suited, but unusgared, just like the brooch and the tooth-pick, which we wear not now. Shakespeare.
He will smile upon her, which will now be so unusgared to her disposition, being addicted to a melancholy, that it cannot but turn him into contempt. Shakespeare. Twelfth Night.
That would likelest render contempt instead;
Hard recompence, unusgared return
For so much good. Milton's Par. Regain'd.
All that heaven and happiness signifies is unusgared to a wicked man; and therefore could be no felicity to him. Tillot.
Consider whether they be not unnecessary expenses; such as are unusgared to our circumstances.
To enter into a party, as into an order of friars, with so relinquish an obedience to superiors, is very unusgared with the civil and religious liberties we so zealously affect. Swift.
UNUS'GARED, n. f. Incongruity; unfitness.
The *unusgared*ness of one man's aspect to another man's fancy, has raised such an aversion, as has produced a perfect hatred of him. South.

He his guide requested to let him lean
With both his arms on those two massy pillars,
That to the arched roof gave main support:
He unuspecting led him. Milton's Agonistes.
The easy queen receiv'd my faint address,
With eager hope and unuspecting faith. Smith.
UNUSPE'CTING, adj. Not supported; not held up.
Its head, though gay,
Hung drooping, *unuspect*ing. Milton's Par. Lost.
All *unuspect*ing between the wave and sky,
Beneath my feet the whirling billows fly. Pope.
To UNSWATH, v. a. To free from folds or convolutions of bandage.
In the morning an old woman came to unswathe me. Addison.
UNSWATH, adj. Not to be governed or influenced by another.
He bow'd his nature, never known before
But to be rough, *unswath*able and free. Shakespeare.
UNSWATH, adj. Not wielded; not held in the hand.
He makes for England, here to claim the crown.—
—Is the chair empty? is the sword *unswath*ed?
Is the king dead? the empire *unswath*ed?
To UNSWATH, v. n. Not to swear; to recant any thing sworn.
The ape was glade to end the strife so light,
And thereto swore; for who would not oft swear,
And oft unswath, a diadem to bear?
To UNSWATH, v. a. To ease after fatigue; to cool after exercise.
The interim of unswathing themselves regularly, and convenient rest before meat, may, with profit and delight, be taken up with solemn music. Milton on Education.
UNSWATH, adj. Not sweating.
In frost and snow, if you complain of heat,
They rub th' unswathing brow, and swear they sweat. Dryden.
UNSWATH, adj. Not sweet; disagreeable.
Long were to tell the troublous forms that to's
The private state, and make the life unswath. Fairy Queen.

What custom wills in all things, should we do't,
The dust of antique time would lie unswath. Shakespeare.
UNSWORN, adj. Not bound by an oath.
You are not yet unsworn:
When you have vow'd, you must not speak with men. Shak.
UNTAINTED, adj.
1. Not sullied; not polluted.
Sweet prince, th' untainted virtue of your years
Hath not yet div'd into the world's deceit. Shakespeare.
What stronger breast-plate than a heart untainted? Shak.
Ireland's untainted loyalty remain'd. Roscommon.
Compare the ingenious pliancy to virtuous counsels in youth, as it comes fresh and untainted, out of the hands of nature, with the confirmed obstinacy in an aged sinner. South.
This untainted year is all your own;
Your glories may, without our crimes, be shown. Dryden.
The most untainted credit of a witness will scarce be able to find belief. Locke.
Keep the air of the room untainted with fire, smoke, or the breaths of many people. Arbutnot.
2. Not charged with any crime.
And yet within these five hours Hastings liv'd
untainted, unexamined, free at liberty. Shakespeare.
3. Not corrupted by mixture.
The conscious walls conceal the fatal secret;
Th' untainted winds refuse th' infecting load. Smith.
UNTA'KEN, adj.
1. Not taken.
Until this day remaineth the veil untaken away. 2 Cor. iii.
The English searched the rivers in such sort, as they left few ships unpoiled or untaken. Harward.
Dispose

Dispos'd already of th' untaken spoil. Waller.
 Otherwise the whole business had miscarried, and Jerusalem remain'd untaken. Dryden.
 A thousand schemes the monarch's mind employ;
 Elate in thought, he lacks untaken Troy. Pope.
 2. UNTAKEN up. Not filled.
 The narrow limits of this discourse, will leave no more room untaken up by heaven. Boyle.
UNTA'KED of. adj. Not mentioned in the world.
 Spread thy close curtain, love-performing night,
 That the runaway's eyes may wink, and Romeo Leap to these arms, untalk'd of and unseen. Shakespeare.
 No happiness can be, where is no rest;
 Th' unknown, untalk'd of man is only blest. Dryden.
UNTA'KEABLE. adj. Not to be tam'd; not to be subdued.
 Gold is so untameable by the fire, that after many meltings and violent heats, it does scarce diminish.
 He is swifter than any other bull, and untameable. Grew.
UNTA'MED. adj. Not subdued; not suppressed.
 A people very stubborn and untamed; or, if ever tamed, yet lately have quite shook off their yoke, and broken
 the bonds of their obedience. Spenser's Ireland.
 What death has heav'n design'd,
 For so untam'd, so turbulent a mind! Dryden.
 Man alone acts more contrary to nature, than the wild and most untamed part of the creation. Locke.
 To UNTA'GLE. v. a. To loose from intricacy or convolu-
 tion.
 O time, thou must untangle this, not I;
 It is too hard a knot for me t'untie. Shakespeare.
 This is that very Mab,
 That cakes the ellocks, in foul, sluttish hairs,
 Which, once untangl'd, much misfortune bodes. Shakespeare.
 I'll give thee up my bow and dart;
Untangle but this cruel chain,
 And freely let me fly again. Prior.
UNTA'STED. adj. Not tasted; not tried by the palate.
 The tall stag resolves to try
 The combat next; but if the cry
 Invades again his trembling ear,
 He straight refuses his wonted care;
 Leaves the untasted spring behind,
 And, wing'd with fear, outflies the wind. Waller.
 If he chance to find
 A new repast, or an untasted spring,
 Blesses his stars, and thinks it luxury. Addison's Cato.
UNTA'STING. adj.
 1. Not perceiving any taste.
 Cydonian oil,
 Whose balmy juice glides o'er th' untasting tongue. Smith.
 2. Not trying by the palate.
UNTAUGHT. adj.
 1. Uninstructed; uneducated; ignorant; unlettered.
 A lie is continually in the mouth of the untaught. Ecclef. xx.
 Taught, or untaught, the dunce is still the same;
 Yet still the wretched master bears the blame. Dryden.
 On ev'ry thorn delightful wisdom grows,
 In ev'ry stream a sweet instruction flows;
 But some untaught o'erhear the whispering rill,
 In spite of sacred leisure, blockheads still. Young.
 2. Debar'd from instruction.
 He, that from a child untaught, or a wild inhabitant of the woods, will expect principles of sciences, will find himself mistaken. Locke.
 3. Unskilled; new; not having use or practice.
 Suffolk's imperial tongue is stern and rough,
 Us'd to command, untaught to plead for favour. Shakespeare.
 To UNTA'CH. v. a. To make to quit, or forget what has been inculcated.
 That elder berries are poison, as we are taught by tradition, experience will untach us. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
 Their customs are by nature wrought;
 But we, by art, untach what nature taught. Dryden.
UNTEMPERED. adj. Not tempered.
 One built up a wall, and others daubed it with untempered mortar. Ezek. xiii. 10.
UNTEMPTED. adj.
 1. Not embarrassed by temptation.
 In temptation dispute not, but rely upon God, and contend not with him but in prayer, and with the help of a prudent untempted guide. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
 2. Not invited by any thing alluring.
Untempted, or by wager or by price,
 He would attempt to climb the precipice. Cotton on the Peak.
UNTE'NABLE. adj.

 —Aye, my lord —
 —So young, and so untender? —
 —So young, my lord, and true. Shakespeare.
UNTE'NDERED. adj. Not offered.
 Cassibelan granted Rome a tribute,
 Yearly three thousand pounds; which by thee lately
 Is left untender'd. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
 To UNTE'NT. v. a. To bring out of a tent.
 Will he not, upon our fair request,
 Untent his person, and share the air with us? Shakespeare.
UNTE'NTED. adj. [from tent.] Having no medicaments applied.
 Blasts and fogs upon thee!
 Th' untened woundings of a father's curse
 Pierce every fence about thee! Shakespeare's K. Lear.
UNTE'RIFIED. adj. Not affrighted; not struck with fear.
 Among innumerable false, unmov'd,
 Unhaken, uneduc'd, unterrify'd. Milton.
 To succour the distressed, to give help
 To an afflicted mother,
 Unbrib'd by love, unterrify'd by threats;
 These are exploits worthy Achilles' son. A. Phillips.
UNTHA'NKED. adj.
 1. Not repaid with acknowledgment of a kindness.
 If all the world
 Should in a pet of temperance feed on pulse,
 Drink the clear stream, and nothing wear but freeze,
 Th' all-giver wou'd be unthank'd, wou'd be unprais'd. Mil.
 Their batter'd admiral too soon withdrew,
Unthank'd by ours for his unfinished fight. Dryden.
 2. Not received with thankfulness.
 For'd from her presence, and condemn'd to live:
 Unwelcome freedom, and unthank'd reprieve. Dryden.
UNTHA'NKFUL. adj. Ungrateful; returning no acknowleg-ment for good received.
 The casting away of things profitable for sustenance, is an unthankful abuse of the fruits. Hosier.
 He is kind to the unthankful. Luke vi. 35.
 They which he created, were unthankful unto him which prepared life for them. 2 Eph. viii.
 If you reckon that for evil, you are unthankful for the blessing. Taylor's Rule of Holy Living.
 The bare supposal of one petty loss, makes us unthankful for all that's left. L'Estrange.
UNTHA'NKFULLY. adv. Without thanks; without gratitude.
 I judg'd it requisite to say something, to prevent my being thought to have unthankfully taken one of the chief passages of my discourse from a book, to which I was utterly a stranger. Boyle.
UNTHA'NKFULNESS. n. f. Neglect or omission of acknowledgement for good received; want of sense of benefits; ingratitude.
 Thou diest in thine unthankfulness; and thine ignorance makes thee away. Shakespeare.
 Immoderate favours breed first unthankfulness, and afterwards hate. Hayward.
 The unthankful stand reckoned among the most enormous sinners, which evinces the virtue opposite to unthankfulness, to bear the same place in the rank of duties. Saunders's Sermons.
UNTHA'WED. adj. Not dissolved after frost.
 Your wine lock'd up,
 Or fish deny'd, the river yet unthaw'd. Pope.
 To UNTHA'NK. v. a. To recal, or dismis a thought.
 Unthink your speaking, and say so no more. Shakespeare.
UNTHINKING. adj. Thoughtless; not given to reflection.
 Grey-headed infant! and in vain grown old;
 Art thou to learn, that in another's gold
 Lie charms resistless! that all laugh to find Unthinking plainness so o'erspread thy mind. Dryden.
 An effectual remedy for the wandering of thoughts whoever shall propose, would do great service to the studious, and perhaps help unthinking men to become thinking. Locke.
 The unthinking part contract an unreasonable aversion to that ecclesiastical constitution. Addison.
 With earnest eyes, and round unthinking faces,
 He fist the snuff-box open'd, then the case. Pope.
UNTHO'RT. adj. Not obstructed by prickles.
 It were some extenuation of the curse, if in untho'rt untho'rt were confinable unto corporal exertations, and there still remained a paradise, or untho'rt place of knowledge. Brown.
UNTHOUGHT of. adj. Not regarded; not heeded.
 That shall be the day, when'er it lights,
 This gallant Hotspur, this all-praised knight,
 And your unthought of Harry chance to meet. Shakespeare.

 The curious unthrift makes his cloaths too wide,
 And spares himself, but would his taylor chide. Herbert.
 Yet nothing fill; then poor and naked come;
 Thy father will receive his unthrift home,
 And thy blest Saviour's blood discharge the mighty sum. Dryd.
UNTHRI'FT. adj. Profuse; wasteful; prodigal; extravagant.
 In such a night,
 Did Jessica steal from the wealthy Jew,
 And, with an unthrift love, did run from Venice. Shakespeare.
UNTHRI'FTILY. adv. Without frugality.
 Our attainments cannot be overlarge, and yet we manage a narrow fortune very unthriftily. Collier.
UNTHRI'FTINESS. n. f. Waste; prodigality; profusion.
 The third sort are the poor by idleness or unthriftiness, as riotous spenders, vagabonds, loiterers. Hayward.
 The more they have hitherto embezzled their parts, the more should they endeavour to expiate that unthriftiness, by a more careful managery for the future. Govern. of the Tongue.
UNTHRI'FTY. adj.
 1. Prodigal; profuse; lavish; wasteful.
 The castle I found of good strength, having a great mote round about it; the work of a noble gentleman, of whose

 Our absence makes us unthrift to our knowledge. Shakespeare.
 2. Not easily made to thrive or fatten. A low word.
 Grains given to a hide-bound or unthrift horse, recover him. Motimer's Husbandry.
UNTHRI'VING. adj. Not thriving; not prospering; not growing rich.
 Let all who thus unhappily employ their inventive faculty, consider, how unthri'ving a trade it is finally like to prove, that their false accusations of others will rebound in true ones on themselves. Govern. of the Tongue.
 To UNTHRONE. v. a. To pull down from a throne.
 Him to unthrone, we then
 May hope, when everlasting fate shall yield
 To fickle chance, and chaos judge the strife. Milton.
 To UNTIE. v. a.
 1. To unbind; to free from bonds.
 Though you untie the winds, and let them fight
 Against the churches; though the yesty waves
 Confound and swallow navigation up. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
 2. To loosen from convolution or knot.
 All that of myself is mine,
 Lovely Amoret, is thine;
 Sacharissa's captive I am
 Would untie his iron chain;
 And those scorching beams to shun,
 To thy gentle shadow run. Waller.
 The chain I'll in return untie,
 And freely thou again shalt fly.
 The fury heard; while on Cocytus' brink,
 Her snakes untied, sulphureous waters drink. Pope.
 3. To set free from any obstruction.
 All the evils of an untied tongue, we put upon the accounts of drunkenness. Taylor.
 4. To resolve; to clear.

think; or in the dulness or untractableness of those faculties, for want of use. Locke.
- UNTRA'DING. adj. Not engaged in commerce.
Men leave estates to their children in land, as not so liable to casualties as money, in untrading and unskillful hands. Locke.
- UNTRAINED. adj.
1. Not educated; not instructed; not disciplined.
My wit untrain'd in any kind of art. Shakespeare.
The king's forces charged lively, and they again as stoutly received the charge; but being an untrained multitude, without any soldier or guide, they were soon put to flight. Hayw.
Life.
To noble and ignoble, is more sweet
Untrain'd in arms, where rashness leads not on. Milton.
No expert general will bring a company of raw, untrained men into the field; but will, by little bloodless skirmishes, instruct them in the manner of the fight. Decay of Piety.
2. Irregular; ungovernable.
Gad not abroad at ev'ry quest and call
Of an untrained hope or passion:
To court each place of fortune that doth fall,
Is wantonness in contemplation. Herbert.
- UNTRANSFERABLE. adj. Incapable of being given from one to another.
In parliament there is a rare co-ordination of power, though the sovereignty remain still entire and untransferable, in the prince. Howell's Pre-eminence of Parliament.
- UNTRANSPARENT. adj. Not diaphanous; opaque.
Though held against the light they appear'd of a transparent yellow, yet looked on with one's back turn'd to the light, they exhibited an untransparent blue. Boyle on Colours.

- UNTRAVELLED. adj.
1. Never trodden by passengers.
We find no open track, or constant manuduction in this labyrinth, but are oft times fain to wander in America, and untravelled parts. Brown's Pref. to Vulgar Errors.
Long untravelled heaths. Thomson.
2. Having never seen foreign countries.
An untravelled Englishman cannot relish all the beauties of Italian pictures; because the postures expressed in them are often such as are peculiar to that country. Addison.
UNTR'EAD. v. a. To tread back; to go back in the same steps.
We will untread the steps of damned flight,
And, like a bated and retired flood,
Leaving our rankness and irregular course,
Stoop low within those bounds we have o'erlook'd. Shakespeare.
- UNTR'EASUR'D. adj. Not laid up; not repositied.
Her attendants
Saw her a-bed, and in the morning early
They found the bed untra'sur'd of their mistrefs. Shakespeare.
- UNTR'EATABLE. adj. Not treatable; not practicable.
Men are of so untreatable a temper, that nothing can be obtained of them. Decay of Piety.
- UNTRI'ED. adj.
1. Not yet attempted.
It behoves,
From hard essays, and ill successess pass,
A faithful leader, not to hazard all
Through ways of danger, by himself untry'd. Milton.
That he no ways nor means may leave untry'd,
Thus to her sister the herself apply'd. Denham.
2. Not yet experienced.
Never more
Mean I to try, what rash untry'd I fought,
The pain of absence from thy fight. Milton's Par. Lost.
The happiest of mankind overlooking those solid blessings which they already have, set their hearts upon somewhat which they want; some untry'd pleasure, which, if they could but taste, they should then be completely blest. Atterbury.
Self-preservation, the long acquaintance of soul and body, the untry'd condition of a separation, are sufficient reasons not to turn our backs upon life, out of an humour. Collier.
Eternity! thou pleasing, dreadful thought!
Through what variety of untry'd beings,
Through what new scenes and changes must we pass? Addison.
3. Not having passed trial.
The father secure,
Ventures his filial virtue, though untry'd,
Against what'er may tempt. Milton's Par. Regain'd.
- UNTRIUMPHABLE. adj. Which allows no triumph.
What towns, what garious might you,
With hazard of this blood subdue;
Which now y're bent to throw away
In vain, untriumphable fray? Hudibras.
- UNTRU'D. adj. Not passed; not marked by the foot.
UNTRU'DDEN. adj.
The way he came, not having mark'd, return
Was difficult, by human steps untrud. Paradise Regain'd.
Now while the heav'n by the sun's team untrud,
Hath took no print of the approaching light,
And all the spangled host keep watch.
A garland made of such new bays,
And fought in such untrudden ways,
As no man's temples e'er did crown. Waller.
Who was the first to explore th' untrudden path,
When life was hazarded in ev'ry step? Addison's Cats.
- UNTRU'LED. adj. Not bowled; not rolled along.
Hard fate! untrull'd is now the charming dye;
The playhouse and the parks unvisited must lie. Dryden.
- UNTRU'BL'D. adj.
1. Not disturbed by care, sorrow, or guilt.
Quiet untroubled soul, awake! awake!
Arm, fight and conquer, for fair England's sake. Shakespeare.
2. Not agitated; not confused.
Our Saviour meek, and with untroubled mind,
After his airy jaunt, though hurry'd fore,
Hungry and cold, betook him to his rest. Milton.
3. Not interrupted in the natural course.
Would they think with how small allowance
Untroubled nature doth herself suffice,
Such superfluities they would despise. Fairy Queen.
4. Transparent; clear.
The equal distribution of the spirits in the liquor with the tangible parts, ever representeth bodies clear and untroubled. Bacon.
- UNTRU'E. adj.
1. False; contrary to reality.
By what construction shall any man make those comparisons true, holding that distinction untrue. Hooker.
That a vessel filled with ashes, will receive the like quantity of water, that it would have done if it had been empty, is utterly untrue, for the water will not go in by a fifth part. Bacon.

UNT

2. False; not faithful.
I cannot break to sweet a bond,
Unless I prove untrue;
Nor can I ever be so fond,
To prove untrue for you. Suckling.
Flora commands those nymphs and knights,
Who liv'd in slothful ease, and loose delights:
Who never acts of honour durst pursue,
The men inglorious knights, the ladies all untrue. Dryden.
- UNTRU'LY. adv. Falsely; not according to truth.
It was their hurt *untrue*ly to attribute so great power unto false gods. Hooker, b. v.
On these mountains it is generally received that the ark rested, but *untrue*ly. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
- UNTRU'SINESS. n. f. Unfaithfulness.
Secretary Peter, under pretence of gravity, covered much untrustings of heart. Hayward.
- UNTRU'TH. n. f.
1. Falshood; contrariety to reality.
2. Moral falshood; not veracity.
He who is perfect, and abhors untruth,
With heavenly influence inspires my youth. Sandys.
3. Treachery; want of fidelity.
I would,
So my untruth had not provok'd him to it,
The king had cut off my head with my brother's. Shakespeare.
4. False assertion.
In matter of speculation or practice, no untruth can possibly avail the patron and defender long; and things most truly, are likewise most behovefully spoken. Hooker, b. iii.
There is little hope for common justice in this dispute, from a man, who lays the foundations of his reasonings in so notorious an untruth. Atterbury.
- UNTRU'NABLE. adj. Unharmonious; not musical.
My news in dumb silence will I bury,
For they are harsh, *untrue*able, and bad. Shakespeare.
A lutestring, merely unequal in its parts, giveth a harsh and *untrue*able sound; which things we call false. Bacon.
His harsh *untrue*able pipe is no more fit than a raven's, to join with the music of a choir. Tatler, N° 54.
- TO UNTRU'NE. v. a.
1. To make incapable of harmony.
Take but degree away, untrue that firing,
And hark what discord follows. Shakespeare.
When the last and dreadful hour,
This crumbling pageant shall devour,
The trumpet shall be heard on high,
The dead shall live, the living die,
And music shall untrue the sky. Dryden.
The captives, as their tyrant shall require,
That they should breathe the song, and touch the lyre,
Shall say; as Jacob's servile race rejoice,
Untrue'd the mulick, and diffus'd the voice? Prior.
2. To disorder.
O you kind gods!
Cure this great breach in his abused nature;
Th' untrue and jarring senses, O wind up
Of this child-changed father. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
- UNTRU'NED. adj. Not turned.
New crimes invented, left untrue'd no stone,
To make my guilt appear, and hide his own. Dryden.
So eager hath the inquisitive part of mankind been to bring this matter to a fair issue, that no stone hath been left untrue'd, no way, whereby these things could have been brought forth of the sea, but one or other hath pitch'd upon. Woodward.
- UNTRU'TORED. adj. Uninstructed; untaught.
Thy mother took into her blameful bed
Some stern untrue'd churl; and noble stock
Was graft with crab-tree slip, whose fruit thou art. Shakespeare.
Thy even thoughts with so much plainness flow,
Their sense untrue'd infancy may know:
Yet to such height is all that plainness wrought,
Wit may admire, and letter'd pride be taught. Prior.
- TO UNTRU'NE. v. a.
1. To open what is held together by convulsion.
But since the sisters did so soon untrue
So fair a thread, I'll strive to piece the line. Waller.
2. To open what is wrapped on itself.
It turns finely and softly three or four turns, caused by the *untrue*ing of the beard by the moisture. Bacon.
3. To separate that which clasps round any thing.
Divers worthy gentlemen of England, all the Syren songs of Italy could never untrue from the mast of God's word. Aicham.
- TO UNTRU'NE. v. a. To separate any things involved in each other, or wrapped up on themselves.
*Untrue*ing his deceitful clew,
He gan to weave a web of wicked guile. Fairy Queen.
The interest of prince and people is so enfolded in a mutual embrace, that they cannot be *untrue*ed without pulling a limb off. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

UNV

- Untrue*ing all the chains that tie
The hidden soul of harmony. Milton.
No, I'll untrue you;
I have occasion for your stay on earth. Dryden.
Tarred hempen ropes cut small and *untrue*ed, are beneficial for lands. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- Untrue* a wire, and from her gums
A set of teeth completely comes. Swift.
- TO UNTY. v. a. [See UNTIE.] To loose.
O time! thou must untangle this, not I:
It is too hard a knot for me t' untie. Shakespeare.
- TO UNVA'IL. v. a. To uncover; to strip of a veil. This word is unvail, or unveil, according to its etymology. See VAIL, and VEIL.
Troy reviv'd, her mourning face unvail'd. Denham.
Now unvail'd, the toilet stands display'd,
Each silver vase in my tickler laid. Pope.
- UNVA'LUABLE. adj. Inestimable; being above price.
Secure the innocence of children, by imparting to them the unvaluable blessing of a virtuous and pious education. Atterb.
- UNVA'LUED. adj.
1. Not prized; neglected.
He may not, as unvalued persons do,
Carve for himself; for on his choice depends
The safety and the health of the whole state. Shakespeare.
2. Inestimable; above price.
I thought I saw a thousand fearful wrecks;
Inestimable stones, unvail'd jewels. Shakespeare.
- UNVA'NQUISHED. adj. Not conquered; not overcome.
Shall I for lucre of the rest unvanquish'd,
Detract so much from that prerogative,
As to be called but viceroy of the whole? Shakespeare.
Victory doth more often fall by error of the unvanquish'd, than by the valour of the victorious. Hayward.
They rise unvanquish'd. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi.
- UNVA'RIABLE. adj. [invariable, Fr.] Not changeable; not mutable.
The two great hinges of morality stand fixt and unvariable as the two poles: whatever is naturally conducive to the common interest, is good; and whatever has a contrary influence, is evil. Norris.
- UNVA'RIED. adj. Not changed; not diversified.
If authors cannot be prevailed with to keep close to truth and instruction, by unvaried terms, and plain, unsophisticated arguments; yet it concerns readers not to be imposed on. Locke.
They ring round the same unvaried chimes,
With sure returns of still-expected rhymes. Pope.
- UNVA'RNISHED. adj.
1. Not overlaid with varnish.
2. Not adorned; not decorated.
I will a round, unvarnish'd tale deliver,
Of my whole course of love; what drugs, what charms
I won his daughter with. Shakespeare, Othello.
- UNVA'RYING. adj. Not liable to change.
We cannot keep by us any standing, unvarying measure of duration, which consists in a constant fleeting succession, as we can of certain lengths of extension, as inches marked out in permanent parcels of matter. Locke.
- TO UNVE'IL. v. a. [See VEIL and VAIL.]
1. To uncover; to divert of a veil.
The moon,
Apparent queen, unveil'd her peerless light. Milton.
To the limpid stream direct thy way,
When the gay morn unveils her smiling ray. Pope.
2. To disclose; to show.
The providence, that's in a watchful state,
Knows almost every grain of Pluto's gold;
Does ev'n our thoughts unveil in their dumb cradles. Shak.
- UNVE'ILEDLY. adv. Plainly; without disguise.
Not knowing what use you will make of what has been unveiledly communicated to you, I was unwilling that some things, which had cost me pains, should fall into any man's hands, that scorn to purchase knowledge with pains. Boyle.
- UNVE'NTILATED. adj. Not fanned by the wind.
This animals, to succour life, demand;
Nor should the air unventilated stand;
The idle deep corrupted would contain Blue deaths. Blackmore's Creation.
- UNVE'RITABLE. adj. Not true.
All these proceeded upon unveritable grounds. Brown.
- UNVE'RS'D. adj. Unacquainted; unskilled.
Not eastern monarchs, on their nuptial day,
In dazzling gold and purple shine so gay,
As the bright natives of th' unlabour'd field,
Unvers'd in spinning, and in looms unskill'd. Blackmore.
- UNVE'X'D. adj. Untroubled; undisturbed.
With a blest and unweave retire,
With unhack'd swords, and helmets all unbruis'd,
We will bear home that lusty blood again. Shakespeare.
Unweave'd with thought of wants which may betide;
Or for to-morrow's dinner to provide. Dryden's Juvenal.

UNVIOLATED. adj. Not injured; not broken.
 Herein you war against your reputation,
 And draw within the compass of suspect
 Th' unviolated honour of your wife. Shakespeare.
 He, with singular constancy, preserved his duty and fidelity to his majesty unviolated. Carleton.
 This strength diffus'd
 No less through all my sinews, joints, and bones,
 Than thine, while I preserv'd these locks unhorn,
 The pledge of my unviolated vow. Milton.
 UNVIRTUOUS. adj. Wanting virtue.
 If they can find in their hearts that the poor, unvirtuous, fat knight shall be any further afflicted, we two will be the ministers. Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.
 UNVISITED. adj. Not resorted to.
 In some wild zone
 Dwell, not unvisited of heav'n's fair light, Secure. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ii.
 The playhouse and the park unvisited must lie. Dryden.
 UNIFORM. adj. Wanting uniformity.
 Such an uniform piety is in many so exactly apportioned to Satan's interest, that he has no cause to with the change of his tenure. Decay of Piety.
 UNVOYAGEABLE. adj. Not to be passed over or voyaged.
 Not this unvoyageable gulph oblique,
 Detain from following thy illustrious track. Milton.
 UNWAGED. adj. Not incited; not perfid.
 The time was once, when thou unwaged would'st vow,
 That never words were music to thine ear,
 Unless I spake. Shakespeare. Comedy of Errors.
 UNWED. adj.
 1. Not put to use; unemployed.
 Eke, whose husband about that time died, forgetting the absent Plangus, or, at least, not hoping of him to attain to aspiring a purpose, left no art untried, which might keep the line from breaking, whereat the fish was already taken. Sidney.
 Sure he that made us with such large discourse,
 Looking before and after, gave us not
 That capability and godlike reason,
 To rust in us unused. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
 2. Not accustomed.
 He, unused to such entertainment, did shortly and plainly answer what he was. Sidney, b. ii.
 One, whose eyes,
 Albeit unused to the melting mood,
 Dropt tears as fast as the Arabian trees
 Their medicinal gum. Shakespeare. Othello.
 What art thou?
 Not from above: no, thy wan looks betray Diminish'd light, and eyes unused to day. Dryden.
 UNWEXED. adj. Useless; serving no purpose.
 I was persuaded, by experience, that it might not be un-useful in the capacities it was intended for. Glanville.
 Birds flutter with their wings, when there is but a little down upon them, and they are as yet utterly unweaned for flying. Milton's Antidote against Atheism.
 As when the building gains a furer flay,
 We take th' unweaned scaffolding away. Dryden.
 Pleas'd to find his age
 Declining, not unweaned to his lord. Philips.
 UNUSUAL. adj. Not common; not frequent; rare.
 With this unusual and strange course they went on, till God, in whole, heav'ly worldly judgments I nothing doubt but that there may be hidden mercy, gave them over to their own inventions. Hooker.
 You gain your point, if your industrious art
 Can make unusual words easy and plain. Ressemmon.
 A sprightly red vermilion all her face;
 And her eyes languish with unusual grace. Glanville.
 That peculiar turn, that the words should appear new, yet not unusual, but very proper to his auditors. Pelton.
 The river flows redundant, and attacks
 The ling'ring remnant with unusual tide. Philips.
 UNUSUALNESS. n. s. Uncommonness; infrequency.
 It is the unusualness of the time, not the appearance, that surprises Alcibiades. Brocme.
 UNUTTERABLE. adj. Ineffable; inexpressible.
 Signs now breath'd
 Unutterable, which the spirit of pray'r
 Inspir'd, and wing'd for heav'n with speedier flight
 Than loudest oratory. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.
 It wounds my soul
 To think of your unutterable sorrows,
 When you shall find Hippolytus was guiltless. Smith.
 UNVULNERABLE. adj. Exempt from wound: not vulnerable.
 The god of soldiers inform Thy thoughts with nobleness, that thou may'st prove
 To shame invulnerable, and stick i' th' wars
 Like a great sea mark, standing every flaw. Shakespeare.

UNWAKENED. adj. Not roused from sleep.
 The more
 His wonder was, to find unawaken'd Eve
 With tresses compos'd. Milton's P. Lost, b. vi.
 UNWALLED. adj. Having no walls.
 He came to Tauris, a great and rich city, but unwall'd, and of no strength. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.
 UNWARES. adv. Unexpectedly; before any caution, or expectation.
 She, by her wicked arts,
 Too false and strong for earthly skill or might,
 Unwares me wrought unto her wicked will. Fairy Queen.
 His loving mother came upon a day
 Unto the woods, to see her little son,
 And chanc'd unwares to meet him in the way,
 After his sports and cruel pastime done.
 Still we fail, while prosperous blows the wind,
 Till on some secret rock unwares we light. Fairfax.
 UNWARYLY. adv. Without caution; carelessly.
 The best part of my powers
 Were in the washes all unwarily
 Devour'd by the unexpected flood. Shakespeare.
 If I had not unwarily engaged myself for the present publishing it, I should have kept it till I had look'd over it. Digby.
 By such principles, they renounce their legal claim to liberty and property, and unwarily submit to what they really abhor. Freeholder, No 10.
 UNWARISS. n. s. [from unwarly.] Want of caution; carelessness.
 The same temper which inclines us to a desire of fame, naturally betrays us into such slips and unwarinesses, as are not incident to men of a contrary disposition. Spektor, No 256.
 UNWARYLIKE. adj. Not fit for war; not used to war; not military.
 He safely might old troops to battle lead,
 Against th' unwarlike Persian, and the Mede;
 Whole hasty flight did from a bloodless field,
 More spoils than honour to the victor yield. Waller.
 Avert unwarlike Indians from his Rome,
 Triumph abroad, secure our peace at home. Dryden.
 UNWARNED. adj. Not cautioned; not made wary.
 Unexperienced young men, if unwaried, take one thing for another, and judge by the outside.
 May hypocrites,
 That slyly speak one thing, another think,
 Drink on unwaried, till by enchanting cups
 Infatuate, they their wily thoughts disclose. Philips.
 UNWARRANTABLE. adj. Not defensible; not to be justified;
 not allowed.
 At very distant removes an extemporary intercourse is feasible, and may be compassed without unwarrantable correspondence with the people of the air. Glanville.
 He who does an unwarrantable action through a false information, which he ought not to have believed, cannot in reason make the guilt of one sin the excuse of another. South.
 UNWARRANTABLY. adv. Not justifiably; not defensibly.
 A true and humble sense of your own unworthiness, will not suffer you to rise up to that confidence, which some men unwarrantably pretend to, nay, unwarrantably require of others. Wake's Preparation for Death.
 UNWARRANTED. adj. Not ascertained; uncertain.
 The subjects of this kingdom believe it is not legal for them to be enforced to go beyond the seas, without their own consent, upon hope of an unwarranted conquest; but to resist an invading enemy, the subject must be commanded out of the counties where they inhabit. Bacon.
 UNWARY. adj.
 1. Wanting caution; imprudent; hasty; precipitate.
 Nor think me so unwary,
 To bring my feet again into the snare
 Where once I have been caught. Milton's Agonistes.
 So spake the false archangel, and insus'd
 Bad influence into th' unwary breast. Milton.
 So talk'd the spirited fly snake; and Eve,
 Yet more amaz'd, unwary thus reply'd. Milton.
 Turning short, he struck with all his might Full on the helmet of th' unwary knight.
 Deep was the wound. Dryden.
 Propositions about religion are insinuated into the unwary, as well as unbiassed understandings of children, and riveted there by long custom. Locke.
 2. Unexpected. Obsolete.
 All in the open hall amazed flood,
 At suddenness of that unwary fight,
 And wonder'd at his breathless hasty mood. Fairy Queen.
 UNWASHED. adj. Not washed; not cleaned by washing.
 UNWASHEN. s. Another lean unwash'd artificer Cuts off his tale, and talks of Arthur's death. Shakespeare.
 To eat with unwashen hands defileth not a man. Matthew, xv.
 He

He accepts of no unclean, no unwashed sacrifice; and if repentance wher not in, prayer will never find admittance. Duppa.
 When the fleece is shorn, if sweat remains Unwashed, it soaks into their empty veins. Dryden.
 UNWASTED. adj. Not consumed; not diminished.
 Why have those rocks so long unwasted stood,
 Since, lavish of their stock, they through the flood
 Have, ages past, their melting crystal spread,
 And with their spoils the liquid regions fed? Blackmore.
 UNWASTING. adj. Not growing less; not decaying.
 Purest love's unwasting treasure;
 Constant faith, fair hope, long leisure;
 Sacred Hymen! these are thine. Pope.
 UNWASTED. adj. Not used to travel; not seasoned in the road.
 Beasts that have been rid off their legs, are as much for a man's use, as colts that are unwasted, and will not go at all. Suckl.
 UNWAKENED. adj. Not weakened.
 By reason of the exsufflation of some air out of the glass, the elastical power of the remaining air was very much debilitated, in comparison of the unweakened pressure of the external air. Boyle.
 UNWAPORNED. adj. Not furnished with offensive arms.
 As the beards are armed with fierce teeth, paws, horns, and other bodily instruments of much advantage against un-weaponed men; so hath reason taught man to strengthen his hand with such offensive arms, as no creature else can well avoid. Raleigh.
 UNWEARABLE. adj. Not to be tired.
 Desire to resemble him in goodness, maketh them un-wearable. Hooker, b. i.
 UNWEARIED. adj.
 1. Not tired; not fatigued.
 The Creator from his work
 Desisting, though unweary'd, up return'd. Milton.
 Their bloody talk unweary'd, still they ply. Waller.
 Still th' unweary'd fire pursues the tuneful strain. Dryden.
 2. Indefatigable; continual; not to be spent; not sinking under fatigue.
 Joy'd to range abroad in fresh attire,
 Through the wide compass of the airy coast,
 And with unweary'd limbs each part enquire. Spenser.
 Godlike his unweary'd bounty flows;
 First loves to do, then loves the good he does. Denham.
 A winged virtue through th' ethereal sky,
 From orb to orb, unweary'd dost thou fly. Tickell.
 An unweary'd devotion in the service of God, recommended the gospel to the world.
 The righteous shall certainly be saved, but then the christian character of a righteous man implies a constant, unweary'd performance in many painful instances of duty. Rogers.
 To UNWEARY. v. a. To refresh after weariness.
 It unwearies, and refreshes more than any thing, after too great labour. Temple.
 UNWED. adj. Unmarried.
 This servitude makes you to keep unwe'd. Shakespeare.
 UNWEDGEABLE. adj. Not to be cloven.
 Merciful heav'n!
 Thou rather with thy sharp and sulph'rous bolt
 Split'st the unwedgeable and gnarled oak,
 Than the soft myrtle. Shakespeare. Measure for Measure.
 UNWEDD. adj. Not cleared from weeds.
 Fie! 'tis an unwedded garden,
 That grows to seed; things rank, and grofs in nature,
 Possess it merely. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
 UNWEEPED. adj. Not lamented. Now unweep.
 He must not float upon his watry bier
 Unwept, and welter to the parching wind,
 Without the meed of some melodious tear. Milton.
 UNWEETING. adj. Ignorant; unknowing.
 Her seeming dead he found with feigned fear,
 As all unweaving of that well she knew;
 And pained himself with busy care to rear
 Her out of careless swoon. Fairy Queen, b. i.
 But contrary, unweaving he fulfilled
 The purpos'd counsel, pre-ordain'd and fix'd
 Of the most high. Paradise Regain'd.
 UNWEIGHED. adj.
 1. Not examined by the balance.
 Solomon left all the vessels unweighed, because they were exceeding many. 1 Kings vii.
 2. Not considered; negligent.
 What unweighed behaviour hath this Flemish drunkard pickt out of my conversation, that he dares in this manner essay me? why he hath not been thrice in my company. Shakespeare.
 Daughter, what words have pass'd thy lips unweigh'd,
 Deem not unjustly by my doom oppress'd.
 Of human race the wisest, and the best. Pope's Odyssey.
 UNWEIGHED. adj. Inconsiderate; thoughtless.
 Wife! why, no question but he was—a very superficial, ignorant, unweighing fellow. Shakespeare.
 UNWELCOME. adj. Not pleasing; not grateful; not well received.

U N W

Such welcome and unwelcome things at once,
 'Tis hard to reconcile. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
 Soon as th' unwelcome news
 From earth arriv'd at heaven-gate, displeas'd
 All were who heard. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.
 Though he that brings unwelcome news
 Has but a losing office, yet he that shews
 Your danger first, and then your way to safety,
 May heal that wound he made. Denham's Sophy.
 Forc'd from her presence, and condemn'd to live;
 Unwelcome freedom, and unthank'd reprieve. Dryden.
 From the very first instances of perception, some things are grateful, and others unwelcome to them; some things that they incline to, and others that they fly. Locke.
 Such hasty nights as these, would give very unwelcome interruptions to our labours. Bentley's Sermons.
 UNWELT. adj. Not lamented; not bemoaned.
 Our fatherless distress was left unmoan'd;
 Your widow dolours likewise be unwept. Shakespeare. Rich. III.
 We, but the slaves that mount you to the throne:
 A base, ignoble crowd, without a name;
 Unwept, unworthy of the funeral flame;
 By duty bound to forfeit each his life. Dryden.
 UNWET. adj. Not moist.
 Once I meant to meet
 My fate with face unmov'd, and eyes unwept;
 Yet since I have thee here in narrow room,
 My tears shall set thee first afloat within thy tomb. Dryden.
 UNWHIPT. adj. Not punished; not corrected with the rod.
 Tremble, thou wretch,
 That hast within thee undivulged crimes,
 Unwhipt of justice. Shakespeare. K. Lear.
 Once I caught him in a lie;
 And then, unwhipt, he had the grace to cry. Pope.
 UNWHOLESOME. adj.
 1. Infalubrious; mischievous to health.
 The discovery of the disposition of the air, is good for the prognosticks of wholesome and unwholesome years. Bacon.
 There I a prisoner chain'd, scarce freely draw
 The air imprison'd also; close and damp,
 Unwholesome draught; but here I find amends,
 The breath of heav'n fresh-blowing, pure and sweet,
 With day-spring born; here leave me to respire. Milton.
 How can any one be assured, that his meat and drink are not poisoned, and made unwholesome before they are brought to him? South.
 Rome is never fuller of nobility than in summer; for the country towns are so infected with unwholesome vapours, that they dare not trust themselves in them; while the heats last. Addison on Italy.
 Children born healthy, often contract diseases from an unwholesome nurse. A. Bathurst in Diet.
 2. Corrupt; tainted.
 We'll use this unwholesome humidity; this grofs, watry pumpon: we'll teach him to know turtles from jays. Shakespeare.
 UNWIELDILY. adv. Heavily; with difficult motion.
 Unwieldily they wallow first in ooze;
 Then in the shady covert seek repose. Dryden.
 UNWIELDINESS. n. s. Heaviness; difficulty to move, or be moved.
 To what a cumbersome unwieldiness,
 And burdensome corpulency my love had grown;
 But that I made it feed upon
 That which love worst endures, discretion. Donne.
 The supposed unwieldiness of its massy bulk, grounded upon our experience of the inaptitude of great and heavy bodies to motion, is a mere imposture of our senses. Glanville.
 UNWIELDY. adj. Unmanageable; not easily moving or moved; bulky; weighty; ponderous.
 An ague, meeting many humours in a fat, unwieldy body of fifty-eight years old, in four or five fits; carried him out of the world. Clarinden.
 Part, huge of bulk!
 Wallowing unwieldily, enormous in their gait,
 Tempest the ocean. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vii.
 Unwieldy fums of wealth, which higher broods,
 Than flies of marsh'd figures can account. Dryden.
 Nothing here th' unwieldy rock avails,
 Rebounding harmless from the platted scales,
 That, firmly join'd, preserv'd him from a wound,
 With native armour crusted all around. Addison's Ovid.
 What carriage can bear away all the rude and unwieldy lop-pings of a branchy tree at once? Watts's Impr. of the Mind.
 UNWILLING. adj. Loath; not contented; not inclined; not complying by inclination.
 The nature of man is unwilling to continue doing that wherein it shall always condemn itself. Hooker, b. v.
 If thou dost find him tractable,
 Encourage him, and tell him all our reasons;
 If he be leaden, icy, cold, unwilling,
 Be thou so too. Shakespeare's Rich. III.
 If

UNW

If the sun rise unwilling to his race,
Clouds on his brows; and spots upon his face,
Suspect a drizzling day. Dryden.
Heav'n's unchang'd decrees attentive hear;
More pow'ful gods have torn thee from my side,
Unwilling to resign, and doom'd a bride. Dryden.
UNWILLINGLY. adv. Not with good-will; not without loath-
ness.
The whining school-boy, with his fatchel,
And shining morning face, creeping like snail
Unwillingly to school. Shaksp. As You Like It.
A feast the people hold to Dagon, and forbid
Laborious works, unwillingly this rest
Their superstition yields. Milton's Agonistes.
Still dismay'd
By seas or skies, unwillingly they stay'd. Denham.
These men were once the prince's foes, and then
Unwillingly they made him great: but now,
Being his friends, shall willingly undo him. Denham.
The dire contagion spreads so fast,
That where it seizes, all relief is vain;
And therefore must unwillingly lay waste
That country, which would else the foe maintain. Dryden.
UNWILLINGNESS. n. f. Loathsomeness; disinclination.
Obedience, with professed unwillingness to obey, is no better than manifest disobedience. Hooker, b. v.
What moved the man to yield to her persuasions? Even the same cause that hath moved all men since, an unwillingness to grieve her, and make her sad, left she should pine, and be overcome with sorrow. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
I see with what unwillingness
You lay upon me this command, and through your fears Discern your love, and therefore must obey you. Denham.
There is in most people a reluctance and unwillingness to be forgotten. We observe, even among the vulgar, how fond they are to have an inscription over their grave. Swift.
To UNWIND. v. a. pret. and part. passive unwound.
1. To separate any thing convolved; to untwist; to untwine.
All his subjects having by some years learned, so to hope for good and fear harm, only from her, that it should have needed a stronger virtue than his, to have unwound so deeply an entered vice. Sidney, b. ii.
Empirick politicians use deceit:
You boldly shew that skill which they pretend,
And work by means as noble as your end;
Which should you veil, we might unwind the clue,
As men do nature, till we came to you. Dryden.
2. To disentangle; to loose from entanglement.
Desiring to serve God as they ought; but being not so skillful as in every point to unwind themselves, where the snarers of glozing speech lie to entangle them, are in mind not a little troubled, when they hear so bitter invectives against that, which this church hath taught them to reverence as holy. Hooker, b. v.
As you unwind her love from him,
Left it should ravel, and be good to none,
Bottom it on me. Shaksp. Two Gentlemen of Verona.
To UNWIND. v. n. To admit evolution.
Put the bottoms into clean scalding water, and they will easily unwind. Mortimer's Husbandry.
UNWIPED. adj. Not cleared.
Their hands and faces were all badg'd with blood,
So were their daggers, which unwip'd we found Upon their pillows. Shaksp. Macbeth.
UNWISE. adj. Weak; defective in wisdom.
O good, but most unwise patricians! why,
You grave, but reckless senators, have you thus Giv'n Hydra here to chafe an officer? Shaksp. Coriolanus.
Be not ta'en tardy by unwise delay. Shakspere.
He who of those delights can judge, and spare
To interpose them oft, is not unwise. Milton.
This the Greeks say, this the barbarians; the wife and the unwise. Tillotson.
When kings grow stubborn, slothful, or unwise,
Each private man for publick good should rise. Dryden.
When the balance of power is duly fixt in a state, nothing is more dangerous or unwise, than to give way to the first steps of popular encroachments. Swift.
UNWISELY. adv. Weakly; not prudently; not wisely.
Lady Zelmane, like some, unwisely liberal, that more delight to give presents than pay debts, chose rather to bestow her love upon me, than to recompense him. Sidney.
Unwisely we the wiser East
Pity, supposing them oppress'd
With tyrant's force. Waller.
To UNWISH. v. a. To wish that which is, not to be.
My liege, would you and I alone,
Without more help, could fight this royal battle.—
—Why now thou hast unwish'd five thousand men;
Which likes me better than to wish us one. Shakspere.

UNW

To desire there were no God, were plainly to unwish their own being, which must be annihilated in the subtraction of that essence, which substantially supporteth them. Brown.
UNWISHED. adj. Not fought; not desired.
So jealous is she of my love to her daughter, that I never yet begin to open my mouth to the inevitable Philoclea, but that her unwish'd presence gave my tale a conclusion, before it had a beginning. Sidney.
To his unwish'd yoke
My soul consents not to give lov'reignty. Shakspere.
While heaping unwish'd wealth I distant roam;
The best of brothers at his natal home
By the dire fury of a traitress wife,
Ends the sad evening of a stormy life.
UNWIST. adj. Unthought of; not known. Pope.
To UNWIT. v. a. To deprive of understanding. Not used.
Friends all but now; even now
In quarter, and in terms like bride and groom
Divesting them for bed; and then, but now,
As if some planet had unwist men,
Swords out, and tilting one at other's breasts. Shakspere.
UNWITHDRAWING. adj. Continually liberal.
Wherefore did nature pour her bounties forth,
With such a full and unwithdrawing hand,
Covering the earth with odours, fruits, and flocks? Milton.
UNWITHSTOOD. adj. Not opposed.
Credly plains,
And Agincourt, deep ting'd with blood, confess
What the Shires vigour unwithstood, Cou'd do in rigid fight. Phillips.
UNWITNESSED. adj. Wanting evidence; wanting notice.
Least their zeal to the cause should any way be unwit-ness'd. Hooker.
UNWITTINGLY. adv. [Properly unwittingly, from unwitting.]
Without knowledge; without consciousness.
In these fatal things it falls out, that the high-working powers make second causes unwittingly accessory to their determinations. Sidney.
Those things are termed most properly natural agents, which keep the law of their kind unwittingly, as the heavens and elements of the world, which can do no otherwise than they do. Hooker, b. i.
Atheists repudiate all title to heaven, merely for present pleasure; besides the extreme madness of running such a deperate hazard after death, they unwittingly deprive themselves here of that tranquillity they seek for. Bentley.
UNWONTED. adj.
1. Uncommon; unusual; rare; infrequent.
His sad, dull eyes, sunk deep in hollow pits,
Could not endure th' unwonted sun to view. Fairy Queen.
My father's of a better nature
Than he appears by speech; this is unwonted
Which now came from him. Shakspere.
This unwonted meteor is portentous, and some divine signification. Glanville.
Thine breath, quick pulse, and heaving of my heart,
All signs of some unwonted change appear. Dryden.
2. Unaccustomed; unused.
Philoclea, who blushing, and withal smiling, making shamefastness pleasant, and pleasure shamefast, tenderly moved her feet, unwonted to feel the naked ground. Sidney, b. ii.
Sea calves unwonted to fresh waters fly. Mey.
O how oft shall he
On faith and changed gods complain; and seas
Rough with black winds and storms,
Unwonted shall admire. Milton.
UNWORKING. adj. Living without labour.
Lazy and unworking shopkeepers in this being worse than gamesters, do not only keep so much of the money of a country in their hands, but make the publick pay them for it. Locke.
UNWORKSHIPPED. adj. Not adored.
He resolv'd to leave
Unworkshipp'd, unobey'd the throne supreme. Milton.
UNWORTHILY. adv. Not according to desert; either above or below merit.
I vow'd, bafe knight,
To tear the garter from thy craven leg,
Which I have done, because unworthily
Thou wast installed. Shaksp. Hen. VI.
Fearing lest my jealous aim might err,
And so unworthily disgrace the man,
I gave him gentle looks. Shakspere.
If we look upon the Odyssey as all a fiction, we consider it unworthily. It ought to be read as a story founded upon truth, adorned with embellishments of poetry. Brown.
UNWORTHINESS. n. f. Want of worth; want of merit.
A mind fearing the unworthiness of every word that should be presented to her ears, at length brought it forth in this manner. Sidney, b. ii.

UNY

O let not an excellent spirit do itself such wrong, as to think where it is placed, embraced, and loved, there can be any unworthiness; since the weakest mist is not easier driven away by the sun, than that is chased away with so high thoughts. Sidney.
Every night he comes with songs compos'd
To her unworthiness: it nothing iteads us
To chide him from our caves, for he persists. Shakspere.
I fear'd to find you in another place;
But, since you're here, my jealousy grows less:
You will be kind to my unworthiness. Dryden.
Have a true and humble sense of your own unworthiness, which will not suffer you to rise to a confidence unwarrantably pretended to by some. Wake on Death.
UNWORTHY. adj.
1. Not deserving.
The Athanasian creed and doxology should remain in use, the one as a most divine explication of the chiefest articles of the christian belief; the other as an heavenly acclamation of joyful applause to his praises, in whom we believe: neither the one nor the other unworthy to be heard founding, as they are in the church of Christ. Hooker.
Every particular accident, not unworthy the remembrance, for brevity I wittingly pass over. Kneller.
2. Wanting merit.
Degree being vizarded,
Th' unworthy shews as fairly in the mask. Shakspere.
Are there unworthy men chosen to offices? Willingste.
So may I, blind fortune leading me,
Mist that which one unworthy may attain;
And die with grieving. Shaksp. Merch. of Venice.
3. Mean.
Tell me, Philoclea, did you ever see such a shepherd?
did you ever hear of such a prince? and then tell me if a small or unworthy assault have conquered me? Sidney.
4. Not suitable; not adequate.
I laid at her feet a work, which was unworthy her, but which I hope she will forgive. Dryden.
Our friend's papers are in my hands, and I will take care to suppress things unworthy of him. Pope to Swift.
Care is taken to interperse additions in such a manner, that scarce any book can be bought, without purchasing something unworthy of the author. Swift.
5. Unbecoming; vile.
The brutal action rous'd his manly mind:
Mov'd with unworthy usage of the maid,
He, though unarm'd, resolv'd to give her aid. Dryden.
UNWOUND. part. pass. and pret. of unwind. Untwisted.
Thatchers tie with withs, but old pitch'd ropes unwound are more lasting. Mortimer's Husbandry.
UNWOUNDED. adj.
1. Not wounded.
We may offend
Our yet unwounded enemies. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi.
2. Not hurt.
Oh! blest with temper:
She who can love a sifter's charms, or hear
Sighs for a daughter with unwounded ear. Pope.
To UNWRITE. v. a. To untwine.
The beads of wild oats, and of divers other wild plants, continually wreath and unwreat themselves, according to the temperature of the ambient air. Boyle.
UNWRITING. adj. Not assuming the character of an author.
The peace of the honest unwriting subject was daily molest. Arbutnot.
UNWRITTEN. adj. Not conveyed by writing; oral; traditional.
A rule of right unwritten, but delivered by tradition from one to another. Spenser's State of Ireland.
As to his understanding, they bring him in void of all notion, a rude, unwritten blank; making him to be created as much an infant, as others are born. South's Sermons.
The laws of England may be divided into the written law, and the unwritten. Hale.
UNWORKED. adj. Not laboured; not manufactured.
Or prove at least to all of wiser thought,
Their hearts were fertile land, although unwork'd. Fairfax.
Yet thy moist clay is pliant to command;
Unwork'd and easy to the potter's hand:
Now take the mold, now bend thy mind to feel
The first sharp motions of the forming wheel. Dryden.
UNWRUNG. adj. Not pinched.
We that have free souls, it touches us not; let the galled jade winch, our withers are unwring. Shaksp. Hamlet.
UNYIELDED. adj. Not given up.
O'erpower'd at length, they force him to the ground,
Unyielded as he was, and to the pillar bound. Dryden.
To UNYOLKE. v. a.
1. To loose from the yoke.
Our army is dispers'd already:
Like youthful flocks unyok'd, they took their course
East, west, north, south. Shaksp. Hen. IV.

VOC

Homer calls them like gods, and yet gives them the employment of slaves; they unyoke the mules. Breche.
2. To part; to disjoin.
Shall these hands, so lately purg'd of blood,
So join'd in love, so strong in both,
Unyoke this seizure, and this kind regret. Shakspere.
UNYOKED. adj.
1. Having never worn a yoke.
Sav'n bullocks yet unyok'd for Phcebus chuse,
And for Diana sev'n unpotted ewes. Dryden.
2. Licentious; unrestrained.
I will a-while uphold
The unyok'd humour of your idleness. Shaksp. Hen. IV.
UNZONED. adj. Not bound with a girdle.
Easy her motion seem'd, serene her air;
Full, though unzon'd, her bosom. Prior.
VOCABULARY. n. f. [vocabulary, Lat. vocabulaire, Fr.] A dictionary; a lexicon; a word book.
Some have delivered the polity of spirits, and that they stand in awe of conjurations, which signify nothing, not only in the dictionary of man, but in the subtler vocabulary of Satan. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
Among other books, we should be furnished with vocabula-ries and dictionaries of several forts. Watts.
VOCAL. adj. [vocal, Fr. vocalis, Lat.]
1. Having a voice.
Eyes are vocal, tears have tongues;
And there be words not made with lungs;
Sententious show'rs! O let them fall,
Their cadence is rhetorical. Cresshaw.
Witness if I be silent, morn or even,
To hill, or valley, fountain, or fresh shade;
Made vocal by my song, and taught his praise.
Smooth-sliding Mincius, crown'd with vocal reeds,
That strain I heard was of a higher mood. Milton.
None can animate the lyre,
And the mute strings with vocal souls inspire,
As Helen, in whose eyes ten thousand Cupids dwell. Dryden.
Memnon, though stone, was counted vocal;
But 'twas the god, mean while, that spoke all.
Rome oft has heard a cross haranguing,
With prompting priest behind the hanging. Prior.
2. Uttered or modulated by the voice.
They which, under pretence of the law ceremonial being abrogated, require the abrogation of instrumental music, approving nevertheless the use of vocal melody to remain, must shew some reason wherefore the one should be thought a legal ceremony, and not the other. Hooker.
And join'd their vocal worship to the choir
Of creatures wanting voice. Milton's Par. Lost.
VOCALITY. n. f. [vocalitas, Lat. from vocal.] Power of utterance; quality of being utterable by the voice.
L and R being in extremes, one of roughness, the other of smoothness and freeness of vocality, are not easy in tract of vocal speech to be pronounced spiritaly. Holder.
To VOCALIZE. v. a. [from vocal.] To form into voice.
It is one thing to give an impulse to breath alone; and other thing to vocalize that breath, i. e. in its passage through the larynx, to give it the sound of human voice. Holder.
VOCALLY. adv. [from vocal.] In words; articulately.
Although it is as natural to mankind, to express their desires vocally, as it is for brutes to use their natural vocal signs; yet the forming of languages into this or that fashion, is a business of institution. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
VOCATION. n. f. [vocation, Fr. vocatio, Lat.]
1. Calling by the will of God.
Neither doth that which St. Paul, or other apostles, teach, enforce the utter disability of any other men's vocation thought requisite in this church for the saving of souls. Hooker, b. v.
They which thus were in God eternally by their intended admission to life, have, by vocation or adoption, God actually now in them. Hooker, b. v.
2. Summons.
What can be urged for them who not having the vocation of poverty to scribble, out of meer wantonness make themselves ridiculous? Dryden.
3. Trade; employment.
He would think his service greatly rewarded, if he might obtain by that means to live in the light of his prince, and yet practise his own chosen vocation. Sidney, b. i.
God's mother, in a vision full of majesty,
Will'd me to leave my bafe vocation. Shaksp. Hen. VI.
God has furnished men with faculties sufficient to direct them in the way they should take, if they will seriously employ them, when their ordinary vocations allow them the leisure. Locke.
A whore in her vocation,
Keeps punctual to an assignation. Swift.
VOCATIVE. n. f. [vocatif, Fr. vocativus, Lat.] The grammatical case used in calling or speaking to.

VOI

VOCIFERA'TION. n. f. [vociferatio, vocifero, Lat.] Clamour; outcry.
The lungs, kept too long upon the stretch by vociferation, or loud singing, may produce the same effect. Arbutnot.
VOCIFEROUS. adj. [vocifero, Lat.] Clamorous; noisy.
Several templars, and others of the more vociferous kind of critics, went with a resolution to hiss, and confest'd they were forced to laugh. Pope.
VOGUE. n. f. [vogue, Fr. from voguer, to float, or fly at large.] Fashion; mode.
It is not more absurd to undertake to tell the name of an unknown person by his looks, than to vouch a man's faintship from the vogue of the world. South.
Use may revive the obsolete words,
And banish those that now are most in vogue. Reform.
What fashions th' have, and what they drive at
In public vogue, or what in private. Hudibras.
In the vogue of the world, it passes for an exploit of honour, for kings to run away with whole countries that they have no pretence to. L'Estrange.
No periodical writer, who always maintains his gravity, and does not sometimes sacrifice to the graces, must expect to keep in vogue for any time. Addison.
At one time they keep their patients so close and warm, as almost to fiddle them; and all on a sudden the cold regimen is in vogue. Baker's Reflections on Learning.
VOICE. n. f. [vox, Fr. vois, Lat.]
1. Sound emitted by the mouth.
2. Sound of the mouth, as distinguished from that uttered by another mouth.
Air in sounds that are not tones, which are all equal, admitteth much variety, as in the voices of living creatures, and in the voices of several men; for we can discern several men by their voices. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
3. Any sound made by breath.
O Marcus, I am warm'd; my heart
Leaps at the trumpet's voice, and burns for glory. Addison.
4. Vote; suffrage; opinion expressed.
Are you all resolv'd to give your voices?
But that's no matter, the greater part carries it. Shakespeare.
I've no words;
My voice is in my sword! thou bloodier villain
Than terms can give thee out. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
The state was betrayed by the multitude and corruption of voices, and must shortly perish, if not committed to the grave judgment of some few; for two hundred gave voices, reducing that multitude to fifty, who, for their experience, were holden for men of greatest gravity. Knolles.
Some laws ordain, and some attend the choice
Of holy senates, and elect by voice. Dryden.
To VOICE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To rumour; to report. Out of use.
Is this th' Athenian minion, whom the world
Voic'd to regardfully? Shakespeare. Timon of Athens.
It was voiced that the king purposed to put to death Edward Plantagenet, prisoner in the tower; whereat there was great murmur. Bacon's Hen. VII.
Many fought to feed
The easy creditors of novelties,
By voicing him alive. Daniel's Civil War.
2. To vote.
Your minds, pre-occupied with what
You rather must do, than what you should do,
Made you, against the grain, to voice him consul. Shakespeare.
To VOICE. v. n. To clamour; to make outcries. Obsolete.
Stir not questions of jurisdiction; and rather assume thy right in silence, than voice it with claims. Bacon.
It is not the gift of every person to harangue the multitude, to voice it loud and high. South's Sermons.
VOICED. adj. [from the noun.] Furnished with a voice.
Thar's Erythra,
Or some angel voic'd like her. 'Tis she! my struggling foul
Would fain go out to meet and welcome her! Denham.
VOID. adj. [voides, Fr.]
1. Empty; vacant.
The earth was without form and void, and darkness was upon the face of the deep. Genesis i. 2.
I'll get me to a place more void, and there
Speak to great Caesar as he comes along. Shakespeare.
2. Vain; ineffectual; null; vacated.
If it be void, and to no purpose, that the names of men are so frequent in their books, what did move them to bring them in?
My word shall not return void, but accomplish that which I please. Isa. lv. 11.
This custom made their whole government void, as an engine built against human society, worthy to be fired and pulled down. Bacon.
Though the wisdom of a future parliament may find cause to declare this, or that act of parliament void, yet there will be the same temper requisite to repeal it. Clarendon.

VOL

The two houses declared, that nothing which should front that time pass under the great seal, should be good and valid, but void and null. Clarendon, b. viii.
Some kind of subjection is due from every man to every man, which cannot be made void by any power whatsoever. Swift.
3. Unsupplied; unoccupied.
Queen Elizabeth, importuned much to supply divers great offices that had been long void, answered nothing to the matter, but rose up on the sudden, and said, I am sure my office will not be long void. Camden.
4. Wanting; unfurnished; empty.
If some be admitted into the ministry, void of learning, or few in life, are all the rest to be condemned? Whitgift.
How void of reason are our hopes and fears! Dryden.
Being void of all friendship and enmity, they never complain. Swift.
5. Unsubstantial; unreal.
Senseless, lifeless idol, void and vain. Pope.
VOID. n. f. [from the adj.] An empty space; vacuum; vacancy.
Pride, where wit fails, steps in to our defence,
And fills up all the mighty void of sense. Pope.
With what power
Were first th' unwieldy planets launch'd along
Th' illimitable void? Thomson.
To VOID. v. a. [from the adjective; voider, Fr.]
1. To quit; to leave empty.
If they will fight with us, bid them come down,
Or void the field. Shakespeare. Hen. V.
How in our voiding lobby hast thou stood,
And duly waited for my coming forth? Shakespeare. Hen. VI.
Towards this passage, somewhat darker than the chamber which he voided, this assassin gave him, with a back blow, a deep wound into his left side. Watson's Buckingham.
2. To emit; to pour out.
The ascending water is vented by fits, every circumvolution voiding only so much as is contained in one helix. Wilkins.
3. To emit as excrement.
Excrements smell ill to the same creature that voideth them; and the cat burrieth what she voideth. Bacon.
Believ'd the heav'ns were made of stone,
Because the sun had voided one. Hudibras.
By the use of emulsions, and frequent emollient injections, his urine voided more easily. Wifeman's Surgery.
Fleshy filaments, or matter voided by urine, are suspicious symptoms of a stone in the kidneys, especially if the patient has been subject to voiding of gravel. Arbutnot.
4. To vacate; to nullify; to annul.
It was become a practice, upon any specious pretences, to void the security that was at any time given for money so borrowed. Clarendon.
VOIDABLE. adj. [from void.] Such as may be annulled.
If the metropolitan, pretending the party deceased had bona notabilia in divers dioceses, grants letters of administration, such administration is not void, but voidable by a sentence. Ayl.
VOIDER. n. f. [from void.] A basket, in which broken meat is carried from the table.
A voider for the nonce,
I wrong the devil should I pick their bones. Clarendon.
VOIDNESS. n. f. [from void.]
1. Emptiness; vacancy.
2. Nullity; inefficacy.
3. Want of substantiality.
If thereby you understand their nakedness and voidness of all mixt bodies, good divines are of opinion, that the work of the creation was not in itself distinguished by days. Hale.
VOITURE. n. f. [French.] Carriage; transportation by carriage. Not in use.
They ought to use exercise by voiture or carriage. Arbutnot.
VOLANT. adj. [volans, Lat. volant, Fr.]
1. Flying; passing through the air.
The volant, or flying automata, are such mechanical contrivances as have a self-motion, whereby they are carried aloft in the air, like birds. Wilkins's Math. Magick.
2. Nimble; active.
His volant touch
Instinct through all proportions, low and high,
Fled, and pursu'd transverse the resonant fugus. Milton.
Blind British bards, with volant touch,
Traverse loquacious strings, whose solemn notes
Provoke to harmless revels. Philips.
VOLATILE. adj. [volatilis, Lat.]
1. Flying; passing through the air.
The caterpillar towards the end of summer waxeth volatile, and turneth to a butterfly. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
There is no creature only volatile, or no flying animal but hath feet as well as wings; because there is not sufficient food for them always in the air. Ray on the Creation.
2. [Volatile, Fr.] Having the power to pass off by spontaneous evaporation.
In vain, though by their pow'rful art they bind Volatile Hermes. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.
When

VOL

When arsenick with soap gives a regulus, aid with mēt-cury sublimate a volatile fusible salt, like butter of antimony; doth not this shew that arsenick, which is a substance totally volatile, is compounded of fix'd and volatile parts, strongly cohering by a mutual attraction; so that the volatile will not ascend without carrying up the fixed? Newton.
3. Lively; fickle; changeable of mind; full of spirit.
Active spirits, who are ever skimming over the surface of things with a volatile temper, will fix nothing in their mind. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
You are as giddy and volatile as ever, just the reverse of Mr. Pope, who hath always loved a domestick life. Swift.
VOLATILE. n. f. [volatile, Fr.] A winged animal.
The air conveys the heat of the sun, maintains fires, and serves for the flight of volatiles. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
VOLATILENESS. n. f. [volatilité, Fr. from volatile.]
VOLATILITY. n. f. [volatilité, Fr. from volatile.]
1. The quality of flying away by evaporation; not fixity.
Upon the compound body, chiefly observe the colour, fragility, or plantiness, the volatility or fixation, compared with simple bodies. Bacon.
Of volatility, the utmost degree is, when it will fly away without returning.
Heat causeth the spirits to search some issue out of the body, as in the volatility of metals. Bacon.
The animal spirits cannot, by reason of their subtilty and volatileness, be discovered to the sense. Hale.
The volatility of mercury argues that they are not much bigger; nor may they be much less, lest they lose their opacity. Newton's Opticks.
By the spirit of a plant, we understand that pure, elaborated oil, which, by reason of its extreme volatility, exhales spontaneously, in which the odour or smell consists. Arbutnot.
2. Mutability of mind.
VOLATILIZATION. n. f. [from volatilize.] The act of making volatile.
Chemists have, by a variety of ways, attempted in vain the volatilization of the salt of tartar. Boyle.
To VO'LATILIZE. v. a. [volatiliser, Fr. from volatile.] To make volatile; to subtilize to the highest degree.
Spirit of wine has a refractive power, in a middle degree between those of water and oily substances, and accordingly seems to be composed of both, united by fermentation: the water, by means of some saline spirits with which it is impregnated, dissolving the oil, and volatilizing it by the action. Newton's Opticks.
Spirituos liquors are so far from attenuating, volatilizing, and rendering perspirable the animal fluids, that it rather condenses them. Arbutnot on Aliments.
VOLE. n. f. [vole, Fr.] A deal at cards, that draws the whole tricks.
Past fix, and not a living soul!
I might by this have won a vole. Swift.
VOLCANO. n. f. [Italian, from Vulcan.] A burning mountain.
Navigators tell us there is a burning mountain in an island, and many volcanos, and fiery hills. Brown.
When the Cyclops o'er their anvils sweat,
From the volcano's gross eruptions rise,
And curling sheets of smoke obscure the skies. Garth.
Subterraneous minerals ferment, and cause earthquakes, and cause furious eruptions of volcano's, and tumble down broken rocks. Bentley's Sermons.
VOLERY. n. f. [volerie, Fr.] A flight of birds.
An old boy, at his first appearance, is sure to draw on him the eyes and chirping of the whole town volery; amongst which, there will not be wanting some birds of prey, that will presently be on the wing for him. Locke.
VOLITATION. n. f. [volitis, Lat.] The act or power of flying.
Birds and flying animals are almost erect, advancing the head and breast in their progression, and only prone in the act of volitation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
VOLITION. n. f. [volitis, Lat.] The act of willing; the power of choice exerted.
There is as much difference between the approbation of the judgment, and the actual volitions of the will, as between a man's viewing a desirable thing with his eye, and reaching after it with his hand. South's Sermons.
Volition is the actual exercise of the power the mind has to order the consideration of any idea, or the forbearing to consider it; or to prefer the motion of any part of the body to its rest, by directing any particular action, or its forbearance. Locke.
VOLITIVE. adj. Having the power to will.
They not only perfect the intellectual faculty, but the volitive; making the man not only more knowing, but more wise and better. Hale.
VOLLEY. n. f. [volte, Fr.]
1. A flight of shot.
From the wood a volley of shot flew two of his company. Raleigh's Apology.

VOL

More on his gifts relies, than on his sword,
From whence a fatal volley we receiv'd. Waller.
2. A burst; an emission of many at once.
A fine volley of words, gentlemen, and quickly shot off. Shakespeare.
Disfrustful sense with modest caution speaks;
It still looks home, and short excursions makes;
But rattling nonsense in full vollies breaks. Pope.
To VO'LLY. v. n. To throw out.
The holding every man shall beat as loud
As his strong sides can volley. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.
VO'LLIED. adj. [from volley.] Disposed; discharged with a volley.
I stood
Thy fiercest, when in battle to thy aid
The blasting volley'd thunder made all speed. Milton.
The Gallick navy, impotent to bear
His volley'd thunder, torn, dislever'd, scud. Philips.
VOL. n. f. [volte, Fr.] Volte signifies a round or a circular tread; a gate of two treads made by a horse going sideways round a center; so that these two treads make parallel tracks, the one which is made by the fore feet larger, and the other by the hinder feet smaller; the shoulders bearing outwards, and the croupe approaching towards the center. Farrier's Dict.
VOLUBILITY. n. f. [volubilité, Fr. volubilitas, from volubilis, Lat.]
1. The act or power of rolling.
Volubility, or aptness to roll, is the property of a bowl, and is derived from its roundness. Watts's Logic.
Then celestial spheres should forget their wonted motions, and by irregular volubility, turn themselves any way, as it might happen. Hooker's b. i.
2. Activity of tongue; fluency of speech.
Say the be mute, and will not speak a word;
Then I'll commend her volubility. Shakespeare.
He express'd himself with great volubility of words, natural and proper. Clarendon.
He had all the French assurance, cunning, and volubility of tongue. Addison.
She ran over the catalogue of diversions with such a volubility of tongue, as drew a gentle reprimand from her father. Female Quixote.
3. Mutability; lability to revolution.
He that's a victor this moment, may be a slave the next: and this volubility of human affairs, is the judgment of providence, in the punishment of oppression. L'Estrange.
VOLUBLE. adj. [volubilis, Lat.]
1. Formed so as to roll easily; formed so as to be easily put in motion.
Neither the weight of the matter of which a cylinder is made, nor its round voluble form, which, meeting with a precipice, do necessarily continue the motion of it, are any more imputable to that dead, choiceless creature in its first motion. Hammond.
The adventitious corpuscles may produce stability in the matter they pervade, by expelling thence those voluble particles, which, whilst they continued, did by their shape unfit for cohesion, or, by their motion, oppose coalition. Boyle.
2. Rolling; having quick motion.
This less voluble earth,
By shorter flight to th' east, had left him there. Milton.
Then voluble, and bold; now hid, now seen,
Among thick-woven arborets. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iv.
3. Nimble; active. Applied to the tongue.
A friend promised to dissect a woman's tongue, and examine whether there may not be in it certain juices, which render it so wonderfully voluble and flippant. Addison.
These with a voluble and flippant tongue, become mere echo's. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
4. Fluent of words. It is applied to the speech, or the speaker.
Cassio, a knave very voluble; no further conscionable, than in putting on the meer form of civil and humane seeming, for the better compassing of his loose affection. Shakespeare.
If voluble and sharp discourse be marr'd,
Unkindness blunts it more than marble hard. Shakespeare.
VOLUME. n. f. [volumen, Lat.]
1. Something rolled, or convolved.
2. As much as seems convolved at once; as a fold of a serpent, a wave of water.
Threefold and ten I can remember well;
Within the volume of which time I've seen Hours dreadful, and things strange. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
Unoppos'd they either lose their force,
Or wind in volumes to their former course. Dryden.
Behind the gen'ral mends his weary pace,
And silently to his revenge he fails:
So glides some trodden serpent on the grass,
And long behind his wounded volume trails. Dryden.
Thames' fruitful tides,
Slow through the vale in silver volumes play. Fenton.
By

VOL

By the insinuations of these crystals, the volumes of air are driven out of the watery particles, and many of them uniting, form larger volumes, which thereby have a greater force to expand themselves. Cheyne.

3. [Volume, Fr.] A book; so called, because books were anciently rolled upon a staff.

Guyon all this while his book did read,
Ne yet has ended; for it was a great
And ample volume, that doth far exceed My leisure, so long leaves here to repeat. Fairy Queen.
Calmly, I do beseech you—
Aye, as an hostler, that for the poorest piece
Will bear the knave by th' volume. Shakespeare.
I shall not now enlarge on the wrong judgments whereby men mislead themselves. This would make a volume. Locke.
If one short volume could comprize
All that was witty, learn'd and wise:
How would it be esteem'd and read? Swift.

VOLUMINOUS, adj. [from volume.]
1. Consisting of many complications.
The serpent roll'd voluminous and vast. Milton.
2. Consisting in many volumes, or books.
If heav'n write aught of fate, by what the stars
Voluminous, or single characters. Milton.
In their conjunction met, give me to spell.
There is pleasure in doing something new, though never so little, without pestering the world with voluminous transcriptions. Grant's Bills of Mortality.
3. Copious; diffusive.
He did not bear contradiction without much passion, and was too voluminous in discourse. Clarendon.
The most fervent reader makes allowances for many rests and nodding-places in a voluminous writer. Spectator, N° 124.
VOLUMINOUSLY, adv. [from voluminous.] In many volumes or books.

The controversies are hotly managed by the divided schools, and voluminously every where handled. Granville.
VOLUNTARILY, adv. [from voluntarius, Fr. from voluntary.] Spontaneously; of one's own accord; without compulsion.
Sith there is no likelihood that ever voluntarily they will seek instruction at our hands, it remaineth that unless we will suffer them to perish, salvation itself must seek them. Hooker.
To be agents voluntarily in our own destruction, is against God and nature. Hooker, b. v.
Self-preservation will oblige a man voluntarily, and by choice, to undergo any less evil, to secure himself but from the probability of an evil incomparably greater. South.
VOLUNTARY, adj. [from voluntarius, Fr. from voluntarius, Lat.]
1. Acting without compulsion; acting by choice.
God did not work as a necessary, but a voluntary agent;
intending before-hand, and decreeing with himself, that which did outwardly proceed from him. Hooker, b. i.
The lottery of my destiny
Bars me the right of voluntary chusing. Shakespeare.
2. Willing; acting with willingness.
Then virtue was no more, her guard away,
She fell to lust a voluntary prey. Pope's Odyssey.
3. Done without compulsion.
Voluntary forbearance denotes the forbearance of an action, consequent to an order of the mind. Locke.
The old duke is banished; the new duke, and three or four loving lords, have put themselves into voluntary exile with him. Shakespeare. As You Like It.
They must have recourse to abstinence, which is but volun- tary fasting, and to exercise, which is but voluntary labour. Seed's Sermon.

4. Acting of its own accord; spontaneous.
The public prayers of the people of God in churches thoroughly settled, did never use to be voluntary dictates, proceeding from any man's extemporal wit. Hooker, b. v.
Thoughts which voluntary move Harmonious numbers. Milton.

VOLUNTARY, n. f. [from the adjective.]
1. A volunteer; one who engages in any affair of his own accord.
All th' unsettled humours of the land;
Rash, inconsiderate, fiery voluntaries. Shakespeare.
Ajax was here the voluntary, and you as under an impres. Shakespeare.
The bordering wars were made altogether by voluntaries, upon their own head. Davies's Ireland.
Aids came in partly upon misfires, and partly voluntaries
from all parts. Bacon.

2. A piece of music play'd at will, without any settled rule.
Whistling winds, like organs, play'd,
Until their voluntaries made
The waken'd earth in odours rise,
To be her morning sacrifice. Clarendon.
By a voluntary before the first lesson, we are prepar'd for admission of those divine truths, which we are shortly to receive. Spectator, N° 630.

VOM

VOLUNTEER, n. f. [from volontaire, Fr.] A soldier who enters into the service of his own accord.

Congreve, and the author of the Relapse, being the principals in the dispute, I satisfy them; as for the volunteers, they will find themselves affected with the misfortune of their friends. Callier.

All Asia now was by the ears;
And Gods beat up for volunteers
To Greece and Troy. Prior.

To VOLUNTEER, v. n. To go for a soldier. A cant word.
Leave off these wagers, for in conscience speaking,
The city needs not your new tricks for breaking.
And if you gallants lose, to all appearing,
You'll want an equipage for volunteering. Dryden.

VOLUTUARY, n. f. [from volutarius, Fr. volutarius, Lat.] A man given up to pleasure and luxury.
Does not the volutary understand in all the liberties of a loose and a lewd conversation, that he runs the risk of body and soul? L'Estrange.

The parable was intended against the volutaries; men who liv'd like heathens, dissolutely, without regarding any of the restraints of religion. Atterbury.

VOLUPTUOUS, n. f. [from voluptuosus, Lat. voluptuosus, Fr.]
Given to excess of pleasure; luxurious.
He them deceives; deceiv'd in his deceit;
Made drunk with drugs of dear voluptuous receipt. Spenser.
If a new sect have not two properties, it will not spread.
The one is the supplanting, or the opposing of authority established; the other is the giving license to pleasures, and a voluptuous life. Bacon.

Thou wilt bring me soon
To that new world of light and bliss, among
The gods, who live at ease, where I shall reign
At thy right hand voluptuous, without end. Milton.
Then swol'n with pride, into the snare I fell
Of fair fallacious looks; venereal trains,
Soft'ned with pleasure, and voluptuous life. Milton.

Speculative atheism subsists only in our speculation; whereas really human nature cannot be guilty of the crime. Indeed a few sensual and voluptuous persons may for a season eclipse this native light of the soul, but can never wholly smother and extinguish it. Bentley's Sermons.

VOLUPTUOUSLY, adv. [from voluptuosus.] Luxuriously; with indulgence of excessive pleasure.
Had I a dozen sons, I had rather eleven died nobly for their country, than one voluptuously surfeit out of action. Shake.
This cannot be done, if my will be so worldly or voluptuously disposed, as never to suffer me to think of them; but perpetually to carry away, and apply my mind to other things. South.

VOLUPTUOUSNESS, n. f. [from voluptuosus.] Luxurioulness; ad-dictedness to excess of pleasure.
There's no bottom
In my voluptuousness: your wives, your daughters,
Your matrons, and your maids, could not fill up
The cistern of my lust. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
If he fill'd his vacancy with his voluptuousness,
Full surfeits, and the dryness of his bones
Call on him for't. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.

Here where still ev'ning is, not noon nor night;
Where no voluptuousness, yet all delight. Dante.
These fons of Epicurus, for voluptuousness and irreligion, must pass for the only wits of the age. South.

You may be free, unless
Your other lord forbids, voluptuousness. Dryden.
VOLUTE, n. f. [from volute, Fr.] A member of a column.
That part of the capitals of the Ionick, Corinthian, and Composite orders, which is supposed to represent the bark of trees twisted and turned into spiral lines, or, according to others, the head-dresses of virgins in their long hair. According to Vitruvius, those that appear above the stems in the Corinthian order, are sixteen in every capital, four in the Ionick, and eight in the Composite. These *volute*s are more especially remarkable in the Ionick capital, representing a pillow or cushion laid between the abacus and echinus;
whence that ancient architect calls the volute polvius. Haris.
It is said there is an Ionick pillar in the Santa Maria Trantevere, where the marks of the compass are still to be seen on the volute; and that Palladio learnt from thence the working of that difficult problem. Adisson.

VOMICA, n. f. [Latin.] An encysted humour in the lungs, attended with the same symptoms as an empyema; because the vomica communicating with the vessels of the lungs, must necessarily void some of the putrid matter, and taint the blood. A. badius on Diet.

VOMIC, n. f.
Vomic nut is the nucleus of a fruit of an East-Indian tree, the wood of which is the lignum colubinum, or snake-wood of the shops. It is flat, compressed, and round, of the breadth of a shilling, and about the thickness of a crown-piece. It is certain poison to quadrupeds and birds; and taken taken internally, in small doses, it disturbs the whole human frame, and brings on convulsions. Hill's Mat. Medica.

To VOMIT, v. n. [from vomere, Latin.]
1. To cast up the contents of the stomach.
The dog, when he is sick at the stomach, knows his cure, falls to his grass, vomits, and is well. Mere.

To VOMIT, v. a. [from vomire, Fr.]
1. To throw up from the stomach.
Hast thou found honey? eat so much as is sufficient, lest thou be filled therewith, and vomit it. Prov. xxv. 16.
The fish vomited out Jonah upon the dry land. Jonah ii.
Vomiting is of use, when the foulness of the stomach requires it. Wiseham's Surgery.

Weak stomachs vomit up the wine that they drink in too great quantities, in the form of vinegar. Arbutnot.
2. To throw up with violence from any hollow.
VOMIT, n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The matter thrown up from the stomach.
He shall cast up the wealth by him devour'd,
Like vomit from his yawning entrails pour'd. Sandys.

2. An emetic medicine; a medicine that causes vomit.
Whether a vomit may be safely given, must be judged by the circumstances; if there be any symptoms of an inflammation of the stomach, a vomit is extremely dangerous. Arbut.

VOMITION, n. f. [from vomere, Lat.] The act or power of vomitting.
How many have fared their lives, by spewing up their debauch? Whereas, if the stomach had wanted the faculty of vomition, they had inevitably died. Grew's Cosmology.

VOMITIVE, adj. [from vomit, Fr.] Emetic; causing vomits.
From this vitriolous quality, mercurius dulcis, and vitriol vomitivus, occasion black ejections. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

VOMITORY, adj. [from vomitare, Fr. vomitarius, Lat.] Procuring vomits; emetic.
Since regulus of stibium, or glass of antimony, will communicate to water or wine a purging or vomitary operation, yet the body itself, after iterated infusions, abates not virtue or weight. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

Some have vomited up such bodies as these, namely, thick, short, blunt pins, which, by straining, they vomit up again, or by taking vomitaries privately. Harvey on Consumptions.

VORACIOUS, adj. [from vorare, Fr. vorax, Lat.]
1. Greedy to eat; ravenous; cadacious.
So voracious is this humour grown, that it draws in every thing to feed it. Gower's Court of the Tongue.

VORACIOUSLY, adv. [from voracious.] Greedily; ravenously.
VORACIOUSNESS, n. f. [from voracitas, Fr. voracitas, Lat. from vo- VORACITY.] racius.] Greediness; ravenine; ravenousness.

He is as well contented with this, as those that with the rarities of the earth pamper their voracities. Sandys.
Creatures by their voracity pernicious, have commonly fewer young. Derham's Physico-Theology.

VORTEX, n. f. In the plural vortices. [Latin.] Any thing whirled round.
If many contiguous vortices of molten pitch were each of them as large as those which some suppose to revolve about the sun and fix'd stars; yet these, and all their parts would, by their tenacity and stiffness, communicate their motion to one another. Newton's Opticks.

Nothing else could impel it, unless the ethereal matter be supposed to be carried about the sun, like a vortex, or whirlpool, as a vehicle to convey it and the rest of the planets. Bentley's Sermons.

The gath'ring number, as it moves along,
Involves a vast involuntary throng;
Who gently drawn, and struggling less and less,
Roll in her vortex, and her power confess. Pope.

VORTICAL, adj. [from vortex.] Having a whirling motion.
If three equal round vessels be filled, the one with cold water, the other with oil, the third with molten pitch, and the liquors be stirred about alike, to give them a vortical motion; the pitch, by its tenacity, will lose its motion quickly; the oil, being less tenacious, will keep it longer; and the water being still less tenacious, will keep it longest, but yet will lose it in a short time. Newton's Opticks.

It is not a magnetic power, nor the effect of a vortical motion; those common attempts towards the explication of gravity. Bentley's Sermons.

VOTARIST, n. f. [from devotus, Lat.] One devoted to any person or thing; one given up by a vow to any service or worship;
votary.

I with a more strict restraint
Upon the sisterhood, the votarists of St. Clare. Shakespeare.
Earth, yield me roots! What is here?
Gold! yellow, glittering, precious gold!
No, gods, I am no idle votarist. Shakespeare.

The grey-hooded ev'n,
Like a sad votarist in palmer's weed,
Rose from the hindmost wheels of Phœbus' wain. Milton.

VOU

VO' TARY, n. f. One devoted, as by a vow, to any particular service, worship, study, or state of life.

Wherefore waste I time to counsel thee?
Thou art a votary to fond desire. Shakespeare.
Thou, faint god of sleep! forget that I
Was ever known to be thy votary.
No more my pillow shall thine altar be,
Nor will I offer any more to thee,
Myself a melting sacrifice. Crashaw.

By these means, men worship the idols have been set up in their minds, and stamp the characters of divinity upon abur-dities and errors, become zealous votaries to bulls and mon-kies. Locke.

The enemy of our happiness has his servants and votaries, among those who are called by the name of the son of God. Rogers's Sermons.

How can heav'nly wisdom prove
An instrument to earthly love?
Know't thou not yet, that men commence
Thy votaries for want of sense. Swift.

VO' TARY, adj. Consequent to a vow.
Superstition is now so well advanced, that men of the first blood are as firm as butchers by occupation; and votary resolution is made equipollent to custom, even in matter of blood. Bac.

VO' TARESS, n. f. [female of votary.] A woman devoted to any worship or state.
The imperial vot'ress passed on,
In maiden meditation, fancy free. Shakespeare.
His mother was a vot'ress of my order;
And, in the spiced Indian air by night,
Full often she hath gossip'd by my side. Shakespeare.

No rotary this vot'ress needs,
Her very syllables are beads. Cleveland.
Thy vot'ress from my tender years I am;
And love, like thee, the woods and sylvan game. Dryden.
What force have pious vows? the queen of love
His sister sends, her vot'ress from above. Pope.

VOTE, n. f. [from votum, Lat.] Suffrage; voice given and numbered.
He that joins instruction with delight,
Profit with pleasure, carries all the votes. Reformers.
How many have no other ground for their tenets, than the supposed honesty or learning of those of the same profession?
as if truth were to be established by the vote of the multitude. Locke.

The final determination arises from the majority of opinions or votes in the assembly, because they ought to be sway'd by the superior weight of reason. Watts.

To VOTE, v. a.
1. To chuse by suffrage; to determine by suffrage.
You are not only in the eye and ear of your master; but you are also a favourite, the favourite of the time, and so are in his bosom also; the world hath also voted you, and doth so esteem of you. Bacon.

2. To give by vote.
The parliament voted them one hundred thousand pounds by way of recompence for their sufferings. Swift.
VO' TEE, n. f. [from votum.] One who has the right of giving his voice or suffrage.

Elections growing chargeable, the voters, that is, the bulk of the common people, have been universally reduced into bribery, perjury, drunkenness, malice, and slander. Swift.
He hates an action base;
Can sometimes drop a voter's claim,
And give up party to his fame. Swift.

VO' TIVE, adj. [from votum, Lat.] Given by vow.
Such in Isis' temple you may find,
On votive tablets to the life pourtray'd. Dryden.
Venus! take my votive glass;
Since I am not what I was,
What from this day I shall be,
Venus! let me never see. Prior.

To VOUCH, v. a. [from vouchere, Norman French.]
1. To call to witness; to obtest.
The sun and day are witnesses for me;
Let him who fights unseen relate his own,
And vouch the silent stars and conscious moon. Dryden.

2. To attest; to warrant; to maintain.
You do not give the cheer; the feast is sold
That is not often vouch'd, while 'tis making 'Tis given with welcome. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
The consistency of the discourse, and the pertinency of it to the design he is upon, vouches it worthy of our great apostle. Locke.

They made him ashamed to vouch the truth of the relation, and afterwards to credit it. Atterbury.
To Vouch, v. n. To bear witness; to appear as a witness;
to give testimony.

He declares he will not believe her, until the elector of Hanover shall vouch for the truth of what she hath so solemnly affirmed. Swift.

Vouch.

VOW

Vouch. n. f. [from the verb.] Warrant; attestation.
What praise couldst thou bestow on a deserving woman indeed? one that in the authority of her merit, did justly put on the vouch of very malice itself? Shakefp. Othello.
VOUCHER. n. f. [from vouch.] One who gives witness to any thing.
Better to starve,
Than crave the hire which first we do deserve:
Why in this wolfish gown should I stand here,
To beg of Hob and Dick, that do appear,
Their needful voucher? Shakefp. Coriolanus.
The stamp is a mark, and a public voucher, that a piece of such denomination is of such a weight, and of such a fineness, i. e. has so much silver in it. Locke.
All the great writers of that age stand up together as vouchers for one another's reputation. Spectator, N. 253.
I have added nothing to the malice or absurdity of them, which it behoves me to declare, since the vouchers themselves will be so soon lost. Pope.
TO VOUCHSAFE. v. a. [vouch and safe.]
1. To permit any thing to be done without danger.
2. To condescend to grant.
He grew content to mark their speeches, then marvel at such wit in shepherds, after to like their company, and lastly to vouchsafe conference. Sidney.
Shall I vouchsafe your worship a word or two? — —Two thousand, fair woman, and I'll Vouchsafe thee hearing. Shakefp. Cymbeline.
But if the sense of touch seem such delight
Beyond all other, think the same vouchsafed
To cattle and each beast. Milton.
It is not said by the apostle, that God vouchsafed to the heathens the means of salvation; and yet I will not affirm that God will have none of those, to whom the found of the gospel never reached. South's Sermons.
TO VOUCHSAFE. v. n. To deign; to condescend; to yield.
Do I not see Zelmane, who does not think a thought which is not first weigh'd by wisdom and virtue? doth not the vouchsafe to love me with like ardour? Sidney, b. ii.
Vouchsafe, divine perfection of a woman,
Of these supposed crimes to give me leave
By circumstance but to acquit myself. Shakefp. Rich. III.
Vouchsafe, illustrious Ormond, to behold
What pow'r the charms of beauty had of old. Dryden.
VOUCHSAFE. n. f. [from vouchsafe.] Grant; condescension.
The infinite superiority of God's nature, places a vast disparity betwixt his greatest communicated vouchsafements, and his boundless, and therefore to his creatures incommunicable perfections. Boyle.
Vow. n. f. [vœu, Fr. votum, Lat.]
1. Any promise made to a divine power; an act of devotion, by which some part of life, or some part of possessions is consecrated to a particular purpose.
The gods are deaf to hot and peevish vows;
They are polluted offerings. Shakefp. Hamlet.
If you take that vow and that wish to be all one, you are mistaken; a wish is a far lower degree than a vow. Hammond.
She vows for his return, with vain devotion, pays. Dryd.
2. A solemn promise, commonly used for a promise of love or matrimony.
By all the vows that ever men have broke,
In number more than ever women spoke.
Those who wear the woodbine on their brow,
Were knights of love, who never broke their vow;
Firm to their plighted faith. Dryden.
TO VOW. v. a. [vouer, Fr. vovco, Lat.] To consecrate by a solemn dedication; to give to a divine power.
David often voweth unto God the sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving in the congregation. Hooker.
To Master Harvey, upon some special consideration, I have vowed this my labour. Spenser.
Vow and pay unto the Lord. Pf. lxxvi.
When we have not only vowed, but delivered them over into the possession of Almighty God, for the maintenance of his public worship, and the ministers thereof, they are not now arbitrary, nor to be revoked. Spelman.
Whoever fees these irreligious men,
With burden of a sickness, weak and faint,
But hears them talking of religion then,
And vowing of their soul to ev'ry saint. Davies.
This plant Latinus, when his town he wall'd,
Then found, and from the tree Laurentum call'd:
And list, in honour of his new abode,
He vow'd the laurel to the laurel's god. Dryden.
TO VOW. v. n. To make vows or solemn promises.
Dost see how unregarded now
That piece of beauty passes?
There was a time, when I did vow
To that alone: but mark the fate of faces. Suckling.

UP

Vo'wel. n. f. [voyelle, Fr. vocalis, Lat.] A letter which can be uttered by itself.
I distinguish letters into vowels and consonants, yet not wholly upon their reason, that a vowel may be sounded alone, a consonant not without a vowel; which will not be found all true; for many of the consonants may be sounded alone, and some joined together without a vowel, as bl. fl. and as we pronounce the latter syllable of people, rifle. Hall.
Virgil makes the two vowels meet without an elision. Brown.
VOWELL. n. f. [vow and ellow.] One bound by the same vow.
Who are the votaries,
That are vowefollows with this virtuous king? Shakefp.
VOYAGE. n. f. [voyage, Fr.]
1. A travel by sea.
Guyon forward 'gan his voyage make,
With his black palmer, that him guided still. Fairy Queen.
Our ships went sundry voyages, as well to the pillars of Hercules, as to other parts in the Atlantick and Mediterranean seas. Bacon.
This great man acted like an able pilot in a long voyage; contented to sit in the cabin when the winds were allay'd, but ready to refuse the helm when the storm arose. Prior.
2. Course; attempt; undertaking. A low phrase.
If he should intend his voyage towards my wife, I would turn her loose to him; and what he gets more of her than sharp words, let it lie on my head. Shakefp. Cymbeline.
If you make your voyage upon her, and prevail, I am no further your enemy. Shakefp. Cymbeline.
3. The practice of travelling.
All nations have interknowledge of one another, by voyage into foreign parts, or strangers that come to them. Bacon.
TO VOYAGE. v. n. [voyager, Fr. from the noun.] To travel by sea.
For voyaging to learn the direful art,
To taint with deadly drugs the barbed dart;
Thus refus'd 'timpair the baneful trust. Pope's Odyssey.
TO VOYAGE. v. a. To travel; to pass over.
I with pain
Voyag'd th' unreal, vast, unbounded deep
Of horrible confusion. Milton's Par. Lost.
VOYAGER. n. f. [voyageur, Fr. from voyage.] One who travels by sea.
Disdain not in thy constant travelling
To do as other voyagers, and make
Some turns into less creeks, and wisely take Fresh water at the Heliconian spring.
How comfortable this is, voyagers can best tell. Chapin.
Deny your vessels, ye deny in vain;
A private voyager I pass the main. Pope's Odyssey.
UP. adv. [up, Saxon; op, Dutch and Danish.]
1. Aloft; on high; not down.
From those two Mytilene brethren, admire the wonderful changes of worldly things, now up now down, as if the life of man were not of much more certainty than a stage play. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.
Thither his course he bends; but up or down,
By center, or eccentric, hard to tell,
Or longitude. Milton.
2. Out of bed; in the state of being risen from rest.
Helen was not up? was she? Shakefp.
His chamber being commonly stived with suiters, when he was up, he gave his legs, arms, and breast to his servants to dress him; his eyes to his letters, and ears to petitioners. Wotton.
3. In the state of being risen from a seat.
Upon his first rising, a general whisper ran among the country people, that Sir Roger was up. Addison.
4. From a state of decumbiture or concealment.
Now morn with rosy light had streak'd the sky,
Up rose the sun, and up rose Emily;
Address'd her early steps to Cynthis's fane. Dryden.
5. In a state of being built.
Up with my tent; here will I lie to-night;
But where to-morrow I — well, all's one for that. Shakefp.
6. Above the horizon.
As soon as the sun is up, set upon the city. Judges ix.
7. To a state of advancement.
Till we have wrought ourselves up into this degree of christian indifference, we are in bondage. Atterbury.
8. In a state of exaltation.
Those that were up themselves, kept others low;
Those that were low themselves held others high,
Ne suffered them to rise, or greater grow. Fairy Queen.
Henry the fifth is crown'd; up vanity!
Down royal state! all you sage counsellors hence. Shakefp.
9. In a state of climbing.
10. In a state of infurrection.
The gentle archbishop of York is up Shakefp. Hen. IV.
With well-appointed powers.
Rebels there are up, Shakefp.
And put the Englishmen unto the sword. Shakefp.

UPB

Thou hast fir'd me; my soul's up in arms,
And mans each part about me. Dryden.
11. In a state of being increased, or raised.
Grief and passion are like floods raised in little brooks by a sudden rain; they are quickly up, and if the concernment be pour'd unexpectedly in upon us, it overflows us. Dryden.
12. From a remoter place, coming to any person or place.
As a boar was whetting his teeth, up comes a fox to him. L'Estrange.
13. From younger to elder years.
I am ready to die from my youth up. Pf. lxxxviii.
14. Up and down. Dispersedly; here and there.
Abundance of them are seen scattered up and down like so many little islands when the tide is low. Addison.
15. Up and down. Backward and forward.
Our desire is, in this present controversy, not to be carried up and down with the waves of uncertain arguments, but rather positively to lead on the minds of the simpler sort by plain and easy degrees, till the very nature of the thing itself do make manifest what is truth. Hooker, b. v.
The skipping king he rambled up and down,
With shallow jesters. Shakespeare.
Up and down he traverses his ground;
Now wards a felling blow, now strikes again:
Then nimble shifts a thrust, then lends a wound;
Now back he gives, then rushes on again. Daniel.
Thou and death
Shall dwell at ease, and up and down unseen
Wing silently the buxom air. Milton.
On this windy sea of land, the fiend
Walk'd up and down alone, bent on his prey. Milton.
What a miserable life dost thou lead, says a dog to a lion, to run starving up and down thus in woods. L'Estrange.
—She moves! life wanders up and down
Through all her face, and lights up every charm. Addison.
16. Up to. To an equal height with.
Tantalus was punished with the rage of an eternal thirst, and set up to the chin in water, that fled from his lips whenever he attempted to drink it. Addison.
17. Up to. Adequately to.
The wisest men in all ages have lived up to the religion of their country, when they saw nothing in it opposite to morality. Addison.
They are determined to live up to the holy rule, by which they have obliged themselves to walk. Atterbury.
We must not only mortify all these passions that solicit us, but we must learn to do well, and act up to the positive precepts of our duty. Rogers's Sermons.
18. Up with. A phrase that signifies the act of raising any thing to give a blow.
She, quick and proud, and who did Pas despise,
Up with her fist, and took him on the face;
Another time, quoth she, become more wise:
Thus Pas did kiss her hand with little grace. Sidney.
19. It is added to verbs, implying some accumulation, or increase.
If we could number up those prodigious swarms that settled in every part of the Campania of old Rome, they would amount to more than can be found in any six parts of Europe of the same extent. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
20. Up, interject.
21. A word exhorting to rise from bed.
Up, up! cries gluttony, 'tis break of day;
Go drive the deer, and drag the finny prey. Pope.
22. A word of exhortation, exciting or rousing to action.
Up then, Melpomene, the mournful muse of nine;
Such cause of mourning never hadst afore;
Up, grisly ghosts; and up my rueful rime;
Matter of mirth now shalt thou have no more. Spenser.
But up, and enter now into full bliss.
Up, up, for honour's sake; twelve legions wait you,
And long to call you chief. Dryden.
UP. prep. From a lower to a higher part; not down.
In going up a hill, the knees will be most weary; in going down, the thighs: for that in lifting the feet, when a man goeth up the hill, the weight of the body beareth most upon the knees, and in going down, upon the thighs. Bacon.
TO UPBARE. v. a. upbare; part. pass. upborn. [up and bear.]
1. To sustain aloft; to support in elevation.
Upborn with indefatigable wings. Milton.
Rang'd in a line the ready racers stand,
Start from the goal, and vanish o'er the strand:
Swift as on wings of wind, upborn they fly,
And drifts of rising dust involve the sky. Pope.
2. To raise aloft.
This with pray'r,
Or one short sigh of human breath, upborn, Ev'n to the seat of God. Milton's Par. Lost.
A monstrous wave upbore
The chief, and dash'd him on the craggy shore. Pope.

UPC

3. To support from falling.
Vital pow'rs 'gan wax both weak and wan,
For want of food and sleep; which two upbear,
Like weighty pillars, this frail life of man. Fairy Queen.
TO UPBRAIN. v. a. [upgebräuen, upgebräuen, Saxon.]
1. To charge contemptuously with any thing disgraceful.
The fathers, when they were upbraided with that defect, comforted themselves with the meditation of God's most gracious nature, who did not therefore the less accept of their hearty affection. Hooker, b. v.
It seem'd in me
But as an honour snatch'd with boist'rous hand,
And I had many living to upbraid
My gain of it by their assistances,
Which daily grew to quarrel. Shakefp. Hen. IV.
If you refuse your aid, yet do not Upbraid us with our distress. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
Vain man! how long wilt thou thy God upbraid?
And, like the roaring of a furious wind,
Thus vent the vile distemper of thy mind? Sandys.
How cunningly the forceless displays
Her own transgressions, to upbraid me mine. Milton.
'Tis a general complaint against you, and I must upbraid you with it, that because you need not write, you will not. Dryden.
You may the world of more defects upbraid,
That other works by nature are unmade;
That she did never at her own expence
A palace rear. Blackmore.
2. To object as matter of reproach.
Those that have been bred together, are more apt to envy their equals when raised: for it doth upbraid unto them their own fortunes, and pointeth at them. Bacon.
Any of these, without regarding the pains of churchmen, grudge or upbraid to them those small remains of antient piety, which the rapacity of some ages has scarce left. Sprat.
May they not justly to our climes upbraid,
Shortness of night, and penury of shade. Prior.
3. To urge with reproach.
I have too long born
Your blunt upbraidings, and your bitter scoffs. Shakefp.
He that knowingly commits an ill, has the upbraidings of his own conscience. Decay of Piety.
4. To reproach on account of a benefit received from the reproacher.
Ev'ry hour
He flashes into one gross crime or other;
His knights grow riotous, and he himself upbraids us
On ev'ry trifle. Shakefp. K. Lear.
If any lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth liberally, and upbraideth not. Ja. i. 5.
Be ashamed of upbraiding speeches before friends: and after thou hast given upbraid not. Ecclus. xli. 22.
5. To bring reproach upon; to throw faults by being in a state of comparison.
Ah, my son, how evil fits it me to have such a son, and how much doth thy kindness upbraid my wickedness? Sidney.
The counsel which I cannot take,
Instead of healing, but upbraids my weakness. Addison.
6. To treat with contempt. Not in use.
There also was that mighty monarch laid,
Low under all, yet above all in pride;
That name of native fire did foul upbraid,
And would, as Ammon's son, be magnify'd. Fairy Queen.
UPBRAIDINGLY. adv. By way of reproach.
The time was, when men would learn and study good things, not envy those that had them. Then men were had in price for learning; now letters only make men vile. He is upbraidingly called a poet, as if it were a contemptible nickname. B. Johnson.
TO UPBURY. v. a. [A word formed from upbraid by Spenser, for the sake of a rhyming termination.] To shame.
Vile knight,
That knights and knighthood dost with shame upbraid,
And shew'st th' example of thy childish might,
With silly, weak, old women thus to fight. Spenser.
UPBROUGHT. part. pass. of upbring. Educated; nurtured.
Divinely wrought,
And of the breed of angels, heav'nly born,
And with the crew of blessed faints upbrought,
Each of which did her with her gifts adorn. Spenser.
UPHAND. adj. [up and hand.] Lifted by the hand.
The uphand sledge is used by underworkmen, when the work is not of the largest, yet requires help to batter. They use it with both their hands before them, and seldom lift their hammer higher than their head. Mason's Mech. Exerc.
UPCAST. [Participle from cast up. The verb to upcast is not in use.] Thrown upwards.
Beasts with upcast eyes forsake their shade,
And gaze, as if I were to be obey'd. Dryden.
UPCAST.

UPH

Old Saturn, here with upcast eyes,
Beheld his abdicated skies. Addison.
UPCAST. n. f. A term of bowling; a throw; a cast.
Was there ever man had such luck? when I kiss'd the jack, upon an upcast to be hit away! Shakep. Cymbeline.
TO UPGATHER. v. a. [up and gather.] To contract.
Himself he clofe upgather'd more and more
Into his den, that his deceitful train,
By his there being might not be bewraid,
Ne any noise, ne any question made. Spenser.
UPHELD. pret. and part. pass. of uphold. Maintained; sustained.
He who reigns
Monarch in heav'n, 'till then, as one secure,
Sat on his throne, upheld by old repute. Milton.
UPHILL. adj. [up and hill.] Difficult; like the labour of climbing an hill.
What an uphill labour must it be to a learner, who has those first rudiments to master at twenty years of age, which others are taught at ten. Clarissa.
TO UPHOLD. v. a. [up and hold.] To treasure; to store;
to accumulate in private places.
Heaps of huge words upboarded hideously
With horrid found, though having little sense,
They think to be chief praise of poetry;
And thereby wanting due intelligence,
Have marr'd the face of goodly poesie,
And made a monster of their fantasie. Spenser.
If thou hast upboarded in thy life
Extorted treasure, in the womb of earth,
Speak of it. Shakespeare.
TO UPHOLD. v. a. preter. upheld; and part. pass. upheld, and upholden. [up and hold.]

his ill-purchased greatness, but by rejecting the English laws, and assuming, in lieu thereof, the barbarous customs of the Irish. Davies's Ireland.
Poetry and painting were upheld by the strength of imagination. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
3. To keep from declension.
There is due from the judge to the advocate some commendation, where causes are fair pleaded; for that upholds in the client the reputation of his council, and beats down in him the conceit of his cause. Bacon.
Never was a time, when the interposition of the magistrate was more necessary, to secure the honour of religion, and uphold the authority of those great principles, by which his own authority is best upheld. Atterbury.
4. To support in any state of life.
Many younger brothers have neither lands nor means to uphold themselves. Raleigh.
5. To continue; to keep from defeat.
Divers, although peradventure not willing to be yoked with elderships, yet were contented to uphold opposition against bishops, not without greater hurt to the course of their whole proceedings. Hooker.
6. To keep from being lost.
Paulconbridge,
In spite of spite, alone upholds the day. Shakespeare.
7. To continue without failing.
A deaf person, by observing the motions of another man's mouth, knows what he says, and upholds a current communication of discourse with him. Holder.
8. To continue in being.
As Nebuchodonosor liveth, who hath sent thee for the upholding of every living thing.
A due proportion is held betwixt the parts, as well in the natural body of man, as the body politick of the state, for the upholding of the whole. Hakewill.
UPHOLDER. n. f. [from uphold.]
1. A supporter.
Suppose then Atlas ne'er so wife:
Yet when the weight of kingdoms lies
Too long upon his single shoulders,
Sink down he must, or find upholders. Swift.
2. A sustainer in being.
The knowledge thereof is so many manuctions to the knowledge and admiration of the infinite wisdom of the creator and upholder of them. Hale.
3. An undertaker; one who provides for funerals.
The company of upholders have a right upon the bodies of the subjects. Arbutnot.
Where the bras knocker wrapt in flannel band,
Forbids the thunder of the footman's hand;
Th' upholder, rueful harbinger of death,
Waits with impatience for the dying breath. Gay.

That sparkling blaz'd. Milton's Par. Lost, b. i.
When by just vengeance guilty mortals perish,
The gods behold their punishment with pleasure,
And lay th' uplifted thunder-bolt aside. Addison's Cato.
Songs, sonnets, epigrams, the winds uplift,
And whisk them back to Evans, Young and Swift. Pope.
UPMOST. adj. [an irregular superlative formed from up.]
Highest; topmost.
Away! ye skum,
That still rise upmost when the nation boils,
That have but just enough of sense to know
The master's voice, when rated to depart. Dryden.
UPON. prep. [up and on.]
1. Not under; noting being on the top or outside.
As I did stand my watch upon the hill,
I look'd toward Birnam; and anon methought
The wood began to move. Shakep. Macbeth.

greatness of Spain, upon a general apprehension of the ambitious designs of that nation. Bacon.
They were entertained with the greatest magnificence that could be, upon no greater warning.
I wish it may not be concluded, left, upon second cogita-tions, these forces took hold of divers; in some upon discontent, in some upon ambition, in some upon confidence and belief, but in most upon simplicity; and in divers out of dependence upon some of the better sort, who did in secret favour these bruits. Bacon.
He made a great difference between people that did rebel upon wantonness, and them that did rebel upon want. Bacon.
Upon pity they were taken away, upon ignorance they are again demanded. Hayward.
Promises can be of no force, unless they be believed to be conditional; and unless that duty proposed to be enforced by as remembering the part he had acted against the earl of Strafford. Clarendon, b. viii.

Though sin offers itself in never so pleasing and alluring a dress at first, yet the remorse and inward regrets of the soul, upon the commission of it, infinitely overbalance those faint and transient gratifications. South's Sermons.
The common corruption of human nature, upon the bare stock of its original depravation, does not usually proceed so far. South's Sermons.
When we make judgments upon general presumptions, they are made rather from the temper of our own spirit, than from reason. Burnet.
'Tis not the thing that is done, but the intention in doing it, that makes good or evil. There's a great difference betwixt what we do upon force, and what upon inclination. L'Estrange.
The determination of the will upon enquiry, is following the direction of that guide. Locke.

Railery is the sauce of civil entertainment; and without some such tincture of urbanity, good humour falters. L'Estr.

Moral doctrine, and urbanity, or well-mannered wit, constitute the Roman satire. Dryden.

URCHIN. n. f. [beurcubin, Armorick; erinaceus, Lat.] 1. A hedge-hog. Urchins shall, for that vast of night that they may work, All exercise on thee. Shakespeare's Tempest.

UPS

Sequitious of the lyre: But bright Cecilia rais'd the wonder higher; When to her organ vocal breath was giv'n; An angel heard, and straight appear'd, Mistaking earth for heav'n. Dryden.

TO UP'ROUSE. v. a. [up and rouse.] To waken from sleep; to excite to action. Thou art up'rous'd by some distemperature. Shakespeare.

UPSHOT. n. f. [up and shot.] Conclusion; end; last amount; final event. With this he kindleth his ambitious spight To like desire and praise of noble fame, The only upshot, whereto he doth aim. Hubbard's Tale.

I cannot pursue with any safety this sport to the upshot. Shakespeare.

In this upshot, purposes mistook Fall on th' inventor's heads. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Every leading demonstration to the main upshot of all, which is the proportion betwixt the sphere and cylinder, is a pledge of the wit and reason of that mathematician. More.

Upon the upshot, affictions are but the methods of a merciful providence, to force us upon the only means of setting matters right. L'Estrange.

Here is an end of the matter, says the prophet: here is the upshot and result of all; here terminate both the prophecies of Daniel and St. John. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

Let's now make an end of matters peaceably, as we shall quickly come to the upshot of our affair. Arbutnot.

At the upshot, after a life of perpetual application, to reflect that you have been doing nothing for yourself, and that the fame or less industry might have gained you a friendship that can never deceive or end; a glory, which, though not to be had till after death, yet shall be felt and enjoy'd to eternity. Pope.

UPSIDE down. [an adverbial form of speech.] With total reversion; in complete disorder; with the lower part above the higher. In his lap a mass of coin he told, And turned upside down to feed his eye, And covetous desire, with his huge treasure. Fairy Queen.

The flood did not so turn upside down the face of the earth, as thereby it was made past knowledge, after the waters were decreased. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

The severe notions of christianity turned all this upside down, filling all with surprize and amazement. They came upon the world, like light darting full upon the face of a man asleep, who had a mind not to be disturbed. South.

UPSPRING. n. f. [up and spring.] This word seems to signify upstart; a man suddenly exalted. The king doth wake to-night, and takes his route; Keeps wassel, and the swagging upspring reels. Shakespeare.

Acrimony in their blood, and afflux of humours to their lungs, urgently indicate phlebotomy. Harvey.
URGER. n. f. [from urges.] One who presses; importuner.
 I with Pope were as great an urges as I. Swift.
URGEWONDER. n. f. A sort of grain.
 This barley is called by some urgeswonder. Mortimer.
URIM. n. f.
Urim and thummim were something in Aaron's breast-plate; but what, critics and commentators are by no means agreed. The word urim signifies light, and thummim perfection. It is most probable that they were only names given to signify the clearness and certainty of the divine answers which were obtained by the high priest consulting God with his breast-plate on, in contradistinction to the obscure, enigmatical, uncertain, and imperfect answers of the leathern oracles. Newton's Notes on Milton.
 He in celestial panoply, all arm'd
 Of radiant urim, work divinely wrought. Milton.
URINAL. n. f. [urinal, Fr. from urine.] A bottle, in which water is kept for inspection.
 These follies shine through you, like the water in an urinal. Shakespeare's Two Gentlemen of Verona.
 A candle out of a musket will pierce through an inch board, or an urinal force a nail through a plank. Brown.
 This hand, when glory calls,
 Can brandish arms, as well as urinals. Garth.
 Some with scymitars in their hands, and others with urinals, ran to and fro. Spectator, No 159.
URINARY. adj. [from urine.] Relating to the urine.
 The urachus or ligamentous passage is derived from the bottom of the bladder, whereby it discharges the watery and urinary part of its contents. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
 Diuretics that relax the urinary passages, should be tried before such as stimulate. Arbutnot on Aliments.
URINATIVE. adj. Working by urine; provoking urine.
 Medicines urivative do not work by rejection and indigestion, as solutive do. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
URINATOR. n. f. [urinator, Fr. urinator, Lat.] A diver; one who searches under water.
 The precious things that grow there, as pearl, may be much more easily fetched up by the help of this, than by any other way of the urimators. Wilkins's Math. Magic.
 Those relations of urimators belong only to those places where they have dived, which are always rocky. Ray.
URINE. n. f. [urine, Fr. urina, Lat.] Animal water.
 Drink, Sir, is a great provoker of nose-painting, sleep, and urine. Shakespeare.
 As though there were a feminality in urine, or that, like the feed, it carried with it the idea of every part, they foolishly believe we can visibly behold therein the anatomy of every particle. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
 The chyle cannot pass by urine nor sweat. Arbutnot.
TO URINE. v. n. [uriner, Fr. from the noun.] To make water.
 Places where men urine commonly, have some smell of violets. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
 No oviparous animal, which spawn or lay eggs, doth urine, except the tortoise. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
URINOUS. adj. [from urine.] Partaking of urine.
 The putrid matter being distilled, affords a water impregnated with an urinous spirit, like that obtainable from animal substances. Arbutnot on Aliments.
URN. n. f. [urne, Fr. urna, Lat.]
 1. Any vessel, of which the mouth is narrower than the body.
 Minos, the strict inquisitor,
 Lives, and crimes, with his assessor, hears;
 Round, in his urn, the blended balls he rolls;
 Absolves the just, and dooms the guilty souls. Dryden.
 2. A water pot; particularly that in the sign of Aquarius.
 The fish oppose the maid, the watery urn
 With adverse fires sees raging Leo burn. C. eccl.
 3. The vessel in which the remains of burnt bodies were put.
 Or lay these bones in an unworthy urn,
 Tomblets, with no remembrance over them. Shakespeare.
 A rustick digging in the ground by Padua, found an urn, or earthen pot, in which there was another urn; and in this lesser, a lamp clearly burning. Wilkins.
 His scatter'd limbs with my dead body burn;
 And once more join us in the pious urn. Dryden.
UROSCOPY. n. f. [uro and scopia.] Inspection of urine.
 In this work, attempts will exceed performances; it being composed by snatches of time, as medical vacations, and uroscopy would permit. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
URRY. n. f. A mineral.
 In the coal-mines they dig a blue or black clay, that lies near the coal, commonly called urry, which is an unripe coal, and is very proper for hot lands, especially pasture-ground. Mortimer's Husbandry.
US. the oblique case of we.
 The lord made not this covenant with our fathers, but with us, even us, who are all of us here alive this day. Dent. v.

USE

Many, O Lord, are thy wonderful works, and thy thoughts which are to us ward. Pf. xl. 5.
USAGE. n. f. [usage, Fr.]
 1. Treatment.
 Which way
 Might'st thou deserve, or they impose this usage, Coming from us? Shakespeare. K. Lear.
 The lustre in your eye, heav'n in your cheek,
 Plead you fair usage. Shakespeare. Troil. and Cressida.
 My brother
 Is prisoner to the bishop, at whose hands
 He hath good usage, and great liberty. Shakespeare. Hen. VI.
 What usage have I met with from this adversary, who passes by the very words I translated, and produces other passages; and then hectors and cries out of my dissimilarity. Still.
 Are not hawks brought to the hand, and to the lure; and lions reclaimed by good usage? L'Estrange.
 Neptune took unkindly to be bound,
 And Eurus never such hard usage found
 In his Eolian prison. Dryden.
 2. Custom; practice long continued.
 Of things once received and confirmed by use, long usage is a law sufficient. In civil affairs, when there is no other law, custom itself doth stand for law. Hooker, b. ii.
 3. Manners; behaviour. Obsolete.
 A gentle nymph was found,
 Hight Aftery, excelling all the crew,
 In courteous usage, and unstained hue. Spenser.
USAGER. n. f. [usager, Fr. from usage.] One who has the use of any thing in trust for another.
 He consum'd the common treasury;
 Whereof he being the simple usager
 But for the state, not in propriety,
 Did alien t' his minions. Daniel's Civil War.
USANCE. n. f. [usance, Fr.]
 1. Use; proper employment.
 What art thou,
 That here in desert hast thine habitation,
 And these rich heaps of wealth dost hide apart
 From the world's eye, and from her right usance? Spenser.
 2. Usury; interest paid for money.
 He lends out money gratis, and brings down
 The rate of usance. Shakespeare. Merch. of Venice.
USE. [usus, Lat.]
 1. The act of employing any thing to any purpose.
 The fat of the beast that dieth of itself, may be used in any other use. Lev. vii. 24.
 Number, the mind makes use of in measuring all things by us measurable. Locke.
 Consider the history, with what use our author makes of it. Locke.
 2. Qualities that make a thing proper for any purpose.
 Rice is of excellent use for illnesses of the stomach, that proceed from cold or moist humours; a great digester and restorer of appetite. Temple.
 3. Need of; occasion on which a thing can be employed.
 This will secure a father to my child;
 That done, I have no father use for life. A. Phillips.
 4. Advantage received; power of receiving advantage.
 More figures in a picture than are necessary, our author calls figures to be let; because the picture has no use for them. Dryden's Duguesne.
 5. Convenience; help.
 Distinct growth in knowledge, carries its own light in every step of its progression; than which nothing is of more use to the understanding. Locke.
 Nothing would be of greater use towards the improvement of knowledge and politeness, than some effectual method for correcting, enlarging, and ascertaining our language. Swift.
 When will my friendship be of use to thee? A. Phillips.
 6. Usage; customary act.
 That which those nations did use, having been also in use with others, the ancient Roman laws do forbid. Hooker, b. iv.
 He, that first brought the word sham, wheedle, or banter in use, put together, as he thought fit, those ideas he made it stand for. Locke.
 7. Practice; habit.
 Sweetness, truth, and ev'ry grace,
 Which time and use are wont to teach,
 The eye may in a moment reach,
 And read distinctly in her face. Waller.
 8. Custom; common occurrence.
 O Caesar! these things are beyond all uses.
 And I do fear them. Shakespeare. Julius Caesar.
 9. Interest; money paid for the use of money.
 If it be good, thou hast received it from God, and then thou art more obliged to pay duty and tribute, use, and principal to him. Taylor's Rule of Holy Living.
 Most of the learned, both heathen and christian, assert the taking of use to be utterly unlawful; yet the divines of the reformed church beyond the seas, do generally affirm it to be lawful. South's Sermons.

USE

TO USE. v. a. [user, Fr. usus, Lat.]
 1. To employ to any purpose.
 You're welcome,
 Most learned rev'rend Sir, into our kingdom;
 Use us and it. Shakespeare. Hen. VIII.
 They could use both the right hand and the left, in hurling stones and shooting arrows. Chr. xii. 2.
 Two trumpets of silver, that thou mayest use for the calling of the assembly. Num. x. 2.
 He was unhappily too much used as a check upon the Lord Coventry; and when that lord perplexed their counsels with inconvenient objections, the authority of the Lord Manchester was fill called upon. Clarendon.
 These words of God to Cain, are, by many interpreters, understood in a quite different sense than what our author uses them in. Locke.
 That prince was using all his endeavours to introduce popery, which he openly professed. Swift.
 2. To accustom; to habituate.
 He that intends to gain th' Olympick prize,
 Must use himself to hunger, heat and cold. Rafesmon.
 Those who think only of the matter, use themselves only to speak extempore. Locke on Education.
 3. To treat.
 I've hitherto been used to think
 A blind officious zeal to serve my king,
 The ruling principle. Addison's Cato.
 A people long used to hardships, lose by degrees the very notions of liberty; they look upon themselves as at mercy. Sw.
 4. To practise.
 Why dost thou use me thus? I know thee not. Shakespeare.
 When he came to ask leave of Solymán that he might depart, he was courteously used of him. Knolles.
 I know
 My Aurengzebe would ne'er have us'd me so. Dryden.
 If Virgil or Ovid be thus us'd, 'tis no longer to be called their work, when neither the thoughts nor words are drawn from the original. Dryden.
 I love to use people according to their own sense of good-breeding. Tatler, No 86.
 Cato has us'd me ill; he has refus'd
 His daughter Marcia to my ardent vows. Addison's Cato.
 Gay is used as the friends of Tories are by Whigs, and generally by Tories too. Pope to Swift.
 5. To behave. Out of use.
 Pray forgive me, if I have us'd myself unmannerly. Shakespeare.
TO USE. v. n.
 1. To be accustomed; to practise customarily.
 They use to place him that shall be their captain upon a stone, always reserved for that purpose, and placed commonly upon a hill. Spenser's State of Ireland.
 In polling of trees, many do use to leave a bough or two on the top, to help to draw up the sap. Bacon.
 A prudent governor, to advance religion, will not consider men's duty but their practice; not what they ought to do, but what they use to do. South's Sermons.
 2. To be customarily in any manner; to be wont.
 Fears use to be represented in such an imaginary fashion, as they rather dazzle men's eyes, than open them. Bacon.
 Snakes that use within the house for shade,
 Securely lurk, and, like a plague, invade Thy cattle with venom. Mary's Virgil.
 The waters going and returning as the waves and great commotions of the sea use to do, retired leisurely. Burnet.
 Conduct me well
 In these strange ways, where never foot did use. Spenser.
 3. To frequent. Obsolete.
 Ye vallies low, where the mild whisper uses
 Of shades, and wanton winds, and gushing brooks. Milton.
USEFUL. adj. [use and full.] Convenient; profitable to any end; conducive or helpful to any purpose.
 Providence would only enter mankind into the useful knowledge of her treasures, leaving the rest to employ our industry. Moré's Antidote.
 Gold and silver being little useful to the life of man, in proportion to food, raiment, and carriage, has its value only from the content of men. Locke.
 That the legislature should have power to change the succession, is very useful towards preserving our religion and liberty. Swift.
 Deliver a particular account of the great and useful things already performed. Swift.
USEFULLY. adv. [from useful.] In such a manner as to help forward some end.
 In this account they must constitute two at least, male and female, in every species; which chance could not have made so very nearly alike, without copying, nor so usefully differing, without contrivance. Bentley's Sermons.
USEFULNESS. n. f. Conduciveness or helpfulness to some end.

USU

The grandeur of the commonwealth shows itself chiefly in works that were necessary or convenient. On the contrary, the magnificence of Rome, under the emperors, was rather for ostentation, than any real usefulness. Addison.
USELESSLY. adv. [from useless.] Without the quality of answering any purpose.
 In a sauntering humour, some, out of custom, let a good part of their lives run uselessly away, without business or recreation. Locke.
USELESSNESS. n. f. [from useless.] Unfitness to any end.
 He made a learned discourse on the trouble, usefulness, and indecency of foxes wearing tails. L'Estrange.
 He would convince them of the vanity and usefulness of that learning, which makes not the possessor a better man. South.
USELESS. adj. [from use.] Answering no purpose; having no end.
 So have I seen the lost clouds pour
 Into the sea an useless shower;
 And the vex'd sailors curse the rain,
 For which poor shepherds pray'd in vain. Waller.
 The hurtful teeth of vipers are useless to us, and yet are parts of their bodies. Boyle.
 His friend, on whose assistance he most relied, either proves false and forsakes him, or looks on with an useless pity, and cannot help him. Rogers's Sermons.
 The waterman forlorn along the shore,
 Penive reclines upon his useless oar. Gay.
USER. n. f. [from use.] One who uses.
 Such things, which, by imparting the delight to others, makes the user thereof welcome, as music, dancing, hunting, feasting, riding. Sidney.
 My lord received from the countess of Warwick, a lady powerful in the court, and indeed a virtuous user of her power, the best advice that was ever given. Watson.
USHER. n. f. [usher, Fr.]
 1. One whose business is to introduce strangers, or walk before a person of high rank.
 The wife of Antony
 Should have an army for an usher, and
 The neighs of horse to tell her approach Long ere she did appear. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.
 You make guards and ushers march before, and then enters your prince. Tatler, No 53.
 Gay paid his courtship with the croud,
 As far as modest pride allow'd;
 Rejects a servile usher's place,
 And leaves St. James's in disgrace. Swift.
 2. An under-teacher; one who introduces young scholars to higher learning.
 Though grammar profits less than rhetoric's,
 Yet ev'n in those his usher claims a share. Dryden.
TO USHER. v. a. [from the noun.] To introduce as a forerunner or harbinger; to forerun.
 No fun shall ever usher forth my honours,
 Or gild again the noble troops that waited Upon my smiles. Shakespeare's Hen. VIII.
 The sun,
 Declin'd, was halting now with prone career
 To th' ocean illes, and in th' ascending scale
 Of heav'n, the stars, that usher evening, rose. Milton.
 As the deluge is represented a disruption of the abyss, so the future combustion of the earth is to be usher'd in, and accompanied with violent impressions upon nature, and the chief will be earthquakes. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
 With songs and dance we celebrate the day,
 And with due honours usher in the May. Dryden.
 The Examiner was usher'd into the world by a letter, setting forth the great genius of the author. Addison.
 Oh name for ever sad! for ever dear!
 Still breath'd in sighs, still usher'd with a tear. Pope.
USQUEBAUGH. n. f. [An Irish and Erse word, which signifies the water of life.] It is a compounded distilled spirit, being drawn on aromatics; and the Irish fort is particularly distinguished for its pleasant and mild flavour. The Highland fort is somewhat hotter; and, by corruption, in Scottish they call it usqueba.
USTION. n. f. [ustion, Fr. ustus, Lat.] The act of burning; the state of being burned.
USTIOUS. adj. [ustium, Latin.] Having the quality of burning.
 The power of a burning glass is by an ustious quality in the mirror or glass, arising from a certain unknown substantial form. Watts.
USUAL. adj. [usuel, Fr.] Common; frequent; customary; frequently occurring.
 Consultation with oracles was a thing very usual and frequent in their times. Hooker, b. i.
 Could I the care of Providence deserve,
 Heav'n must destroy me, if it would preserve:
 And that's my fate, or sure it would have sent
 Some usual evil for my punishment. Dryden.

U S U

USUALLY, adv. [from usual.] Commonly; frequently; customarily.
 If men's desires are usually as large as their abilities, what course we took to allure the former, by that we might engage the latter. South's Sermons.
 Where men err against this method, it is usually on purpose, and to shew their learning. Swift.
USUALNESS, n. f. [from usual.] Commonness; frequency.
USUCAPTION, n. f. [usus and capio, Lat.] In the civil law, the acquisition of the property of a thing, by possession and enjoyment thereof for a certain term of years prescribed by law. Dic.
USURU'CT. n. f. [usufructus, Fr. usus and fructus, Lat.] The temporary use, enjoyment of the profits, without power to alienate.
 The persons receiving the same, have only the usufruct thereof, and not any fee or inheritance therein. Ayliffe.
USURU'CTUARY, n. f. [usufructuarius, Fr. usufructuarius, Lat.] One that has the use and temporary profit, not the property of a thing.
 The persons of parishes are not in law accounted proprietors, but only usufructuaries, as having no right of fee simple vested in them. Ayliffe's Parergon.
TO USURE, n. f. [usura, Lat.] To practice usury; to take interest for money.
 Is this the balsam that the usuring senate
 Pours into captains wounds? Shaksp. Timon of Athens.
USURER, n. f. [usurier, Fr. usura, Lat.] One who puts money out at interest. Commonly used for one that takes exorbitant interest.
 Fie; thou sham'st thy shape, thy love, thy wit;
 Which, like an usurer, abound'st in all,
 And usest none in that true use indeed,
 Which should bedeck thy shape, thy love, thy wit. Shak.
 When usurers tell their gold i' th' field,
 And bawds and whores do churches build, Shaksp. Lear.
 If thou lend money to any that is poor, thou shalt not be to him as an usurer, nor lay upon him usury. Ex. xxii. 25.
 There may be no commutative injustice, while each retains a mutual benefit, the usurer for his money, the borrower for his industry. Child on Trade.
 The asses usuræ occasioned great tumults among the people; yet he that took it was not reckoned to transgress any law; and there were some greedy usurers that exacted double, triple. Arbutnot on Coins.
USURIOUS, adj. [usuaire, Fr. from usury.] Given to the practice of usury; exorbitantly greedy of profit.
 For every hour that thou wilt spare me now,
 I will allow,
Usurious god of love, twenty to thee,
 When with my brown my grey hairs equal be. Donne.
TO USURP, v. a. [usurper, Fr. usurper, Lat.] To possess by force or intrusion; to seize, or possess without right.
 So ugly a darkness, as if it would prevent the night's coming, usurped the day's right. Sidney, b. ii.
 Not having the natural superiority of fathers, their power must be usurped, and then unlawful; or if lawful, then granted or consented unto by them over whom they exercise the same, or else given them extraordinarily from God. Hooker.
 In as much as the due estimation of heavenly truth dependeth wholly upon the known and approved authority of those famous oracles of God, it greatly behoveth the church to have always most special care, humane inventions usurp the room and title of divine worship. Hooker, b. v.
 Victorious prince of York!
 Before I see thee seated in that throne,
 Which now the house of Lancaster usurps,
 These eyes shall never close. Shaksp. Hen. VI.
 What art thou, that usurp'st this time of night,
 Together with that fair and warlike form?
 Their fox-like thefts are so rank, as a man may find whole pages usurp'd from one author. B. Johnson.
 So he dies,
 But soon revives; death over him no pow'r
 Shall long usurp: ere the third dawning light
 Return, the stars of morn shall see him rise
 Out of his grave. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii.
 All fountains of the deep
 Broke up, shall heave the ocean to usurp
 Beyond all bounds, 'till inundation rise Above the highest hills. Milton.
 Farewell court,
 Where vice not only hath usurp'd the place,
 But the reward, and even the name of virtue. Denham.
 Your care about your banks infers a fear
 Of threatening floods and inundations near:
 If so, a just reprice would only be
 Of what the land usurp'd upon the sea. Dryden.
 Who next usurps, will a just prince appear,
 So much your ruin will his reign endear. Dryden.

Struggling in vain, impatient of her load,
 And lab'ring underneath the pond'rous God;
 The more she strove to shake him from her breast,
 With more and far superior force he press'd;
 Commands his entrance, and, without controul,
Usurps her organs, and inspires her soul. Dryden.
 Who's this, that dares usurp
 The guards and habit of Numidia's prince? Addison's Cato.
USURPATION, [usurpation, Fr. from usurp.] Forcible, unjust, illegal seizure or possession.
 The Piercies,
 Finding his usurpation most unjust,
 Endeavour'd my advancement to the throne. Shaksp. Lear.
 Succeeding kings recovery of their right from unjust usurpations, shall never be prejudiced by any act of mine. K. Char.
 To raise a tempest on the sea was usurpation on the prerogative of Neptune, who had given him no leave. Dryden.
 O baleness to support a tyrant throne,
 And crush your freeborn brethren of the world!
 Nay, to become a part of usurpation,
 To espouse the tyrant's person and her crimes. Dryden.
 Whatever opposition was made to the usurpations of K. James, proceeded altogether from the church of England. Swift.
USURPER, n. f. [from usurp.] One who seizes or possesses that to which he has no right. It is generally used of one who excludes the right heir from the throne.
 Ever since he hath continued his first usurped power,
 And now exacteth upon all men what he list: so that now to subdue or expel an usurper, should be no unjust enterprise, but a restitution of ancient right unto the crown. Spenser.
 Richard duke of York,
 Was rightful heir unto the English crown;
 And that your majesty was an usurper. Shaksp. Lear.
 But this usurper, his encroachment proud,
 Stays not on man; to God his tow'r intends Siege and defiance. Milton.
 Few usurpers to the shades descend
 By a dry death, or with a quiet end.
 He griev'd, the land he freed should be oppress'd,
 And he less for it than usurpers do. Dryden.
USURPINGLY, adv. [from usurp.] Without just claim.
 Lay aside the sword,
 Which sways usurpingly these several titles,
 And put the same into young Arthur's hand,
 Thy right royal sovereign. Shaksp. Lear's K. John.
USURY, [usuræ, Fr. usura, Lat.]
 1. Money paid for the use of money; interest.
 He that high does sit, and all things see,
 With equal eyes, their merits to relore;
 Behold, what ye this day have done for me,
 And what I cannot quit, requite with usury. Fairy Queen.
 The wisest day is come at last,
 That shall, for all the pains and sorrows past,
 Pay to her usury of long delight. Spenser.
 Our angles are like money put to usury; they may thrive, though we sit still and do nothing. Walton's Angler.
 What he borrows from the antients, he repays with usury of his own; in coin as good, and almost as universally valuable. Dryden's Dedication to Juvenal.
 2. The practice of taking interest. It is commonly used with some reproach.
Usury bringeth the treasure of a realm into few hands: for the usurer being at certainties, and others at uncertainties, at the end, most of the money will be in the box. Bacon.
UTENSIL, n. f. [utensile, Fr. utensile, low Lat.] An instrument for any use, such as the vessels of the kitchen, or tools of a trade.
 Burn but his books; he has brave utensils,
 Which, when he has a house, he'll deck withal. Shaksp. Lear.
 Mules after these, camels and dromedaries,
 And waggons fraught with utensils of war. Milton.
 Tithes and lands given to God are never; and plate, vestments, and other sacred utensils, are seldom consecrated. South.
 The springs of life their former vigour feel;
 Such zeal he had for that vile utensil. Garrick's Dispensary.
UTERINE, adj. [uterin, Fr. uterinus, Lat.] Belonging to the womb.
 In hot climates, and where the uterine parts exceed in heat, by the coldness of some simple, they may be reduced unto a conceptive constitution. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 The vessels of the interior glandulous substance of the womb, are contorted with turnings and meanders, that they might accommodate themselves without danger of rupture to the necessary extension of the uterine substance. Ray.
UTERUS, n. f. [Latin.] The womb.
UTILITY, n. f. [utilité, Fr. utilitas, Lat.] Usefulness; profit; convenience; advantage.
 Those things which have long gone together, are confederate; whereas new things piece not so well; but though they help by their utility, yet they trouble by their inconstancy. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
 Should

U T T

Should we blindly obey the restraints of physicians and astrologers, we should confine the utility of physick unto a very few days. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 M. Zulichem desired me that I would give a relation of the cure of the gout, that might be made publick, as a thing which might prove of common utility to so great numbers as were subject to that disease. Temple.
UTIS, n. f. A word which probably is corrupted, at least, is not now understood.
 Then here will be old utis: it will be an excellent stratagem. Shaksp. Lear's Hen. IV.
UTMOST, adj. [utmost, Saxon; from utcep.]
 1. Extreme; placed at the extremity.
 Much like a subtle spider, which doth sit
 In middle of her web, which spreadeth wide;
 If ought do touch the utmost thread of it,
 She feels it instantly on ev'ry side. Davies.
 As far remov'd from God and light of heav'n,
 As from the center thrice to th' utmost pole. Milton.
 I went
 To view the utmost limits of the land. Dryden.
 2. Being in the highest degree.
 I'll undertake to bring him,
 Where he shall answer by a lawful form,
 In peace, to his utmost peril. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
UTMOST, n. f. The most that can be; the greatest power; the highest degree.
 What miseries,
 Shall be the general's fault, though he perform
 To the utmost of a man. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
 I will be free,
 Even to the utmost as I please in words. Shaksp. Lear.
 Such a confidence, as has employed the utmost of its ability to give itself the best information, and clearest knowledge of its duty, that it can, is a rational ground for a man to build such an hope upon. South.
 Try your fortune.—
 —I have to the utmost. Dost thou think me desperate Without just cause? Dryden's All for Love.
 A man, having carefully enquired into all the grounds of probability and unlikeliness, and done his utmost to inform himself in all particulars, may come to acknowledge on which side the probability rests. Locke.
 The enemy thinks of raising threecore thousand men: let us perform our utmost, and we shall overwhelm them with our multitudes. Addison.
UTTER, adj. [utter, Saxon.]
 1. Situate on the outside, or remote from the center.
 In my flight
 Through utter and through middle darkness borne,
 I sung of chaos, and eternal night. Milton's P. Lost, b. iii.
 2. Placed without any compass; out of any place.
 Pursue these fons of darkness; drive them out
 From all heav'n's bounds, into the utter deep. Milton.
 3. Extreme; excessive; utmost. This seems to be Milton's meaning here.
 Such place eternal justice had prepar'd
 For those rebellious; here their prison ordain'd
 In utter darkness; and their portion set
 As far remov'd from God, and light of heav'n,
 As from the center thrice to th' utmost pole. Milton.
 4. Complete; irrevocable.
 The parliament thought the utter taking it away, absolutely necessary for the preservation of the kingdom. Clarendon.
 There could not be any other estimate made of the loss, than by the utter refusal of the auxiliary regiments of London and Kent to march farther. Clarendon, b. viii.
 They feel fewer corporal pains, and are utter strangers to all those anxious thoughts which disquiet mankind. Atterbury.
TO UTTER, v. a. [from the adjective; to make publick, or let out; palam facere.]
 1. To speak; to pronounce; to express.
 Men spake not with the instruments of writing, neither writ with the instruments of speech; and yet things recorded with the one, and uttered with the other, may be preached well enough with both. Hooker.
 These very words I've heard him utter. Shaksp. Lear.
 There's more gold: but, firrah,
 We lay the dead are well. Bring it to that,
 The gold I give thee will I melt, and pour Down thy ill-uttering throat. Shaksp. Lear.
 Conceiving and uttering from the heart words of falsehood. Isa. lix. 13.
 Shall not they teach thee and tell thee, and utter words out of their heart?
 Who knows but his poor, bleeding heart,
 Amidst its agonies, remember'd Marcia,
 And the last words he utter'd, call'd me cruel! Addison.

2. To disclose; to discover; to publish.
 When do partial and sinister affections more utter themselves, than when an election is committed to many? Whitig.
 Were it folly to be modest in uttering what is known to all the world?
 I meant my words should not reach your ears; but what I utter'd was most true. Dryden's All for Love.
 3. To sell; to vend.
 Such mortal drugs I have, but Mantua's law
 Is death to any he that utters them. Shaksp. Rom. and Juliet.
 They bring it home, and utter it commonly by the name of Newfoundland fish. Abbot's Descrip. of the World.
 The Devonshire and Somersetshire graiers feed yearly great droves of cattle in the north quarter of Cornwall, and utter them at home. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
 4. To disperse; to emit at large.
 To preserve us from ruin, the whole kingdom should continue in a firm resolution never to receive or utter this fatal coin. Swift.
UTTERABLE, adj. [from utter.] Expressible; such as may be uttered.
UTTERANCE, n. f. [from utter.]
 1. Pronunciation; manner of speaking.
 He, with utterance grave, and countenance sad,
 From point to point discours'd his voyage. Fa. Queen.
 2. [Ourance, Fr.] Extremity; terms of extreme hostility.
 Of him I gather'd honour;
 Which he to seek of me again perforce,
 Behoves me keep at utterance. Shaksp. Cymbeline.
 Mine eternal jewel
 Giv'n the common enemy of man,
 To make them kings; the seed of Banquo kings!
 Rather than so, come, fate, into the list,
 And champion me to th' utterance. Shaksp. Macbeth.
 3. Vocal expression; emission from the mouth.
 'Till Adam, though no less than Eve abash'd,
 At length gave utterance to these words constrain'd. Milton.
 Speaking is a sensible expression of the notions of the mind, by several discriminations of utterance of voice, used as signs, having by content several determinate significancies. Holder.
 There have been some inventions, which have been able for the utterance of articulate sounds, as the speaking of certain words. Wilkins's Math. Magic.
 Many a man thinks admirably well, who has a poor utterance; while others have a charming manner of speech, but their thoughts are trifling. Watts.
UTTERER, n. f. [from utter.]
 1. One who pronounces.
 2. A divulger; a discloser.
Utters of secrets he from thence debar'd;
 Babblers of folly, and blazers of crime. Fa. Queen.
 3. A seller; a vender.
UTTERLY, adv. [from utter.] Fully; completely; perfectly.
 For the most part, in an ill sense.
 God, whose property is to shew his mercies then greatest, when they are nearest to be utterly despaired. Hooker, b. iv.
 Arguments taken from the authority of men, may not only so far forth as hath been declared, but further also be of some force in human sciences, which force, be it never so small, doth shew that they are not utterly naught. Hooker, b. ii.
 All your interest in those territories
 Is utterly bereft you; all is lost. Shaksp. Hen. VI.
 He was so utterly tired with an employment so contrary to his humour, that he did not consider the means that would lead him out of it. Clarendon, b. viii.
 While in the flesh we cannot be utterly insensible of the afflictions that befall us. Atterbury.
UTTERMOST, adj. [from utter.]
 1. Extreme; being in the highest degree.
 Bereave me not,
 Whereon I live! thy gentle looks, thy aid,
 Thy counsel, in this uttermost distress. Milton.
 2. Most remote.
 The land, from the uttermost end of the straits on Peru side, did go towards the south. Abbot's Descrip. of the World.
UTTERMOST, n. f. The greatest degree.
 There needed neither promise nor persuasion to make her do her uttermost for her father's service. Sidney, b. ii.
 He cannot have sufficient honour done unto him; but the uttermost we can do, we must. Hooker, b. i.
UVE'OUS, adj. [from uva, Lat.]
 The uveous coat, or iris of the eye, hath a muculous power, and can dilate and contract that round hole in it, called the pupil. Ray on the Creation.
VULCANO, n. f. [Italian.] A burning mountain; volcano.
 Earth calcin'd, flies off into the air; the ashes of burning mountains, in vulcano's, will be carried to great distances. Arb.
VULGAR, adj. [vulgaire, Fr. vulgaris, Lat.]
 1. Plebeian; suited to the common people; practised among the common people.
 Men

VUL

Men who have passed all their time in low and vulgar life, cannot have a suitable idea of the several beauties and blemishes in the actions of great men. Addison.

2. Mean; low; being of the common rate.
It requiring too great a sagacity for vulgar minds to draw the line between virtue and vice, no wonder if most men attempt not a laborious scrutiny into things themselves, but only take names and words, and so rest in them. South.
Now wasting years my former strength confound,
And added woes have bow'd me to the ground;
Yet by the stubble you may guess the grain,
And mark the ruins of no vulgar man. Broome.

3. Publick; commonly bruited.
Do you hear aught of a battle toward? — —Most sure, and vulgar; every one hears that. Shakespeare.
VULGAR. n. f. [vulgaire, Fr.] The common people.
I'll about;
Drive away the vulgar from the streets. Shakespeare.
Those men, and their adherents, were then looked upon by the affrighted vulgar, as greater protectors of their laws and liberties than myself. K. Charles.
The vulgar imagine the pretender to have been a child imposed upon the nation by the fraudulent zeal of his parents, and their bigotted counsellors. Swift.

VULGARITY. n. f. [from vulgar.]
1. Meanness; state of the lowest people.
Although their condition may place them many spheres above the multitude; yet are they still within the line of vulgarity and democratical enemies to truth. Brown.
True it is, and I hope I shall not offend their vulgarities, if I say they are daily mocked into error by deivers. Brown.

2. Particular instance or specimen of meanness.
Is the grand sophos of Persius, and the sublimity of Juvenal to be circumscribed with the meanness of words, and vulgarity of expression? Dryden's Dedication to Juvenal.
VULGARLY. adv. [from vulgar.] Commonly; in the ordinary manner; among the common people.
He was, which people much respect
In princes, and which pleases vulgarly,
Of goodly pers'nage, and of sweet aspect. Daniel.
He, that believes himself incapable of pardon, goes on without thought of reforming; such an one we call vulgarly a desperate person. Hammond's Practical Catechism.
As it is vulgarly understood, that he cut a passage for his army through these mighty mountains, it may seem incredible. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

VULNERABLE. adj. [vulnerabile, Fr. vulnerabilis, Lat.] Susceptive of wounds; liable to external injuries.

UXO

Let fall thy blade on vulnerable crests;
I bear a charmed life, which must not yield
To one of woman born. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
Achilles though dipt in Styx, yet having his heel untouched by that water, although he were fortified elsewhere, he was slain in that part, as only vulnerable in the inferior and brutal part. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

VULNERARY. adj. [vuleraire, Fr. vulnerarius, Lat.] Useful in the cure of wounds.
Try whether the same effect will not ensue, by common vulnerary plaisters. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
I kept the orifice open, and prescribed him vulneraries. Wise man's Surgery.

TO VULNERATE. v. a. [vulnere, Lat.] To wound; to hurt. De facto there is such an intercourse between the magnetick unguent and the vulnerated body. Glover's Scept.

VULPINE. adj. [vulpinus, Lat.] Belonging to a fox.
VULTURE. n. f. [vultur, Lat.] A large bird of prey remarkable for voracity.
Nor the night raven, that still deadly yells,
Nor grisly vultures make us once afraid.
We've willing dames enough, there cannot be
That vulture in you to devour so many,
As will to greatness dedicate themselves.
A rav'nous vulture in his open'd side,
Her crooked beak and cruel talons try'd. Dryden.

VULTURINE. adj. [vulturinus, Lat.] Belonging to a vulture.
VULVA. n. f. [vulva, Lat.] In anatomy, a round soft spongy body, suspended from the palate near the foramina of the nostrils over the glottis. Diet.
By an instrument bended up at one end, I got up behind the vulva. Wise man's Surgery.

UXORIOUS. adj. [uxorius, Lat.] Submissively fond of a wife; infected with connubial dotage.
Towards his queen he was nothing uxorious, nor scarce indulgent; but companionable and respectful. Bacon.
That uxorious king, whose heart, though large,
Beguill'd by fair idolatresses, fell
To idols foul. Milton's Paradise Lost.
How would'st thou insult,
When I must live uxorious to thy will
In perfect thralldom, how again betray me?
UXORIOUSLY. adv. [from uxorius.] With fond submission to a wife.
If thou art thus uxoriously inclin'd
To bear thy bondage with a willing mind,
Prepare thy neck. Dryden's Juvenal.

UXORIOUSNESS. n. f. [from uxorius.] Connubial dotage; fond submission to a wife.

WAD

W is a letter of which the form is not to be found in the alphabets of the learned languages; though it is not improbable that by our w is expressed the sound of the Roman v, and the Eolick f. Both the form and found are excluded from the languages derived from the Latin.
W is sometimes improperly used in diphthongs as a vowel, for u, v, u, u, u, u, the found of u consonant is uniform.
TO WADBLE. v. n. [A low, barbarous word.] To shake; to move from side to side.
If in your work you find it wabble, that is, that one side of the flat inclines to the right or left hand, with soft blows of an hammer set it to rights, and then krew it hard up. Maxon.

WAD. n. f. [peas hay, Saxon.]
1. A bundle of straw thrust close together.
2. Wadd, or black lead, is a mineral of great use and value. Woodward.

WADDING. n. f. [from wad, wad, Islandick.] A kind of soft stuff loosely woven, with which the skirts of coats are stuffed out.
TO WADDELE. v. n. [wagghelen, Dutch, to waggle; whence, by a casual corruption, waddle.] To shake, in walking from side to side; to deviate in motion from a right line.
She could have run and waddled all about. Shakespeare.
The strutting petticoat smooths and levels all distinctions; while I cannot but be troubled to see so many well-shaped, innocent virgins bloated up, and waddling up and down like big-bellied women. Spectator, N° 127.

The farmer's goose,
Grown fat with corn and sitting still,
Can scarce get o'er the barn-door fill,
And hardly waddles forth to cool
Her belly in the neighb'ring pool.
A dabchick waddles through the copse
On feet and wings, and flies, and wades, and hops. Pope.
Dulness, of business the directing soul,
To human heads like bias to the bowl;
Which, as more pond'rous, makes their aim more true,
Obliquely waddling to the mark in view. Pope.

TO WADE. v. n. [from wadon, Lat. pronounced wadium.]
1. To walk through the waters; to pass water without swimming.
We'll wade to the market-place in Frenchmen's blood. Shakespeare.
She waded through the dirt to pluck him off. Shakespeare.
I am in blood
Stept in so far, that, should I wade no more,
Returning were as tedious as go o'er. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
He staid seven days at the Craffus, until a bridge was made for the transporting of his army, for that the river was not to be waded over. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.
Then since fortune's favours fade;
You that in her arms do sleep,
Learn to swim, and not to wade,
For the hearts of kings are deep. Watson's Poems.
With head, hands, wings, or feet pursues his way,
And swims, or links, or wades, or creeps, or flies. Milton.
It is hard to wade deep in baths where springs arise. Brown.
Fowls that frequent waters, and only wade, have as well long legs as long necks; and those that are made for swimming have feet like oars. More's Divine Dialogues.
Those birds only wade in the water, and do not swim. More.
As when a dabchick waddles through the copse
On feet and wings, he flies, and wades, and hops. Pope.

2. To pass difficultly and laboriously.
They were not permitted to enter unto war, nor conclude any league of peace, nor to wade through any act of moment between them and foreign states, unless the oracle of God, or his prophets, were first consulted with. Hooker, b. iii.
I have waded through the whole cause, searching the truth by the causes of truth. Hooker.
The substance of those controversies whereunto we have begun to wade, be rather of outward things appertaining to the church, than of any thing wherein the being of the church consisteth. Hooker, b. iii.

W.

WAF

Virtue gives herself light, through darkness far to wade. Fairy Queen, b. i.
I should chuse rather with spitting and scorn to be tumbled into the dust in blood, bearing witness to any known truth of our Lord; than, by a denial of those truths, through blood and perjury wade to a sceptre, and lord it in a throne. South.
'Tis not to my purpose to wade into those bottomless controversies, which, like a gulph, have swallowed up so much time of learned men. Deasy of Piety.

The dame
Now try'd the stairs, and wading through the night,
Search'd all the deep recess, and issu'd into light. Dryden.
The wrathful God then plunges from above,
And where in thickest waves the sparkles drove,
There lights, and wades through fumes, and gropes his way,
Half-sing'd, half-stiff'd. Dryden.
Simonides, the more he contemplated the nature of the Deity, found that he waded but the more out of his depth; and that he lost himself in the thought. Addison.

WAFER. n. f. [wasel, Dutch.]
1. A thin cake.
Wife, make us a dinner; spare flesh, neither corn;
Make wafers and cakes, for our sheepe must be shorn. Tusser.
Poor Sancho they persuaded that he enjoyed a great dominion, and then gave him nothing to subsist upon but wafers and marmalade. Pope.

2. The bread given in the eucharist by the Romanists.
That the same body of Christ should be in a thousand places at once; that the whole body should lie hid in a little thin wafer; yet so, that the members thereof should not one run into another, but continue distinct, and have an order agreeable to a man's body, it doth exceed reason. Hall.

3. Paste made to close letters.
TO WAFER. v. a. [probably from wafel.]
1. To carry through the air, or on the water.
A braver choice of dauntless spirits,
Than now the English bottoms have waft o'er,
Did never float upon the swelling tide. Shakespeare.
Our high admiral
Shall waft them over with our royal fleet. Shakespeare.
Whether cripples, who have lost their thighs, will not sink but float; their lungs being able to waft up their bodies, which are in others overpoised by the hinder legs, we have not made experiment. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Nor dares his transport-veffel cross the waves,
With such whole bones are not compos'd in graves:
A hundred years they wander on the shore;
At length, their penance done, are wafted o'er. Dryden.
Lend to this wretch your hand, and waft him o'er
To the sweet banks of yon forbidden shore. Dryden.
From hence might first spring that opinion of the vehicles of spirits; the vulgar conceiving that the breath was that wherein the soul was wafted and carried away. Ray.
They before wafted over their troops into Sicily in open vessels. Arbitrator on Coins.
In vain you tell your parting lover,
You wish fair winds may waft him over:
Alas! what winds can happy prove,
That bear me far from what I love? Prior.
Speed the soft intercourse from soul to soul,
And waft a sigh from Indus to the pole. Pope.

2. To beckon; to inform by a sign of any thing moving.
TO WAFER. v. n. To float.
It wafted nearer yet, and then she knew,
That what before she but surmisd, was true. Dryden.
Those trumpets his triumphant entry tell,
And now the shouts waft near the citadel. Dryden.

WAFER. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A floating body.
From the bellowing east oft the whirlwind's wing
Sweeps up the burthen of whole wintry plains,
In one wide waft. Thomson's Winter.

2. Motion of a streamer. Used as a token or mean of information at sea.

WAG

WAGGAGE. n. f. [from wag.] Carriage by water or air. Not in use.

What ship of Epidaurum stays for me? —
—A ship you sent me to, to hire waggage. Shakespeare.

I stalk about her door,
Like a strange soul upon the Stygian banks,
Staying for waggage. Shakespeare. Troilus and Cressida.

WAGGER. n. f. [from wag.] A passage boat. Ainsworth.
WAGGERS. n. f. [from wag.] The act of waving. Not in use.

You answer'd not;
But with an angry wag of your hand
Gave sign for me to leave you. Shakespeare. Julius Caesar.

To WAG. v. a. [pagan, Saxon; waggen, Dutch.] To move lightly; to shake slightly.

I can counterfeit the deep tragedian;
Tremble and start at wagging of a straw. Shakespeare.

You may as well forbid the mountain pines
To wag their high tops, and to make a noise,
When they are fretted with the gusts of heaven. Shakespeare.

All that pass, hiss and wag their head at thee. La. ii. 15.
Thou canst not wag thy finger, or begin
The least light motion, but it tends to sin. Dryden.

So have I seen in black and white,
A prating thing, a magpye high,
Majestically stalk;
A stately, worthless animal,
That plies the tongue, and wags the tail,
All flutter, pride, and talk. Swift.

To WAG. v. n.

1. To be in quick or ludicrous motion.
Be merry, my wife has all;
For women are shrews, both short and tall;
'Tis merry in hall, where beards wag all. Shakespeare.

I will fight with him upon this theme,
Until my eyelids will no longer wag. Shakespeare. Hamlet.

2. To go; to be moved.
I will provoke him to't, or let him wag. Shakespeare.

Her charms she mutter'd o'er;
And yet the silly sieve wags d'ne'er the more;
I wept for woe. Dryden's Theodorus.

WAG. n. f. [pagan, Saxon, to cheat.] Any one ludicrously mischievous; a merry droll.

Cupid the wag, that lately conquer'd had Wife counsellors, stout captains puissant;
And ty'd them fast to lead his triumphs bad,
Glutted with them, now plays with meanness things. Sidney.

Was not my lord the verier wag o' th' two?
We wink at wags, when they offend, Shakespeare.

And spare the boy, in hopes the man may mend. Dryden.
A counsellor never pleaded without a piece of packthread in his hand, which he used to twist about a finger all the while he was speaking: the wags used to call it the thread of his discourse. Addison.

WAGE. n. f. the plural wages is now only used. [wagen, or wagen, German; gages, Fr.]

1. Pay given for service.

All friends shall taste
The wages of their virtue, and all foes
The cup of their deservings. Shakespeare. K. Lear.

The last petition is for my men; they are the poorest,
But poverty could never draw them from me;
That they may have their wages duly paid them,
And something over to remember me. Shakespeare.

By Tom Thumb, a fairy page;
He sent it, and doth him engage,
By promise of a mighty wage,
It secretly to carry. Dryden's Nymphid.

The thing itself is not only our duty, but our glory: and he who hath done this work, has, in the very work, partly received his wages. South.

2. Gage; pledge. Ainsworth.

To WAGE. v. a. [The origination of this word, which is now only used in the phrase to wage war, is not easily discovered: wagen, in German, is to attempt any thing dangerous.]

1. To attempt; to venture.
We must not think the Turk is so unskilful,
Neglecting an attempt of ease and gain,
To wake and wage a danger profitless. Shakespeare.

2. To make; to carry on. Applied to war.
Return to her, and fifty men dismiss'd!
No: rather I abjure all roofs, and chuse
To wage against the enemy o' th' air,
To be a comrade with the wolf. Shakespeare. K. Lear.

Your reputation wages war with the enemies of your royal family, even within their trenches. Dryden.

He ponder'd, which of all his sons was fit
To reign, and wage immortal war with wit. Dryden.

3. [From wag, wages.] To set to hire.
Thou must wage
Thy works for wealth, and life for gold engage. P. Queen.

WAG

4. To take to hire; to hire for pay; to hold in pay; to employ for wages.

I seem'd his follower, not partner; and
He wag'd me with his countenance, as if I had been mercenary. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

The officers of the admiralty having places of so good benefit, it is their parts, being well waged and rewarded, exactly to look into the found building of ships. Raleigh.

The king had erected his courts of ordinary resort, and was at the charge not only to wage justice and their ministers, but also to appoint the safe custody of records. Bacon.

This great lord came not over with any great number of waged soldiers. Davies's Ireland.

5. [In law.]

When an action of debt is brought against one, as for money or chattels, left or lent the defendant, the defendant may wage his law; that is, swear, and certain persons with him, that he owes nothing to the plaintiff in manner as he hath declared. The offer to make the oath is called wager of law: and when it is accomplished, it is called the making or doing of law. Blount.

WAGER. n. f. [from wage, to venture.]

1. A bet; any thing pledged upon a chance or performance.
Love and mischief made a wager, which should have most power in me. Sidney.

The sea strove with the winds which should be louder; and the shrouds of the ship, with a ghastful noise to them that were in it, witnessed that their ruin was the wager of the other's contention. Sidney, b. ii.

Full fast the fled, ne ever look'd behind;
As if her life upon the wager lay. Fairy Queen.

Besides these plates for horse-races, the wagers may be as the persons please. Temple.

Faction, and favouring this or t'other side,
Their wagers back their wishes. Dryden.

If any atheist can stake his soul for a wager, against such an inexhaustible disproportion; let him never hereafter accuse others of credulity. Bentley's Sermon.

2. [In law.] An offer to make oath. See to wage in law.

Multiplication of actions upon the case were rare formerly, and thereby wager of law outed, which discouraged many suits. Hale.

To WAGER. v. a. [from the noun.] To lay; to pledge as a bet; to pledge upon some casualty or performance.

'Twas merry, when you wager'd on your angling. Shakespeare.
He that will lay much to stake upon every flying story, may as well wager his estate which way the wind will sit next morning. Government of the Tongue.

I feed my father's flock;
What can I wager from the common stock? Dryden.

WAGES. n. f. See WAGE.

WAGGERS. n. f. [from wag.] Mischievous merriment; roguish trick; farcical gaiety.

'Tis not the waggers or cheats practised among schoolboys, that make an able man; but the principles of justice, generosity, and sobriety. Lake.

WAGGISH. adj. [from wag] Knavishly merry; merrily mischievous; frolicsome.

Change fear and niceness,
The handmaids of all women, or, more truly,
Woman its pretty self, to waggish courage. Shakespeare.

This new conceit is the waggish suggestion of some fly and sculking atheists. Morley's Divine Dialogues.

A company of waggish boys watching of frogs at the side of a pond, still as any of them put up their heads, they would be pelting them down with stones. Children, says one of the frogs, you never consider, that though this may be play to you, 'tis death to us. L'Estrange.

As boys, on holidays let loose to play,
Lay waggish traps for girls that pass that way;
Then shout to see in dirt and deep distress
Some silly cit. Dryden.

WAGGISHNESS. n. f. [from waggish.] Merry mischief.

A christian boy in Constantinople had like to have been stoned for giggling, in a waggishness, a long billed fowl. Bacon.

To WAGGLE. v. n. [wagghelen, German.] To waddle; to move from side to side.

The sport Basilus would shew to Zelmane, was the mounting of his hawk at a heron, which getting up on his waggle wings with pain, as though the air next to the earth were not fit for his great body to fly through, was now grown to diminish the sight of himself. Sidney.

Why do you go nodding and waggle so, as if hip-shot?
says the goole to her goelling. L'Estrange.

WAGON. n. f. [pagan, Sax. waghen, Dutch; wagen, Icelandic.]

1. A heavy carriage for burthens.
The Hungarian tents, were enclosed round with waggons, one chained to another. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.

2. A chariot. Not in use.
Now fair Phœbus 'gan decline in haste,
His weary waggon to the western vale. Spenser.

Then

WAI

Then to her waggon she betak'd;
And with her bears the witch. Spenser.

O Proserpina,
For the flowers now that frighted thou let'st fall
From Dis's waggon. Shakespeare.

Her waggon spoked made of long spinners legs;
The covers, of the wings of grasshoppers. Shakespeare.

WAGGONER. n. f. [from wagon.] One who drives a wagon.

By this, the northern waggoner had set
His sevenfold team behind the steadfast star;
That was in ocean waves yet never wet. Fairy Queen, b. i.

Gallop apace, you fiery-footed steeds;
Tow'rd Phœbus' mansion! such a waggoner
As Phaeton would whip you to the west. Shakespeare.

A waggoner took notice upon the creaking of a wheel, that it was the worst wheel that made most noise. L'Estrange.

The waggoners that cur'd their standing teams,
Would wake e'en drowsy Drusus from his dreams. Dryden.

I described to him the life and the nature of it; and the next day the waggoners arrived with it. Gulliver's Travels.

WAGTAIL. n. f. A bird. Ainsworth.

WAG. v. a. [I suppose for waggle.] Crushed.
His horse wag in the back, and shoulder shotten. Shakespeare.

WAG. n. f. [waggon, waggon, law Lat. from wagon.] Goods found, but claim'd by no body; that of which every one waves the claim. Commonly written wag. Ainsworth.

To WAIL. v. a. [guolare, Italian.] To moan; to lament; to bemoan.

Wife men ne'er wail their present woes,
But presently prevent the ways to wail. Shakespeare.

Say, if my spouse maintains her royal trust?
Or if no more her absent lord she wails,
But the false woman o'er the wife prevails? Pope.

To WAIL. v. n. To grieve audibly; to express sorrow.
Son of man wail for the multitude. Ez. xxxii. 18.

I will wail and howl. Mic. i. 8.

WAIL. n. f. Audible sorrow.
Around the woods
She sighs her song, which with her wail resound. Thomson.

WAILING. n. f. [from wail.] Lamentation; moan; audible sorrow.

The camp filled with lamentation and mourning, which would be increased by the weeping and wailing of them, which should never see their brethren. Kneller.

Other cries amongst the Irish, favour of the Scythian barbarism; as the lamentations of their burials, with despairful outcries, and immoderate wailings. Spenser's Ireland.

Take up wailing for us, that our eyes may run down with tears. Jer. ix. 18.

The wailings of a maiden I recite. Gay.

WAILFUL. adj. [from wail and full.] Sorrowful; mournful.

Lay time to tangle her desires
By wailful sonnets, whose composed rhimes
Should be full fraught with serviceable vows. Shakespeare.

WAIN. n. f. [contracted from wagon.] A carriage.
There ancient night arriving, did alight
From her high weary wain. Spenser.

Yours be the harvest; 'tis the beggar's gain,
To glean the fallings of the loaded wain. Dryden.

WAINROPE. n. f. [wain and rope.] A large cord, with which the load is tied on the wagon.

Oxen and wainropes cannot hale them together. Shakespeare.

WAINSCOT. n. f. [waghschot, Dutch.] The inner wooden covering of a wall.

Some have the veins more varied and chambletted; as oak, whereof wainscot is made. Bacon.

She never could part with plain wainscot and clean hangings. Arbutnot.

A rat your utmost rage defies,
That safe behind the wainscot lies. Swift.

To WAINSCOT. v. a. [waghschotten, Dutch.]

1. To line walls with boards.
Musick foundeth better in chambers wainscotted, than hanged. Bacon.

2. To line in general.
It is most curiously lined, or wainscotted, with a white testacous crust, of the same substance and thickness with the tubuli marini. Grew.

One side commands a view of the garden, and the other is wainscotted with looking-glasses. Addison's Guardian.

WAIN. n. f. [In carpentry.] A piece of timber two yards long,
and a foot broad. Bailey.

WAI. n. f. [gwaf, Welsh; from the verb gwafon, to press or bind.]

1. The smallest part of the body; the part below the ribs.
The one seem'd woman to the wai, and fair,
But ended foul in many a scaly fold,
Voluminous and vast. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ii.

WAI

She, as a veil, down to her slender wai,
Her unadorned golden tresses wore, Milton's Par. Lost, b. iv.

Dishevel'd.
They set'd, and with entangling folds embrac'd,
His neck twice compassing, and twice his wai. Denham.

Stiff stays constrain her slender wai. Gay.

2. The middle deck, or floor of a ship.
Sheets of water from the clouds are sent,
Which hissing through the planks, the flames prevent,
And stop the fiery pest: four ships alone
Burn to the wai, and for the fleet atone. Dryden.

To WAIT. v. a. [wachten, Dutch.]

To WAKE. v. n. [wakan, Gothick; pacian, Saxon; waechen, Dutch.]

1. To watch; not to sleep.
All night she watch'd, ne once a-down would lay
Her dainty limbs in her sad dremiment,
But praying still did wake, and waking did lament. Spenser.
The father waketh for the daughter, and the care for her taketh away sleep. Ecclesiast. xlii. 9.

Thou holdest mine eyes waking. Pf. lxxvii. 4.
In the valley of Jehoshaphat,
The judging God shall close the book of fate;
And there the last affizes keep,
For those who wake, and those who sleep. Dryden.
I cannot think any time, waking or sleeping, without being sensible of it. Locke.

2. To be roused from sleep.
Each tree stirr'd appetite, whereto I wak'd. Milton.
3. To cease to sleep.

The sisters awaked from dreams, which flattered them with more comfort, than their waking would consent to. Sidney.
Come, thou powerful God,
And thy leaden charming rod,
Dipt in the Lethæan lake,
O'er his watchful temples shake,
Left he should sleep, and never wake. Denham.

Leap'd up, and wak'd his mistress with his tongue. Pope.
2. To excite; to put in motion, or action.
Prepare war, wake up the mighty men; let them come up. Jer. iii. 9.

Thine, like Amphion's hand, had wak'd the stone,
And from destruction call'd the rising town;
Nor could he burn so fast, as thou couldst build, Prior.
What thou've said,
Has wak'd a thought in me, which may be lucky. Rowe.

3. To bring to life again, as if from the sleep of death.
To raise the genius, and to mend the heart. Prel. to Cato.
To bring to life again, as if from the sleep of death,
To second life, Milton.

Wak'd in the renovation of the just.
WAKE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The feast of the dedication of the church, formerly kept by watching all night.
Fill oven full of flavnes, Ginnie passe not for sleepe,
Tomorrow thy father his wake-daie will keepe. Tusser.
The droiling peasant scarce thinks there is any world beyond his village, nor gaiety beyond that of a wake. Gov. of Tongue.
Putting all the Grecian actors down,
And winning at a wake their parsley crown. Dryden.
Sometimes the vulgar will of mirth partake,
And have excessive doings at their wake. King's Art of Cook.

2. Vigils; state of forbearing sleep.
By dimpled brook, and fountain brim,
The wood-nymphs deckt with daisies trim,
Their merry wakes and pastimes keep:
What hath night to do with sleep? Milton.

WAKEFUL. adj. [wake and full.] Not sleeping; vigilant.
Before her gate high God did sweat ordain,
And wakeful watches ever to abide. Spenser.
Why dost thou shake thy leaden sceptre? go,
Bestow thy poppy upon wakeful woe,
Sickness and sorrow, whose pale lids ne'er know
Thy downy finger; dwell upon their eyes,
Shut in their tears; shut out their miseries. Crashaw.

3. To be put in action; to be excited.
All thy fears,
Thy wakeful terrors, affrighting dreams,
Have now their full reward. Denham's Sophy.
Dissembling sleep, but wakeful with the fright,
The day takes off the pleasure of the night. Dryden.

WAKEFULNESS. n. f. [from wakeful.]

1. Want of sleep.
Other perfumes are fit to be used in burning agues, consumptions, and too much wakefulness. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

These bow's as wide as we need walk. Milton.

4. To move the slowest pace. Not to trot, gallop, or amble.

Applied to a horse.

5. To appear as a spectre.

The spirits of the dead

May walk again; if such thing be, thy mother

Appear'd to me last night. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.

It then draws near the season

Whereto the spirit is wont to walk. Shakespeare. Hamlet.

There were walking spirits of the house of York, as well in Ireland as in England. Davies's Ireland.

Some say no evil thing that walks by night,

In fog, or fire, by lake, or moorish fen,

Blue meagre hag, or stubborn unlaid ghost,

That breaks his magic chains at curfew time;

No goblin, or swart fairy of the mine,

Hath hurtful pow'r o'er true virginity. Milton.

6. To act on any occasion.

Do you think I'd walk in any plot,

Where Madam Sempronius should take place of me,

And Fulvia come i' th' rear? B. Johnson.

7. To be in motion. Applied to a clamorous or abusive se-male tongue; and is still in low language retain'd.

As she went, her tongue did walk

In foul reproach, and terms of vile despatch;

Provoking him by her outrageous talk,

8. To act in sleep.

When was it she last wak'd?—

—I have seen her rise from her bed, unlock her closet, take forth paper, fold it, write upon't, read it, and return to bed; yet all this while in a most fast sleep. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

9. To range; to move about.

Affairs that walk,

As they say spirits do at midnight, have

In them a milder nature, than the business

That seeks dispatch by day. Shakespeare. Hen. VIII.

10. To move off.

When he comes forth, he will make their cows and gar-rans to walk, if he doth no other harm to their persons. Spenser.

11. To act in any particular manner.

Do justly, love mercy, and walk humbly with thy God. Mic.

ferences, and our evening walks. Pope.

2. Gait; step; manner of walking.

Morpheus, of all his numerous train, express'd

The shape of man, and imitated best;

The walk, the words, the gesture could supply,

The habit mimic, and the mien supply. Dryden.

WAL

3. A length of space, or circuit through which one walks.

He usually from hence to th' palace gate

Makes it his walk. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

If that way be your walk, you have not far. Milton.

She would never miss one day,

A walk so fine, a fight so gay. Prior.

4. An avenue set with trees.

He hath left you all his walks,

His private harbours, and new-planted orchards,

On that side the Tiber. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

Goodliest trees planted with walks and bow'rs. Milton.

5. Way; road; range; place of wandering.

The mountains are his walks, who wand'ring feeds

On slowly-springing herbs. Sandys's Paraphrase.

Set women in his eye, and in his walk,

Among daughters of men the fairest found. Milton.

Our souls, for want of that acquaintance here,

May wander in the stony walks above. Dryden.

That bright companion of the fun,

Whose glorious aspect seal'd our new-born king;

And now a round of greater years begun,

New influence from his walks of light did bring. Dryden.

Wanting an ampler sphere to expatiate in, he open'd a boundless walk for his imagination. Pope.

6. [Turbo, Lat.] A fish.

7. Walk is the slowest or least raised pace, or going of a horse. In a walk, a horse lifts two legs of a side, one after the other, beginning with the hind leg first; as suppose that he leads with the legs on his right side, then he lifts his far hind foot first; and in the time that he is setting it down, which in a step is always short of the tread of his fore foot upon the same side, he lifts his far fore foot, and sets it down before his near foot, and just as he lifts up his near hind foot, and sets it down again just short of his near fore foot, and just as he is setting it down, he lifts his near fore foot, and sets it down just before his far fore foot. Farrier's Dict.

WALKER. n. f. [from walk.] One that walks.

I ride and walk, and am reputed the best walker in this town. Swift to Gay.

May no such vicious walkers crowd the street. Gay.

Dutch.]

1. A series of brick or stone carried upwards, and cemented with mortar; the sides of a building.

Poor Tom! that eats the wall-newt and the water-newt. Shakespeare. K. Lear.

Where though I mourn my matchless loss alone,

And none between my weakness judge and me;

Yet ev'n these gentle walls allow my moan,

Whose doleful echo's with my plaints agree. Wotton.

Part rise in crystal wall or ridge direct. Milton.

2. Fortification; works built for defence. In this sense it is commonly used plurally.

With love's light wings did I o'erperch these walls;

For stony limits cannot hold out love. Shakespeare.

General, the walls are thin:

Witness the world, that I create thee here

My lord and master. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

A prey

To that proud city, whose high walls thou saw'st

Left in confusion. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii.

I rush undaunted to defend the walls. Dryden.

3. To take the wall. To take the upper place; not to give place.

I will take the wall of any man or maid of Montague's. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

When once the poet's honour ceases,

From reason far his transports rove:

And Boileau, for eight hundred pieces,

Makes Louis take the wall of Jove. Prior.

To WALL. v. a. [from the noun.]

 God, who sees all things intuitively, does not want helps; he neither stands in need of logic, nor uses it. Baker.
 6. To wish for; to long for.
 Down I come, like glistering Phaeton,
 Wanting the manage of unruly jades. Shakefpeare.
 The sylviens to their shades retire,
 Those very shades and streams new shades and streams require,
 And want a cooling breeze of wind to fan the raging fire. Dry.
 What wants my son? for know
 My son thou art, and I must call thee so. Addison's Ovid.
 Men who want to get a woman into their power, seldom scruple the means. Clarissa.
TO WANT. v. n.
 1. To be wanted; to be improperly absent; not to be in sufficient quantity.
 Nor did there want comice or freeze. Milton.
 Finds wealth where 'tis, bestows it where it wants;
 Cities in deserts, woods in cities plants. Denham.
 We have the means in our hands, and nothing but the application of them is wanting. Addison.
 As in bodies, thus in souls, we find
 What wants in blood and spirits, swell'd with wind. Pope.
 The design, the disposition, the manners, and the thoughts, are all before it; where any of those are wanting, or imperfect, so much wants in the imitation of human life. Dryden.
 2. To fail; to be deficient.
 Nor shall I to the work thou enterprisest
 Be wanting, but afford thee equal aid. Milton.

W A N

Though England is not wanting in a learned nobility, yet unhappy circumstances have confined me to a narrow choice. Dryden's Dedication to Lord Clifford.
 Whatever fortune, good or bad betide,
 No time shall find me wanting to my truth. Dryden.
 Religion will never be without enemies, nor those enemies be wanting in endeavours to expose it to the contempt of mankind. Rogers's Sermons.
 Several are against his severe usage of you, and would be glad of an occasion to convince the rest of their error, if you will not be wanting to yourself. Swift.
 3. To be missed; to be not had.
 Twelve, wanting one, he flew,
 My brethren: I alone surviv'd. Dryden.
 Granivorous animals have a long colon and cæcum, which in carnivorous are wanting. Arbutnot on Aliments.
WANT. n. f.
 1. Need.
 It infers the good
 By thee communicated, and our want. Milton.
 Parents should distinguish between the wants of fancy, and those of nature. Locke.
 2. Deficiency.
 This proceeded not from any want of knowledge, but of judgment. Dryden.
 One objection to Civita Vecchia, is, that the air is not wholesome: this proceeds from want of inhabitants. Addison.
 The blood flows through the vessels, by the excess of the force of the heart above the incumbent pressure, which in fat people is excessive; and as want of a due quantity of motion of the fluids increaseth fat, the disease is the cause of itself. Arbutnot on Aliments.
 3. The state of not having.
 You shall have no reason to complain of me, for want of a generous disdain of this world. Pope.
 4. Poverty; penury; indigence.
 Nothing is so hard for those who abound in riches, as to conceive how others can be in want. Swift.
 5. [panb, Saxon.] A mole.
WANTON. n. f. [I his word is derived by Minsheu from want one, a man or woman that wants a companion. This etymology, however odd, Juvius silently adopts. Skinner, who had more acuteness, cannot forbear to doubt it, but offers nothing better.]
 1. Lascivious; libidinous; lecherous; lustful.
 Thou art forward by nature, enemy to peace,
 Lascivious, wanton; more than well becomes A man of thy profession. Shakef. Hen. VI.
 Entic'd to do him wanton rites. Milton.
 2. Licentious; dissolute.
 My piteous joys,
 Wanton in fumes, seek to hide themselves
 In drops of sorrow. Shakef. Macbeth.
 Men grown wanton by prosperity,
 Study'd new arts of luxury and ease. Roscommon.
 3. Frolicsome; gay; sportive; airy.
 As flies to wanton boys, we are to th' gods:
 They kill us for their sport. Shakef. K. Lear.
 Note a wild and wanton herd,
 Or race of youthful and unhandled colts,
 Fetching mad bounds. Shakef. Merch. of Venice.
 Time drives the flocks from field to fold;
 The flows do fade, and wanton fields
 To wayward winter reckoning yields.
 How eagerly ye follow my disgrace,
 As if it fed ye; and how sleek and wanton
 Y' appear, in every thing may bring my ruin. Shakefpeare.
 4. Loose; unrestrained.
 How does your tongue grow wanton in her praise! Addison.
 5. Quick, and irregular of motion.
 6. Luxuriant; superfluous.
 What we by day lop overgrown,
 One night or two, with wanton growth derides, Tending to wild. Milton.
 Women richly gay in gems and wanton drefs. Milton.
 7. Not regular; turned fortuitously.
 The quaint mazes in the wanton green,
 For want of tread are undistinguishable. Milton.
WANTON. n. f.
 1. A lascivious person; a strumpet; a whoremonger.
 An old wanton will be doating upon women, when he can scarce see without spectacles. South's Sermons.
 To lip a wanton in a secure couch,
 And to suppose her chaste. Shakef. Othello.
 2. A trifier; an insignificant flatterer.
 Shall a beardless boy,
 A cocker'd, filken wanton brave your fields,
 Mocking the air with colours idly spread,
 And find no check? Shakefpeare's K. John.
 Pats with your best violence;
 I am afraid you make a wanton of me. Shakefpeare's Hamlet.

3. A word of slight endearment.
 Peace, my wantons; he will do,
 More than you can aim unto. B. Johnson.
TO WANTON. v. n. [from the noun.]
 1. To play lasciviously.
 He from his guards and midnight tent,
 Disguis'd o'er hills and valleys went,
 To wanton with the sprightly dame,
 And in his pleasure lost his fame. Prior.
 2. To revel; to play.
 Oh! I heard him wanton in his praise;
 Speak things of him might charm the ears. Orway.
 Nature here
Wanton'd as in her prime, and play'd at will Her virgin fancies. Milton.
 O ye muses! deign your blest retreat,
 Where Horace wantons at your spring,
 And Pindar sweeps a bolder string. Fenton.
 3. To move nimbly, and irregularly.
WANTONLY. adv. [from wanton.] Lasciviously; frolicsome-ly; gayly; sportively; carelessly.
 Thou dost but try how far I can forbear,
 Nor art that monster which thou wouldst appear:
 But do not wantonly my passion move,
 I pardon nothing that relates to love. Dryden.
WANTONNESS. n. f. [from wanton.]
 1. Lasciviousness; lechery.
 The spirit of wantonness is fear'd out of him. Shakef.
 Bulls and goats bled apace; but neither the violence of the one, nor the wantonness of the other, ever died a victim at any of their altars. South.
 2. Sportiveness; frolic; humour.
 When I was in France,
 Young would be as sad as night,
 Only for wantonness. Shakef. K. John.
 Love, rais'd on beauty, will like that decay;
 Our hearts may bear its slender chain a day:
 As flow'ry bands in wantonness are worn,
 A morning's pleasure, and at evening torn. Pope.
 3. Licentiousness; negligence of restraint.
 The tumults threatened to abuse all acts of grace, and turn them into wantonness. K. Charles.
 'Till wantonness and pride
 Raise out of friendship hostile deeds in peace. Milton.
WANTWIT. n. f. [want and wit.] A fool; an idiot.
 Such a wantwit sadness makes of me,
 That I have much ado to know myself. Shakefpeare.
WANTY. n. f. [I know not whence derived.] A broad girth of leather, by which the load is bound upon the horse.
 A panel and wanty, pack-saddle and ped,
 With line to fetch litter. Tusser.
WAPED. adj. [Of this word I know not the original, except that to wape, to flock, or deject, is found in Spenser; from which the meaning may be gathered.] Dejected; crushed by misery.
 His makes the waped widow wed again. Shakefpeare.
WAPENTAKE. n. f. [from wapen, Saxon, and take, wapentakum, wapentagium, low Latin.]
Wapentake is all one with what we call a hundred: as upon a meeting for that purpose, they touched each other's weapons, in token of their fidelity and allegiance. Cowel.
 Hundred signifieth a hundred pledges, which were under the command and assurance of their alderman; which, as I suppose, was also called a wapentake, so named, of touching the weapon or spear of their alderman, and swearing to follow him faithfully, and serve their prince truly. But others think, that a wapentake was ten hundreds, or boroughs. Spenser.
WAR. n. f. [warre, old Dutch; guerre, Fr.]
 War may be defined the exercise of violence under sovereign command against withstanders; force, authority, and resistance being the essential parts thereof. Violence, limited by authority, is sufficiently distinguished from robbery, and the like outrages; yet consisting in relation towards others, it necessarily requires a supposition of resistance, whereby the force of war becomes different from the violence inflicted upon slaves or yielding malefactors. Raleigh.
 On, you noblest English,
 Whose blood is fetcht from fathers of war proof. Shakef.
 After a denunciation or indiction of war, the war is no more confined to the place of the quarrel, but left at large. Bacon.
 I saw the figure and armour of him, that headed the peasants in the war upon Bern, with the several weapons found on his followers. Addison.
 2. The instruments of war, in poetical language.
 The god of love inhabits there,
 With all his rage, and dread, and grief, and care;
 His complement of stores, and total war. Prior.
 3. Forces; army. Poetically.
 On th' embattled ranks the waves return,
 And overwhelm the war. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii.
 4. The profession of arms.

WAR

Thine almighty word leapt down from heaven, as a fierce man of war into the midst of a land of destruction. Wisdom.

5. Hostility; state of opposition; act of opposition.

Duncan's horses
Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls, flung out, Contending 'gainst obedience, as they would Make war with man. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

To WAR. v. n. [from the noun.] To make war; to be in a state of hostility.

Was this a face,
To be expos'd against the warring winds? Shakespeare.
Why should I war without the walls of Troy,
That find such cruel battle here within? Shakespeare.
Make peace with God, for you must die, my lord.—
—Have you that holy feeling in your soul,
To counsel me to make my peace with God,
And are you yet to your own soul's to blind,
That you will war with God, by murdering me? Shakespeare.
He teacheth my hands to war. 2 Sam. xxii.
This charge I commit unto thee, son Timothy, that thou by them mightest war a good warfare. 1 Tim. i. 18.
He limited his forces, to proceed in aid of the Britons, but in no wife to war upon the French. Bacon's Hen. VII.
We seem ambitious God's whole work 't undo;
With new devices on ourselves we war,
And with new physick, a worse engine far. Dante.
His next design
Was all the Theban race in arms to join,
And war on Thebes. Dryden.
To the island of Delos, by being reckoned a sacred place, nations warring with one another reformed with their goods,
and traded as in a neutral country. Arbutnot on Coins.

To WAR. v. a. To make war upon. A word not any longer used.

And them long time before great Nimrod was,
That first the world with sword and fire warred. Spenser.
To them the same was render'd, to the end,
To war the Scot, and borders to defend. Daniel's Civ. War.

To WARBLE. v. a. [from warben, old Teutonic; wervelen, German; to twirl, or turn round.]

1. To quaver any sound.
2. To quaver to quaver.

Follow me as I sing,
And touch the warbled string. Milton.

3. To utter musically.
She can thaw the numbing spell,
If she be right invok'd with warbled song. Milton.

To WARBLE. v. n.

1. To be quavered.
Such strains ne'er warble in the linnet's throat. Gay.

2. To be uttered melodiously.
A plain song, plain-singing voice requires,
For warbling notes from inward cheering flow. Sidney.
There birds resort, and in their kind, thy praise
Among the branches chant in warbling lays. Wotton.

3. To sing.
Creatures that liv'd and mov'd, and walk'd, or flew;
Birds on the branches warbling; all things smil'd. Milton.
She warbled in her throat,
And tun'd her voice to many a merry note, Dryden.
A bard amid the joyous circle sings
High airs attempt'd to the vocal strings;
Whilst warbling to the varied strain advance,
Two sprightly youths to form the bounding dance. Pope.

WARBLER. n. f. [from warble.] A singer; a songster.
Hark! on ev'ry bough,
In lulling strains the feather'd warblers woo. Tickell.

WARD. A syllable much used as an affix in composition, as heavenward, with tendency to heaven; hitherward, this way;
from peano, Saxon

Before she could come to the arbour, she saw walking from her-ward, a man in shepherdish apparel. Sidney.

To WARD. v. a. [peano; Saxon; waren, Dutch; garder, French.]

1. To guard; to watch.
He marched forth towards the castle wall,
Whose gates he found fast shut, no living sight
To ward the flame, nor answer comers' call. Fairy Queen.

2. To defend; to protect.
Tell him it was a hand that warded him
From thousand dangers, bid him bury it. Shakespeare.

3. To fence off; to obstruct, or turn aside any thing mischievous.

Not once the baron lift his armed hand
To strike the maid, but gazing on her eyes,
Where lordly Cupid seem'd in arms to stand,
No way to ward or thum her blows he tries.
Up and down he traverses his ground;
Now wards a felling blow, now strikes again. Daniel.

WAR

Toxus amaz'd, and with amazement flow,
Or to revenge, or ward the coming blow,
Stood doubting; and while doubting thus he stood,
Receiv'd the steel bath'd in his brother's blood. Dryden.

The pointed javelin warded off his rage. Addison.

The provision of bread for food; clothing to ward off the inclemency of the air, were to be first look'd after. Woodw.

It instructs the scholar in the various methods of warding off the force of objections, and of discovering and repelling the subtle tricks of sophisters. Watt's Improv. of the Mind.

To WARD. v. n.

1. To be vigilant; to keep guard.
2. To act upon the defensive with a weapon.
So redoubling her blows, drove the stranger to no other shift than to ward and go back. Sidney, b. ii.
Short crooked swords in closer fight they wear,
And on their warding arms light bucklers bear. Dryden.

WARD. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Watch; act of guarding.
Still when he slept, he kept both watch and ward. Spenser.
Sublime on these a tow'r of steel is rear'd;
And dire Tiphone there keeps the ward.
Girt in her sanguine gown, by night and day,
Observant of the souls that pass the downward way. Dryden.

2. Garrison; those who are intrusted to keep a place.
By reason of these two forts, though there be but small wards left in them, there are two good towns now grown, which are the greatest stay of both those two countries. Spenser.

Th' affixed castles ward
Their steadfast froids did mightily maintain. Spenser.

3. Guard made by a weapon in fencing.
Thou know'st my old ward; here I lay, and thus I bore my point. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Come from thy ward,
For I can here disarm thee with this stick. Shakespeare, Tempest.

Now, by proof it shall appear,
Whether thy horns are sharper, or my spear.
At this, I threw: for want of other ward,
He lifted up his hand, his front to guard. Dryden.

4. Fortref; strong hold.
She dwells securely on the excellency of her honour. Now could I come to her with any detection in my hand, I could drive her from the ward of her purity, her reputation, and a thousand other her defences, which now are too too strongly embattled against me. Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.

5. [Warda, law Lat.] District of a town.
Throughout the trembling city plac'd a guard,
Dealing an equal share to every ward. Dryden.

6. Custody; confinement.
That wretched creature being deprehended in that impiety, was held in ward. Hooker.
Stopt there was his too vehement speech with speed,
And he sent close to ward from where he stood. Daniel.

7. The part of a lock, which, corresponding to the proper key, hinders any other from opening it.
In the key-hole turns
Th' intricate wards, and ev'ry bolt and bat. Milton.
As there are locks for several purposes, so are there several inventions in the making and contriving their wards, or guards. Moxon's Mech. Exer.
The keys, as well as the locks, were fitted ward to ward, by the same wisdom. Grew's Cosmology.

8. One in the hands of a guardian.
The king causeth bring up his wards, but bestoweth no more of their rents upon them than is useful. Drummond.
You know our father's ward,
The fair Monimia: is your heart at peace?
Is it so guarded that you could not love her?
Thy Violante's heart was ever thine,
Compell'd to wed, before she was my ward. Dryden.
When stern as tutors, and as uncles hard,
We lash the pupil, and defraud the ward. Dryden.
Titles of honour and privileges, the rich and the great can never deserve, unless they employ them for the protection of these, the true wards and children of God. Sprat.

9. The state of a child under a guardian.
I must attend his majesty's command, to whom I am now in ward, evermore in subjection. Shakespeare.
Lewis the eleventh of France having much abated the greatness and power of the peers, would say, that he had brought the crown out of ward. Bacon.

10. Guardianship; right over orphans.
It is also inconvenient in Ireland, that the wards and marriages of gentlemen's children should be in the disposal of any of those lords. Spenser.

WARDEN. n. f. [from warden, Dutch.]

1. A keeper; a guardian.
2. A head officer.
The warden of apothecaries hall. Garth.

3. Warden of the cinque ports.
A magistrate that has the jurisdiction of these havens in the east part of England, commonly called the cinque ports, or five havens, who has there all that jurisdiction which the admiral of England has in places not exempt. The reason why one magistrate should be assigned to these havens seems to be, because in respect of their situation, they formerly required a more vigilant care than other havens, being in greater danger of invasion by our enemies. Cowel.

4. [Pyram waleum, Lat. I know not whence denominated.] A large pear.
Nor must all shoots of pears alike be set,
Cuthmanian, Syrian pears, and warden's great. May's Virg.
Ox-check when hot, and warden's bak'd some cry. King.

WARDER. n. f. [from ward.]

1. A keeper; a guard.
Upon those gates with force he fiercely flew,
And rending them in pieces, felly flew
Those warden's strange, and all that else he met. Hubbard.
Where be these warders, that they wait not here?
Open the gates. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
Though bladed corn be lodg'd and trees blown down,
Though castles topple on their warders' heads. Shakespeare.
The warders of the gate but scarce maintain
Th' unequal combat, and resist in vain. Dryden.

2. A truncheon by which an officer of arms forbade fight.
Sound trumpets, and set forward combatants.
—But stay, the king hath thrown his warden down. Shakespeare.
Then, then, when there was nothing could have fluid
My father from the breast of Bolingbroke,
O, when the king did throw his warden down, Shakespeare.
His own life hung upon the staff he threw.

WARDMORE. n. f. [peano and more, or gemoz, Saxon; ward- more, low Lat.] A meeting; a court held in each ward or district in London for the direction of their affairs.

WARDROBE. n. f. [wardrobe, French; garderoba, low Lat.] A room where cloaths are kept.
The third had of their wardrobe custody,
In which were not rich tires nor garments gay,
The plumes of pride, and wings of vanity,
But cloaths meet to keep keen cold away. Fairy Queen.
I will kill all his coats,
I'll murder all his wardrobe piece by piece
Until I meet the king. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
Behold!

What from his wardrobe her below'd allows,
To deck the wedding-day of his unspotted spouse. Dryden.
It would not be an impertinent design to make a kind of an old Roman wardrobe, where you should see toga's and tumicks, the chlamys and trabea, and all the different vests and ornaments so often mentioned in the Greek and Roman authors. Addison.

WARDSHIP. n. f. [from ward.]

1. Guardianship.
By reason of the tenures in chief revived, the sums for respect of homage be encreased, and the profits of wardships cannot but be much advanced. Bacon.

2. Peillage; state of being under ward.
The houses sued out their livery, and redeemed themselves from the wardship of tumults. King Charles.

WARE. The preretite of wear, more frequently wore.
A certain man ware no cloaths. Luke viii. 27.

WARE. adj. [For this we commonly say aware.]

1. Being in expectation of; being provided against.
The lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not ware of him. Matth. xxiv. 50.

2. Cautious; wary.
What man so wise, what earthly wit so ware,
As to defy the crafty cunning train
By which deceit doth mask in Vizor fair. Fairy Queen.
Bid her well be ware and still erect. Milton.

To WARE. v. n. To take heed of; to beware.
A shuffled, fullen, and uncertain light
That dances through the clouds, and shuts again,
Then ware a rising tempest on the main. Dryden.

WARE. n. f. [papo, Saxon; ware, Dutch; wara, Swedish.]
Commonly something to be fold.
Let us, like merchants, show our foulest wares,
And think, perchance, they'll sell. Shakespeare.
If the people bring ware or any victuals to sell, that we would not buy it. Nehem. x. 31.
I know thou whole art but a shop
Of toys and trifles, traps and snares,
To take the weak, and make them stop;
Yet art thou falser than thy ware. Ben. Johnson.
Why should my black thy love impair?
Let the dark shop commend the ware. Cleveland.
He turns himself to other wares which he finds your markets take off. Lacke.

WAR

WAREFUL. adj. [ware and full.] Cautious; timorously prudent.

WAREFULNESS. n. f. [from wareful.] Cautiousness. Obsolete.
With pretence from Strephon her to guard, Sidney.
He met her full; but full of warefulness.

WAREHOUSE. n. f. [ware and house.] A storehouse of merchandise.
His understanding is only the warehouse of other mens lumber, I mean false and unconcluding reasonings rather than a repository of truth for his own use. Locke.
She had never more ships at sea, greater quantities of merchandise in her warehouses than at present. Addison.
She the big warehouse built,
Rais'd the strong crane. Thomson's Autumn.

WARELESS. adj. [from ware.] Uncautious; unwary. Spens.

WARELY. adv. [from ware.] Warily; cautiously; timorously.
They bound him hand and foot with iron chains,
And with continual watch did warily keep. Fairy Queen.

WAREFARE. n. f. [war and fare.] Military service; military life.

In the wilderness
He shall first lay down the rudiments
Of his great warfare, ere I send him forth
To conquer sin and death. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.
Faithful hath been your warfare, and of God
Accepted, fearless in his righteous cause. Milton.
Tully, when he read the Tactics, was thinking on the war which was his field of battle: the knowledge of warfare is thrown away on a general who does not make use of what he knows. Dryden.
The state of Christians, even when they are not actually persecuted, is a perpetual state of warfare and voluntary sufferings. Atterbury's Sermons.
The scripture has directed us to refer these miscarriages in our Christian warfare to the power of three enemies. Rogers.

To WAREFARE. v. n. [from the noun.] To lead a military life.

That was the only amulet in that credulous warfaring age to escape dangers in battles. Camden's R. mains.

WARHABLE. adj. [war and habile, from habilis, Lat. or able.]
Military; fit for war.
The weary Britons, whose warhable youth
Was by Maximilian lately led away,
With wretched miseries and woeful ruth,
Were to those pagans made an open prey. Fairy Queen.

WARILY. adv. [from wary.] Cautiously; with timorous prudence; with wise forethought.
The charge thereof unto a courteous spirit
Commended was, who thereby did attend,
And warily awaited day and night,
From other covetous fiends it to defend. Fairy Queen.
The change of laws, especially concerning matters of religion, must be warily proceeded in. Hooker.
It will concern a man to treat conscience awfully and warily, by still observ'ng what it commands; but especially what it forbids. South's Sermons.

They searched diligently and concluded warily. Sprat.

WARINESS. n. f. [from wary.] Caution; prudent forethought;
timorous scrupulousness.
For your own conscience he gives innocence,
But for your fame a discreet wariness. Dante.
To determine what are little things in religion, great wariness is to be used. Sprat's Sermons.
The path was so very slippery, the shade so exceeding gloomy, and the whole wood so full of echoes, that they were forced to march with the greatest wariness, circumspection and silence. Addison's Freeholder.
Most men have so much of ill nature, or of wariness, as not to sooth the vanity of the ambitious man. Addison.
I look upon it to be a most clear truth; and expressed it with more wariness and reserve than was necessary. Atterbury.

WARK. n. f. [Anciently used for work; whence butwark.]
Building.
Thou findest fault where any's to be found,
And buildest strong wark upon a weak ground. Spenser.

WARLIKE. n. f. [war and like.]

1. Fit for war; disposed to war.
She us'd so strange, and yet so well succeeding a temper, made her people by peace warlike. Sidney.
Old Siward with ten thousand warlike men,
All ready at appoint, was setting forth. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
When a warlike state grows soft and effeminate, they may be sure of a war. Bacon.
O imprudent Gauls,
Relying on false hopes, thus to incense
The warlike English. Philips.

2. Military; relating to war.
The great arch-angel from his warlike toil Surceas'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

WARLING. n. f. [from war.] This word is I believe only found in the following adage, and seems to mean; one often quarrelled with.

WAR

Better be an old man's darling than a young man's war-ling.
WARLOCK. n. f. [wardloock, Islandick, a charm; peilog, Saxon, an evil spirit. This etymology was communicated by Mr. Wile.] A male witch; a wizard.
Warlock in Scotland is applied to a man whom the vulgar suppose to be conversant with spirits, as a woman who carries on the same commerce is called a witch: he is supposed to have the invulnerable quality which Dryden mentions, who did not understand the word.
 He was no warlock, as the Scots commonly call such men, who they say are iron free or lead free. Dryden.
WARM. adj. [warm, Gothick; peapm, Sax. warm, Dutch.]
 1. Not cold, though not hot; heated to a small degree.
 He stretched himself upon the child, and the flesh of the child waxed warm. 2 Kings iv. 34.
 Main ocean flow'd, not idle, but with warm
 Prolifick humour, foaming all her globe. Milton.
 2. Zealous; ardent.
 I never thought myself so warm in any party's cause as to deserve their money. Pope.
 Scaliger in his poetics is very warm against it. Broom's Notes on the Odyssey.
 3. Violent; furious; vehement.
 Welcome day-light; we shall have warm work on't:
 The Moor will gage
 His utmost forces on his next assault,
 To win a queen and kingdom. Dryden's Spanish Friar.
 4. Busy in action.
 I hate the ling'ring summons to attend,
 Death all at once would be a nobler end;
 Fate is unkind; methinks a general
 Should warm, and at the head of armies fall. Dryden.
 5. Fanciful; enthusiastic.
 If there be a fober and a wife man, what difference will there be between his knowledge and that of the most extravagant fancy in the world? If there be any difference between them, the advantage will be on the warm-headed man's side, as having the more ideas, and the more lively. Locke.
TO WARM. v. a. [from the adjective.]
 1. To free from cold; to heat in a gentle degree.
 It shall be for a man to burn, for he shall take thereof and warm himself. Isa. xlv. 15.
 There shall not be a coal to warm at, nor fire to sit before it. Isa. xlvii. 14.
 The mounted sun
 Shot down direct his fervid rays to warm
 Earth's inmost womb.
 These soft fires with kindly heat
 Of various influence, foment and warm. Milton.
 2. To heat mentally; to make vehement.
 The action of Homer being more full of vigour than that of Virgil, is more pleasing to the reader: one warms you by degrees, the other sets you on fire all at once, and never intermits his heat. Dryden.
WARMING-PAN. n. f. [warm and pan.] A covered bras pan for warming a bed by means of hot coals.
WARMING-STONE. n. f. [warm and stone.] To these useful stones add the warming-stone, digged in Cornwall, which being once well heated at the fire retains its warmth a great while, and hath been found to give ease in the internal hæmorrhoids. Ray on the Creation.
WARMLY. adv. [from warm.]
 1. With gentle heat.
 There the warming sun first warmly smote
 The open field. Milton.
 2. Eagerly; ardently.
 Now I have two right honest wives
 One to Atreides I will send,
 And t'other to my Trojan friend;
 Each prince shall thus with honour have What both so warmly seem to crave. Prior.
 The ancients expect you should do them right in the account you intend to write of their characters: I hope you think more warmly than ever of that design. Pope.
WARMNESS. n. f. [from warm.]
 1. Gentle heat.
 Then am I the prisoner, and his bed my goal; from the loathed warmth wherof deliver me. Shakespeare's King Lear.
 Cold plants have a quicker perception of the heat of the sun encreasing than the hot herbs have; as a cold hand will sooner find a little warmth than an hot. Bacon's Natural History.
 He vital virtue infus'd, and vital warmth
 Throughout the fluid mafs. Milton.
 Here kindly warmth their mounting juice ferments
 To nobler tastes, and more exalted scents. Addison.
 2. Zeal; passion; fervour of mind.
 What warmth is there in your affection towards any of these princely suitors that are already come? Shakespeare.

WAR

Our duties towards God and man, we should perform with that unfeigned integrity which belongs to Christian piety; with that temper and sobriety which becomes Christian prudence and charity; with that warmth and affection which agrees with Christian zeal. Sydney's Sermon.
 Your opinion that it is entirely to be neglected, would have been my own, had it been my own case; but I felt more warmth here than I did when first I saw his book against myself. Pope.
 3. Fancifulness; enthusiasm.
 The same warmth of head disposes men to both. Temple.
TO WARN. v. a. [warnen, Saxon; waeren, Dutch; warn, Swedish; warn, Islandick.]
 1. To caution against any fault or danger; to give previous notice of ill.
 What do'st thou scorn me for my gentle counsel?
 And sooth the devil that I warn thee from? Shakespeare.
 Our first parents had been warn'd
 The coming of their secret foe, and 'scap'd
 His mortal snare. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 The hand can hardly lift up itself high enough to strike, but it must be seen; so that it warns while it threatens; but a false insidious tongue may whisper a lie so close and low, that though you have ears to hear yet you shall not hear. South.
 Juturna warns the Daunian chief,
 Of Lausus' danger, urging swift relief. Dryden.
 If we consider the mistakes in mens disputes and notions, how great a part is owing to words, and their uncertain or mistaken significations; this we are the more carefully to be warn'd of, because the arts of improving it have been made the business of mens study. Locke.
 The father, whilst he warn'd his erring son,
 The sad examples which he ought to shun Describ'd.
 When first young Maro sung of kings and wars,
 Ere warning Phœbus touch'd his trembling ears,
 Perhaps he seem'd above the critic's law,
 And but from nature's fountains scorn'd to draw. Pope.
 2. To admonish of any duty to be performed, or practice or place to be avoided or forsaken.
 Cornelius was warn'd from God by an holy angel to send for thee. Acts x. 22.
 He had chidden the rebellious winds for obeying the command of their usurping master: he had warn'd them from the seas; he had beaten down the billows. Dryden.
 3. To notify previously good or bad.
 He wonders to what end you have assembled
 Such troops of citizens to come to him,
 His grace not being warn'd thereof before. Shakespeare.
 He charg'd the soldiers with preventing care,
 Their flags to follow, and their arms prepare,
 Warn'd of the ensuing fight, and bade 'em hope the war. Dryden's Æneid.
 Man, who knows not hearts, should make examples,
 Which like a warning-piece must be shot off.
 To fright the rest from crimes. Dryden's Spanish Friar.
WARNING. n. f. [from warn.]
 1. Caution against faults or dangers; previous notice of ill.
 I will thank the Lord for giving me warning in the night. Ps.
 He groaning from the bottom of his breast,
 This warning in these mournful words express'd. Dryden.
 Here wretched Phlegias warns the world with cries,
 Could warning make the world more just or wise. Dryden.
 You have fairer warning than others who are unexpectedly cut off, and so have a better opportunity, as well as greater engagements to provide for your latter end. Watts.
 A true and plain relation of my misfortunes may be of use and warning to credulous maids, never to put too much trust in deceitful men. Swift's Story of the Injured Lady.
 2. Previous notice: in a sense indifferent.
 Death called up an old man, and bade him come; the man excus'd himself, that it was a great journey to take upon so short a warning. L'Estrange.
 I saw with some disdain, more nonsense than either I or as bad a poet could have crammed into it at a month's warning; in which time it was wholly written. Dryden.
WARP. n. f. [weapp, Saxon; warp, Dutch.] That order of thread in a thing woven that crosses the woof.
 The fourteenth is the placing of the tangible parts in length or transverse, as it is in the warp and the woof of texture, more inward or more outward. Bacon's Natural History.
TO WARP. v. n. [weappan, Saxon; warpen, Dutch, to throw; whence we sometimes say, the work casts.] To change from the true situation by intestine motion; to change the position of one part to another.
 This fellow will but join you together as they join waincot, then one of you will prove a shrunken-pannel, and like green timber warp. Shakespeare's As you like it.
 They clamp one piece of wood to the end of another piece, to keep it from casting or warping. Mason's Misc. Exercise.

WAR

2. To lose its proper course or direction.
 There's our commission
 From which we would not have you warp. Shakespeare.
 This is strange! methinks
 My favour here begins to warp. Shakespeare.
 All attest this doctrine, that the pope can give away the right of any sovereign, if he shall never so little warp. Dryden.
 This we should do as directly as may be, with as little warping and declension towards the creature as is possible. Norris.
 3. To turn.
 The potent rod
 Of Amram's son in Egypt's evil day
 Wav'd round the coast, up call'd a pitchy cloud
 Of locusts, warping on the eastern wind,
 That o'er the realm of impious Pharaoh hung Like night. Milton's Paradise Lost.
TO WARP. v. a.
 1. To contract; to shrink.
 2. To turn aside from the true direction.
 This first avow'd, nor folly warp'd my mind;
 Nor the frail texture of the female kind Betray'd my virtue. Dryden.
 Not foreign or domestic treachery
 Could warp thy soul to their unjust decree. Dryden.
 A great argument of the goodness of his cause, which required in its defender zeal, to a degree of warmth able to warp the sacred rule of the word of God. Locke.
 I have no private considerations to warp me in this controversy, since my first entering upon it. Addison.
 Not warp'd by passion, aw'd by rumour,
 Not grave through pride, or gay through folly;
 An equal mixture of good humour,
 And sensible soft melancholy. Swift.
 A constant watchfulness against all those prejudices that might warp the judgment aside from truth. Watts.
 3. It is used by Shakespeare to express the effect of frost,
 Freeze, freeze, thou bitter sky,
 Thou dost not bite so nigh
 As benefits forgot:
 Though thou the waters warp,
 Thy sting is not so sharp
 As friends remember'd not. Shak. As you like it.
TO WARRANT. v. n. [garantir, French.]
 1. To support or maintain; to attest.
 She needed not disdain any service, though never so mean, which was warrant'd by the sacred name of father. Sidney.
 He that readeth unto us the Scriptures delivereth all the mysteries of faith, and not any thing amongst them all more than the mouth of the Lord doth warrant. Hooker.
 If this internal light be conformable to the principles of reason, or to the word of God, which is attested revelation, reason warrants it, and we may safely receive it for true. Locke.
 2. To give authority.
 Now we'll together, and the chance of goodness
 Be like our warrant'd quarrel. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
 3. To justify.
 How can any one warrant himself in the use of those things against such suspicions, but in the trust he has in the common honesty and trust of men in general? South.
 True fortitude is seen in great exploits,
 That justice warrants and that wisdom guides;
 All else is tow'ring frenzy and distraction. Addison.
 4. To exempt; to privilege; to secure.
 If my coming, whom, she said, he feared, as soon as he knew me by the armour, had not warrant'd her from that near approaching cruelty. Sidney.
 These thoughts cannot, in this your loneliness, warrant you from suspicion in others, nor defend you from melancholy in yourself. Sidney.
 I'll warrant him from drowning.
 In a place
 Less warrant'd than this, or less secure,
 I cannot be, that I should fear to change it. Milton.
 5. To declare upon surety.
 What a galled neck have we here! Look ye, mine's as smooth as silk, I warrant ye. L'Estrange.
 The Moor's king
 Is safe enough, I warrant him for one. Dryden's Span. Fryar.
WARRANT. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. A writ conferring some right or authority.
 Are you now going to dispatch this deed?
 We are, my lord, and come to have the warrant. Shak. Rich. III.
 That we may be admitted where he is. Shakespeare's As you like it.
 He sent him a warrant for one thousand pounds a year pension for his life. Clarendon.
 2. A writ giving the officer of justice the power of caption.
 There was a dam'd design, cries one, no doubt;
 For warrants are already issued out. Dryden's Juvenal.
 3. A justificatory commission or testimony.
 His promise is our plain warrant, that in his name what we ask we shall receive. Hooker.

WAR

Is this a warrant sufficient for any man's conscience to build such proceedings upon, as have been and are put in use for the establishment of that cause? Hooker.
 The place of Paradise might be seen unto Moses, and unto the prophets which succeeded him; both which I take for my warrant to guide me in this discovery. Raleigh.
 His warrant does the Christian faith defend;
 On that relying, all their quarrels end. Waller.
 The Jewish religion was yet in possession; and therefore, that this might so enter as not to intrude, it was to bring its warrant from the same hand of Omnipotence. South's Sermons.
 4. Right; legality. Obsolete.
 I attach thee
 For an abuser of the world, a practicer
 Of arts inhibited and out of warrant. Shakespeare's Othello.
 Therefore to horse,
 And let us not be dainty of leave-taking,
 But shift away: there's warrant in that theft,
 Which steals itself when there's no mercy left. Shakespeare.
WARRANTABLE. adj. [from warrant.] Justifiable; defensible.
 To purchase a clear and warrantable body of truth, we must forget and part with much we know. Brown.
 His meals are coarse and short, his employment warrantable, his sleep certain and refreshing. South.
 If I can mend my condition by any warrantable industry, the way is fair and open; and that's a privilege every reasonable creature has in his commission. L'Estrange.
WARRANTABLENESS. n. f. [from warrantable.] Justifiableness.
 By the foil thereof you may see the nobleness of my desire to you, and the warrantableness of your favour to me. Sidney.
WARRANTABLY. adv. [from warrantable.] Justifiably.
 The faith which God requires is only this, that he will certainly reward all those that believe in him, and obey his commandments; but for the particular application of this faith to ourselves, that deserves no more of our assent, nor can indeed warrantably have it, than what is founded upon the serious consideration of our own performances. Watts.
WARRANTER. n. f. [from warrant.]
 1. One who gives authority.
 2. One who gives security.
WARRANTISE. n. f. [warrantis, law Latin; from warrant.] Authority; security.
 There's none protector of the realm but I:
 Break up the gates, I'll be your warrantise. Shakespeare's H. VI.
WARRANTY. n. f. [warrantia, law Latin; guarantee, guarant, French.]
 1. [In the common law.] A promise made in a deed by one man unto another for himself and his heirs, to secure him and his heirs against all men, for the enjoying of any thing agreed of between them. Cowell.
 2. Authority; justificatory mandate.
 Her obsequies have been so far enlarg'd
 As we have warranty: her death was doubtful;
 And but that great command o'erthrews the order,
 She should in ground unsanctify'd have lodg'd
 Till the last trumpet. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
 In the use of those epithets we have the warranty and consent of all the churches, since they ever had a liturgy. Taylor.
 3. Security.
 Every one cannot distinguish between fine and mixed silver: those who have had the care and government of politick societies, introduced coinage as a remedy: the stamp was a warranty of the publick, that under such a denomination they should receive a piece of such a weight and fineness. Locke.
TO WARRA'Y. v. a. [from war.] To make war upon.
 But Ebranc salved both their infancies
 With noble deeds, and warra'yed on Brunchild
 In Hainault, where yet of his victories
 Brave monuments remain, which yet that land envys. F. 2.
 Of these a mighty people shortly grew,
 And puissant kings, which all the world warra'id,
 And to themselves all nations did subdue. Fairy Queen.
 This continual, cruel, civil war,
 The which myself against myself do make,
 Whilst my weak powers of passions warra'id are,
 No skill can stint, nor reason can assuage. Spenser.
 Six years were run since first in martial guise
 The Christian lords warra'id the eastern land. Fairfax.
WARRE. adj. [weapp, Saxon.] Worse. Obsolete.
 They say the world is warre than it wont,
 All for her shepherds is beastly and bloont:
 Others saie, but how truly I note,
 All for they holden shame of their cote. Spenser's Poet.
WARREN. n. f. [waerande, Dutch; guerre, French.] A kind of park for rabbits.
 I found him here, as melancholy as a lodge in a warren. Shakespeare's Much Ado about Nothing.
 The coney convenes a whole warren, tells her story, and advises upon a revenge. L'Estrange.
 Men

WARRIOR. n. f. [from war.] A soldier; a military man.

I came from Cerinth,
Brought to this town by that most famous warrior,
Duke Menaphon. Shakefp. Comedy of Errors.
Fierce fiery warriors fight upon the clouds,
In ranks and squadrons and right form of war,
Which drizzled blood upon the Capitol. Shakefp. Jul. Cæs.
I sing the warrior and his mighty deeds. Lauderdale.
The warrior horses ty'd in order fed. Dryden's En.

The mute walls relate the warrior's fame,
And Trojan chiefs the Tyrians pity claim. Dryden's En.
Camilla led her troops, a warrior dame;
Unbred to spinning, in the loom unskill'd,
She chose the nobler Pallas of the field. Dryden's En.

WART. n. f. [peave, Saxon; warte, Dutch.] A cornuous excrescence; a small protuberance on the flesh.

If thou prate of mountains, let them throw
Millions of acres on us; till our ground,
Singing his pate against the burning fun,
Make Ossa like a wart. Shak. Hamlet.

In old statues of stone, which have been put in cellars, the feet of them being bound with leaden bands, there it appeared the lead did swell, inasmuch as it hanged upon the stone like warts. Bacon's Natural History.

Like vile stones lying in saffron'd tin,
Or warts, or weals, it hangs upon her skin. Donne.
In painting, the warts and moles, adding a likeness to the face, are not to be omitted. Dryden's Daphney.
He is taken with those warts and moles, and hard features, by those who represent him on the stage, or he is no more Achilles. Dryden.

Malpighi, in his treatise of galls, under which he comprehends all preternatural and morbose tumours of plants, doth demonstrate that all such warts, tumours and excrescences, where any insects are found, are excited or raised up by some venenose liquors, which with their eggs such insects shed; or boring with their terebræ, insil into the very pulp of such buds. Ray on the Creation.

WARTWORT. n. f. [wart and wort.] Spurge.
WARTY. adj. [from wart.] Grown over with warts.

WARWORN. adj. [war and worn.] Worn with war.

Presented them unto the gazing moon
So many horrid ghosts. Shakefp. Henry V.

WARV. adj. [peep, Saxon.] Cautious; scrupulous; timorously prudent.
He is above, and we upon earth; and therefore it behooveth our words to be wary and few. Hooker.

Leontius, their bishop, although an enemy to the better part, yet wary and subtle, as all the heads of the Arrians faction were, could at no time be plainly heard to use either term. Hooker.

Good cause he had to hasten thence away;
For on a day his wary dwarf had spy'd,
Where in a dungeon deep huge numbers lay,
Of captive wretched thralls that wailed night and day. F. 2.
Each thing feigned ought more wary be. Hubb. Tale.

Each warns a warrior carriage in the thing,
Left blind presumption work their ruining. Daniel.
Others grow wary in their praises of one, who sets too great a value on them, lest they should raise him too high in his own imagination. Addison's Spectator.

I look'd toward Birnam, and anon methought
The wood began to move. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
8. A period of the night.
Your fair daughter,
At this odd, even, and dull watch o' th' night,
Is now transported with a gondaler,
To the grofs claps of a lascivious Moor. Shakespeare. Othello.
All night he will pursue; but his approach
Darkness defends between, till morning watch. Milton.
The latter watch of wafting night,
And setting stars, to kindly sleep invite. Dryden's En.
9. A pocket-clock; a small clock moved by a spring.
A watch, besides the hour of the day, gives the day of the month, and the place of the sun in the zodiac. Hale.
On the theatre we are confined to time; and though we talk not by the hour-glass, yet the watch often drawn out of the pocket warns the actors that their audience is weary. Dryden.
That Cloe may be serv'd in state,
The hours must at her toilet stand;
Whilst all the reasoning fools below
Wonder their watches go so slow. Prior.
To WATCH. v. n. [pacific, Saxon.]
1. Not to sleep; to wake.
I have two nights watch'd with you; but can perceive no truth in your report. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
Watching care will not let a man slumber, as a fore disease breaketh sleep. Ecclus xxxi. 2.
2. To keep guard.
Sleep, lifting thee, will watch. Milton.
I will watch over them for evil, and not for good. Jer. xlv.
In our watching we have watched for a nation that could not save us. Lam. iv. 17.
He gave signal to the minister that watch'd. Milton.
3. To look with expectation.
My soul waiteth for the Lord, more than they that watch for the morning. Pf. cxxx. 6.

gent observation.
The experience of our own frailties, and the consideration of the watchfulness of the temper, discourage us. Hammond.
Love, fantastick pow'r! that is afraid
To stir abroad 'till watchfulness be laid;
Undaunted then o'er cliffs and valleys frays,
And leads his votaries safe through pathless ways. Prior.
Husbands are counselled not to trust too much to their wives owning the doctrine of unlimited conjugal fidelity, and to neglect a due watchfulness over their manners. Arbutnot.
Prejudices are cured by a constant jealousy and watchfulness over our passions, that they may never interpose when we are called to pass a judgment. Watts.
By a solicitous watchfulness about one's behaviour, instead of being mended, it will be constrained. Locke.
2. Inability to sleep.
Watchfulness, sometimes called a coma vigil, often precedes too great sleepiness. Arbutnot on Diet.
WATCHHOUSE. n. s. [watch and house.] Place where the watch is set.
Where statues breath'd, the works of Phidias' hands,

And singing startle the dull night
From his watchtower in the skies,
Till the dappled dawn doth rise. Milton.
The senses in the head, as sentinels in a watchtower, convey to the soul the impressions of external objects. Roy.
WATCHWORD. n. s. [watch and word.] The word given to the sentinels to know their friends.
All have their ears upright, waiting when the watchword shall come, that they should all arise into rebellion. Spenser.
We have heard the chimes at midnight, master Shallow.
—That we have, sir John: our watchwords, hem, boys. Shakespeare.
A watchword every minute of the night goeth about the walls, to testify their vigilancy. Saunders.
WATER. n. s. [water, Dutch; wæter, Saxon.]
1. Sir Isaac Newton defines water, when pure, to be a very fluid salt, volatile, and void of all flavour or taste; and it seems to consist of small, smooth, hard, porous, spherical particles, of equal diameters, and of equal specific gravities, as Dr.
Cheyne observes; and also that there are between them spaces so large, and ranged in such a manner, as to be pervious on all sides. Their smoothness accounts for their sliding easily all over one another's surfaces: their sphericity keeps them all from touching one another in more points than one; and by both these their frictions in sliding over one another, is rendered the least possible. Their hardness accounts for the in-compressibility of water, when it is free from the intermixture of air. The porosity of water is so very great, that there is at least forty times as much space as matter in it; for water is nineteen times specifically lighter than gold, and consequently rarer in the same proportion. Quincy.

W A T

My mildness hath allay'd their swelling griefs,
My mercy dry'd their water-flowing tears. Shakespeare. H. VI.
Your water is a fore decay of your whorlous dead body. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
The sweet manner of it forc'd
Those waters from me, which I would have stopp'd,
But I had not so much of man in me;
But all my mother came into mine eyes,
And gave me up to tears. Shakespeare. Henry V.
Men's evil manners live in brats, their virtues
We write in water. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.
Those healths will make thee and thy state look ill, Timon:
here's that which is too weak to be a finner, honest water, which ne'er left man i' th' mire. Shakespeare's Timon.
Water is the chief ingredient in all the animal fluids and solids; for a dry bone, distilled, affords a great quantity of in-spid water: therefore water seems to be proper drink for every animal. Arbutnot on Aliments.
2. The sea.
Travel by land or by water. Common Prayer.
By water they found the sea, westward from Peru, always very calm. Abbot's Description of the World.
3. Urine.
If thou could'st, doctor, cast
The water of my land, find her disease,
And purge it to a found and pristine health,
I would applaud thee. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
Go to bed, after you have made water. Swift.
4. To let WATER. To be found; to be tight. From a vessel that will not leak.
A good Christian and an honest man must be all of a piece, and inequalities of proceeding will never hold water. L'Estr.
5. It is used for the lustre of a diamond.
'Tis a good form,
And rich: here is a water, look ye. Shakespeare. Timon.
6. WATER is much used in composition for things made with water, being in water, or growing in water.
She might see the same water-spaniel, which before had hunted, come and fetch away one of Philoclea's gloves, whose fine proportion shew'd well what a dainty guest was wont there to be lodged. Sidney.
Oh that I were a mockery king of snows,
Standing before the sun of Bolingbroke,
And melt myself away in water-drops. Shakespeare.
Poor Tom cats the wall-newt, and the water-newt. Shakespeare.
Touch me with noble anger!
O let not women's weapons, water-drops,
Stain my man's cheeks. Shakespeare. King Lear.
Let not the water-flood overflow me. Pf. lxxix. 15.
They shall spring up as among the grass, as willows by the water-courses. Pf. xlv. 4.
As the hart panteth after the water-brook, so panteth my soul after thee, O God. Psalms.
Deep calleth unto deep, at the noise of thy water-spouts. Pf. xlii. 7.
He turneth rivers into a wilderness, and the water-springs into dry ground. Pf. evii. 33.
There were set six water-pots of stone. Jo. ii. 6.
Hercules's page, Hylas, went with a water-pot to fill it at a pleasant fountain that was near. Bacon's Natural History.
As the carp is accounted the water-fox for his cunning, so the roach is accounted the water sheep. Walton's Angler.
Sea-calves unwonted to fresh rivers fly;
The water-snakes with scales upstanding die. Mary's Virgil.
By making the water-wheels larger, the motion will be so slow, that the screw will not be able to supply the outward streams. Wilkins's Dædalus.
Rain carried away apples, together with a dunghill that lay in the water-course. L'Estrange.
Oh help, in this extremest need,
If water-gods are deities indeed. Dryden.
The water-snake, whom fish and paddocks feed,
With stirring scales lies poison'd in his bed. Dryden. Virgil.
Because the outermost coat of the eye might be pick'd, and this humour let out, therefore nature hath made provision to repair it by the help of certain water-pipes, or lymphducts, inserted into the bulb of the eye, proceeding from glandules that separate this water from the blood. Roy on the Creation.
The lacerta aquatica, or water-newt, when young, hath four near ramified fins, two on one side, growing out a little above its forelegs, to poise and keep its body upright, which fall off when the legs are grown. Dehaen's Physico-Theology.
Other mortar used in making water-courses, cisterns, and fishponds, is very hard and durable. Moxon.
The most brittle water-carriage was used among the Egyptians, who, as Strabo saith, would fall sometimes in boats made of earthen ware. Arbutnot.
A gentleman watered St. foyn in dry weather at new sowing, and when it came up, with a water-cart, carrying his water in a cask, to which there was a tap at the end, which lets the water run into a long trough full of small holes. Mort.
In Hampshire they sell water-trefoil as dear as hops. Mort.

To WATER. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To irrigate; to supply with moisture.
A river went out of Eden to water the garden. Gen. ii. 10.
A man's nature runs to herbs or weeds; therefore let him seasonably water the one, and destroy the other. Bacon.
Chaste moral writing we may learn from hence,
Neglect of which no wit can recompense;
The fountain which from Helicon proceeds,
That sacred stream, should never water weeds. Waller.
Could tears water the lovely plant, so as to make it grow again after once 'tis cut down, your friends would be so far from accusing your passion, that they would encourage it, and share it. Temple.
You may water the lower land when you will. Montimer.
2. To supply with water for drink.
Now 'gan the golden Phœbus for to sleep
His fiery face in billows of the west;
And his faint steeds water'd in ocean deep,
Whilst from their journal labours they did rest. Fa. Quæst.
Doth not each on the sabbath loose his ox from the stall, and lead him away to watering? Lu. xiii. 15.
His horsemen kept them in so strait, that no man could,
without great danger, go to water his horse. Knolles.
Water him, and, drinking what he can,
Encourage him to thirst again with bran. Dryden.
3. To fertilize or accommodate with streams.
Mountains, that run from one extremity of Italy to the other, give rise to an incredible variety of rivers that water
it. Addison on Italy.

The different ranging the superficial parts of velvet and watered silk, does the like. Locke.
To WATER. v. n.
1. To shed moisture.
I rain'd this napkin with the blood;
That valiant Clifford with his rapier's point
Made issue from the bosom of the boy;
And if thine eyes can water for his death,
I give thee this to dry thy cheeks withal. Shakespeare. Henry VI.
Mine eyes,
Seeing those beads of sorrow stand in thine, Began to water. Shakespeare. Julius Caesar.
The tickling of the nostrils within, doth draw the moisture to the nostrils, and to the eyes by consent; for they also will water. Bacon's Natural History.
How troublesome is the least mote, or dust falling into the eye! and how quickly does it weep, and water upon the least grievance! South's Sermons.
2. To get or take in water; to be used in supplying water.
He set the rods he had pulled before the flocks in the gutters in the watering troughs. Gen. xxx. 38.
Mahomet sent many small boats, manned with harquebusiers and small ordnance, into the lake near unto the camp, to keep the Christians from watering there. Knolles.
3. The mouth WATERS. The man longs; there is a vehement desire. From dogs who drop their slaver when they see meat which they cannot get.
Cardinal Wolsey's teeth watering at the bishoprick of Winchester, sent one unto bishop Fox, who had advanced him, for to move him to resign the bishoprick, because extreme age had made him blind; which motion Fox did take in so ill part, that he willed the messenger to tell the cardinal, that, although now I am blind, I have espied his malicious unthankfulness.
Cumden's Remains.
These reasons made his mouth to water,
With amorous longings to be at her. Hudibras.
Those who contend for 4 per cent. have set men's mouths
a-watering for money at that rate. Locke.
WATERCOLOURS. n. s. [water and colour.]
Painters make colours into a soft consistence with water or oil; those they call watercolours, and these they term oil-colours. Boyle on Colours.
Lest should I dawb it o'er with transitory praise,
And watercolours of these days:
These days! where e'en th' extravagance of poetry
Is at a loss for figures to express
Men's folly, whimsies, and inconstancy. Swift.
WATERCRESS. n. s. [from water, Latin.] A plant.
It hath a flower composed of four leaves, which are placed in form of a cross, out of whose empalement rises the pointal, which afterward becomes a fruit or pod, which is divided into two cells by an intermediate partition, to which the valves adhere on both sides, and furnished with seeds which are round-ish. To these marks must be added, that the whole appearance of the plant is peculiar to the species of this genus. There are five species. Miller.
The nymphs of floods are made very beautiful; upon their heads are garlands of watercresses. Peacocks on Drawing.
WATERER. n. s. [from water.] One who waters.
This ill weed, rather cut off by the ground than plucked up by the root, twice or thrice grew forth again; but yet, maugre the warmers and waterers, hath been ever parched up. Carw.
WATERFAL.

WAT

- WATERFALL. n. f. [water and fall.] Cataract; cascade.
I have seen in the Indies far greater waterfalls than those of Nilus. Raleigh.
Not Lacedaemon charms me more,
Than high Albana's airy walls,
Reclounding with her waterfalls. Addison.
- WATERFOWL. n. f. Fowl that live, or get their food in water.
Waterfowl joy most in that air, which is likest water. Bacon.
Waterfowl supply the weariness of a long flight by taking water, and numbers of them are found in islands, and in the main ocean. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
Fish and waterfowl, who feed of turbid and muddy slimy water, are accounted the cause of phlegm. Floyer.
The stomachs of waterfowl that live upon fish, are human. Arbutnot on Aliments.
- WATERGRUEL. n. f. [water and gruel.] Food made with oatmeal and water.
For breakfast milk, milk-pottage, watergruel, and flummery, are very fit to make for children. Locke.
The aliment ought to be slender, as watergruel acidulated. Arbutnot on Diet.
- WATERINESS. n. f. [from watery.] Humidity; moisture.
The forerunners of an apoplexy are dulness, night-mares, weakness, wateriness, and turgidity of the eyes. Arbutnot.
- WATERISH. adj. [from water.]
1. Resembling water.
Where the principles are only phlegm, what can be expected from the waterish matter, but an insipid manhood, and a stupid old infancy? Dryden.
2. Moist; insipid.
Some parts of the earth grow moorish or waterish, others dry. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
- WATERISHNESS. n. f. [from waterish.] Thinness; remembrance of water.
A pendulous limbliness answers a pituitous state, or an acerbity, which resembles the tartar of our humours, or waterishness, which is like the ferocity of our blood. Floyer.
- WATERLEAF. n. f. A plant. It hath a bell-shaped flower, consisting of one leaf, and cut into several segments: from the bottom part of the flower arises the pistil, which afterwards becomes a fruit, opening in two parts, inclosing seeds of the same shape as the vessel. Miller.
- WATERLILLY. n. f. [nymphaea, Lat.] A plant. The characters are; the flower consists of several leaves, which expand in form of a rose; out of the flower cup arises the pistil, which afterwards becomes an almost globular fruit, consisting of many cells, filled with seeds, which are for the most part oblong. Miller.
Let them lie dry twelve months, to kill the water-weeds, as waterlilies and bull-rushes. Walton's Angler.
- WATERMAN. n. f. [water and man.] A ferryman; a boatman.
Having blocked up the passage to Greenwich, they ordered the watermen to let fall their oars more gently. Dryden.
Bubbles of air working upward from the very bottom of the lake, the watermen told us that they are observed always to rise in the same places. Addison in Italy.
The waterman forlorn, along the shores,
Pensive reclines upon his useless oar. Gay.
- WATERMARK. n. f. [water and mark.] The utmost limit of the rise of the flood.
Men and beafts
Were borne above the tops of trees that grew
On th' utmost margin of the watermark. Dryden.
- WATERMELON. n. f. A plant. It hath trailing branches, as the cucumber or melon, and is distinguished from other cucurbitaceous plants, by its leaf deeply cut and jagged, and by its producing uneatable fruit. Miller.
- WATERMILL. n. f. Mill turned by water.
Forth flowed fresh
A gushing river of black gory blood,
That drowned all the land whereon he stood:
The stream thereof would drive a watermill. Fairy Queen.
The picture may be set forth with farm houses and watermills. Peasam on Drawing.
Corn ground by windmills, erected on hills, or in the plains where the watermills stood. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- WATERMINT. n. f. A plant.
- WATERRADISH. n. f. A species of water-creffes, which see.
- WATERRAT. n. f. A rat that makes holes in banks.
There be land-rats and water-rats. Shakespeare.
The pike is bold, and lies near the top of the water, watching the motion of any frog, or water-rat, or mouse. Walton.
- WATERROCKET. n. f. A species of water-creffes.
- WATERVIOLET. n. f. [bottonia, Lat.] A plant. It hath a rose-shaped flower, consisting of one leaf, which is divided into two parts, almost to the bottom: in the center of the flower arises the pistil, which afterwards becomes a cylindrical fruit, in which are contained spherical seeds. Miller.

WAV

- WATERSAPPHIRE. n. f. A sort of stone.
Watersapphire is the occidental sapphire, and is, neither of so bright a blue, nor so hard as the oriental. Woodward.
- WATERWITH. n. f. [water and with.] A plant.
The waterwith of Jamaica growing on dry hills, in the woods, where no water is to be met with, its trunk, if cut into pieces two or three yards long, and held by either end to the mouth, affords so plentifully a limpid, innocent, and refreshing water, or sap, as gives new life to the drouthy traveller or hunter. Derham's Physico-Theology.
- WATERWORK. n. f. [water and work.] Play of fountains; artificial spouts of water; any hydraulick performance.
Engines invented for mines and waterworks often fail in the performance. Wilkins's Math. Magic.
The French took from the Italians the first plans of their gardens, as well as waterworks. Addison.
- WATERY. adj. [from water.]
1. Thin; liquid; like water.
Quicksilver, which is a most crude, and watery body, heated, and pent in, hath the like force with gunpowder. Bacon.
The bile, by its saponaceous quality, mixeth the oily and watery parts of the aliment together. Arbutnot on Aliments.
2. Tattles; insipid; vapid; spiritless.
We'll use this unwholesome humidity, this gross, watery pumpion. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
No heterogeneous mixture use, as some
With watry turneps have debas'd their wines. Philips.
3. Wet; abounding with water.
When the big lip, and wat'ry eye
Tell me, the rising storm is nigh:
'Tis then thou art yon angry main,
Deform'd by winds, and dash'd by rain. Prior.
4. Relating to the water.
On the brims her fire, the wat'ry god,
Roll'd from a silver urn his crystal flood. Dryden.
5. Consisting of water.
The wat'ry kingdom is no bar
To stop the foreign spirits; but they come,
As o'er a brook, to see fair Portia. Shakespeare.
Those few escap'd
Famine, and anguish, will at last consume, Wand'ring that wat'ry desert. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.
Betwixt us and you wide oceans flow,
And wat'ry deserts. Dryden's Indian Emperor.
Together to the wat'ry camp they haste. Dryden.
Perhaps you'll say,
That the attract'd wat'ry vapours rise
From lakes and seas, and fill the lower skies. Blackmore.
- WATTL. n. f. [from waghen, to shake, German. Skinner.]
1. The barbs, or loose red flesh that hangs below the cock's bill.
The loach is of the shape of an eel, and has a beard of wattels like a barbel. Walton.
The barbel is so called, by reason of his barb, or wattle, at his mouth, which is under his nose or chops. Walton.
His comb and wattels are an ornament becoming his martial spirit. Moré's Antidote against Atheism.
2. A hurdle.
- TO WATTLE. v. a. [parcelas, Saxon; twigs.] To bind with twigs; to form, by plating twigs one within another.
Might we but hear
The folded flocks penn'd in their wattled cotes,
Or found of pastoral reed with oaten stops. Milton.
A plough was found in a very deep bog, and a hedge wattled standing. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- WAVE. n. f. [pæge, Saxon; waegh, Dutch; vagus, French.]
1. Water raised above the level of the surface; billow; water driven into inequalities.
The shore, that o'er his wave-worn basis bow'd. Shakespeare.
The waves that rise would drown the highest hill;
But at thy check they flee, and when they hear
Thy thund'ring voice, they post to do thy will.
Amidst these toils succeeds the balmy night;
Now hissing waters the quench'd guns restore;
And weary waves withdrawing from the fight,
Are lull'd, and pant upon the silent shore. Dryden.
The wave behind impels the wave before.
Luxuriant on the wave-worn bank he lay Stretch'd forth, and panting in the sunny ray. Pope.
2. Unevenness; inequality.
Thus it happens, if the glass of the primas be free from veins, and their sides be accurately plane and well polished, without those numberless waves, or curls, which usually arise from sand-holes a little smoothened in polishing with putty. Newton.
- TO WAVE. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To play loosely; to float.
I may find
Your warlike enlists waving in the wind. Dryden.
Meliäpus' helms
He laces on, and wears the waving crest. Dryden.

WAW

2. To be moved as a signal.
A bloody arm it is, that holds a pine Lighted, above the capitol, and now
It waves unto us. B. Johnson's Catiline.
3. To be in an unsettled state; to fluctuate.
They wave in and out, no way sufficiently grounded, no way resolved, what to think, speak, or write, more than only that because they have taken it upon them, they must be opposite. Hooker, b. v.
If he did not care whether he had their love or no, he wav'd indifferently 'twixt doing them neither good nor harm. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
- TO WAVE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To raise into inequalities of surface.
He had a thousand noses,
Horns welk'd and wav'd like the enridged sea. Shakespeare.
2. To move loosely.
They wav'd their fiery swords, and in the air
Made horrid circles
Æneas wav'd his fatal sword. Milton.
High o'er his head,
He beckoned to me, and, by the waving of his hand, directed me to approach the place where he sat. Addison.
3. To wait; to remove any thing floating.
Some men never conceive how the motion of the earth below should wave one from a knock perpendicularly directed from a body in the air above. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
4. To beckon; to direct by a waft or motion of any thing.
Look with what courteous action
It waves you to a more removed ground:
But do not go with it. Shakespeare.
5. [Guefer, Fr. Skinner.] To put off.
He resolved not to wave his way upon this reason, that if he should but once, by such a diversion, make his enemy believe he were afraid of danger, he should never live without. Watton's Life of the Duke of Buckingham.
These, waving plots, found out a better way;
Some god descended, and prefer'd the play. Dryden.
6. To put aside for the present.
I have wav'd the subject of your greatness, to resign myself to the contemplation of what is more peculiarly yours. Dryden.
Since the her interest for the nation's wav'd,
Then I who fav'd the king, the nation fav'd. Dryden.
- TO WAVE. v. n. [papian, Saxon.]
1. To play to and fro; to move loosely.
I took two triangular glasses, and one of them being kept fixt in the same posture, that the Iris it projected on the floor might not wave, I cast on the same floor another Iris, with another prism, moving it to and fro. Boyle.
The whitening shower descends,
At first then wavering. Thomson's Winter.
2. To be unsettled; to be uncertain, or inconstant; to fluctuate; not to be determined.
In which amazement, when the miscreant
Perceived him to waver, weak and frail,
Whilst trembling horror did his conscience daunt,
And hellish anguish did his soul assail. Fairy Queen.
Remember where we are;
In France, among a fickle, wavering nation. Shakespeare.
Thou almost mak'st me waver in my faith,
To hold opinion with Pythagoras,
That souls of animals infuse themselves
Into the trunks of men. Shakespeare.
Hold fast the faith without wavering. Heb. x.
The wav'ring faith of people vain and light. Daniel.
Faith as absolutely determines our minds, and as perfectly excludes all wavering, as our knowledge itself; and we may as well doubt of our own being, as we can, whether any revelation from God be true. Locke.
What if Hospinian should have said, that Luther wav'd in the point of the sacrament? does it follow that he really did so? Atterbury.
They, who at this distance from the first rise of the gospel, after weighing the several evidences of it, waver in their faith, would have wav'd, though they had seen the first promulgers work wonders. Atterbury.
- WAVE. n. f. [from waver.] One unsettled and irresolute.
Come, young waverer, come, and go with me;
In one respect I'll thy affiant be. Shakespeare.
- WAVY. adj. [from wave.]
1. Rising in waves.
For thee the ocean smiles, and smooths her wavy breast;
And heav'n itself with more serene and purer light is blest. Dryden.
2. Playing to and fro, as in undulations.
Where full-ear'd sheaves of rye
Grow wavy on the tilth, that soil select For apples. Philips.
Let her glad valleys smile with wavy corn;
Let fecy flocks her rising hills adorn. Prior.
- WAVES, or waes. n. f. A word used by Spenser, according to the Saxon pronunciation.

WAY

1. For waves.
Another did the dying brands repair
With iron tongs, and sprinkled off the fame
With liquid waes. Fairy Queen.
2. In the following passage it seems to be for woes [pa, Saxon.]
Whilst they fly that gulf's devouring jaws,
They on this rock are rent, and sunk in helpless waes. Spenser.
- TO WAWL. v. n. [pa, grief, Saxon.] To cry; to howl.
The first time that we smell the air,
We wawle and cry. Shakespeare's K. Lear.
- WAX. n. f. [pæxe, Saxon; wex, Danish; wacks, Dutch.]
1. The thick tenacious matter gathered by the bee, and formed into cells for the reception of the honey.
Wax consists of an acid spirit, of a nauseous taste, and an oil or butter, which is emollient, laxative, and anodyne. Arb.
They give us food which may with nectar vie,
And wax, that does the absent sun supply. Roscommon.
All the magistrates, every new or full moon, give honour to Confucius with bowings, wax candles, and incense. Stillin.
While visits shall be paid on solemn days,
When num'rous wax lights in bright order blaze;
So long my honour, name, and praise shall live. Pope.
2. Any tenacious mass, such as is used to fasten letters.
We often the wax, before we set on the seal. Moré.
3. A kind of concretion in the flesh.
A fontanel in her neck was much inflamed, and many wax-kernels about it. Wifeman's Surgery.
- TO WAX. v. a. [from the noun.] To smear; to join with wax.
He form'd the reeds, proportion'd as they are;
Unequal in their length, and wax'd with care,
They still retain the name of his ungrateful fair. Dryden.
- TO WAX. v. n. pret. wax, waxed, part. pass. waxed, waxen. [pæxan, Saxon; wachsen, German.]
1. To grow; to increase; to become bigger, or more. Used of the moon, in opposition to wane, and figuratively of things which grow by turns bigger and less.
The husbandman in sowing and setting, upon good reason, observes the waxing and waning of the moon. Hakewill.
Land and trade are twins, they wax and wane together. Child.
2. To pass into any state; to become; to grow. It is in either sense now almost diffused.
Where things have been instituted, which being convenient and good at the first, do afterward in process of time wax otherwise, we make no doubt but they may be altered, yea, though councils or customs general have received them. Hooker.
Careless the man soon wax, and his wit weak
Was overcome of things that did him please. Fairy Queen.
Art thou like the adder waxen deaf?
We will destroy this place; because the cry of them is waxen great before the Lord. Gen. xix. 13.
Flowers removed wax greater, because the nourishment is more easily come by in the loose earth. Bacon.
This answer given, Argantes wild drew near,
Trembling for ire, and waxing pale for rage;
Nor could he hold. Fairfax, b. ii.
If I wax but cold in my desire,
Think heav'n hath motion lost, and the world fire. Donne.
Their manners wax more and more corrupt, in proportion as their blessings abound. Atterbury.
- WAXEN. n. f. [from wax.] Made of wax.
Swarming next appear'd
The female bee, that feeds her husband drone
Deliciously, and builds her waxen cells
With honey stor'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.
I can yet shoot beams, whose heat can melt
The waxen wings of this ambitious boy. Denham.
So weary bees in little cells repose;
But if night-robbers lift the well-stor'd hive,
An humming through their waxen city grows,
And out upon each other's wings they drive. Dryden.
Others with sweets the waxen cells defend. Gay.
- WAY. n. f. [pæz, Saxon; weigh, Dutch.]
1. The road in which one travels.
I am amaz'd, and lose my way,
Among the thorns and dangers of this world. Shakespeare.
You cannot see your way.
—I have no way, and therefore want no eyes:
I stumbled when I saw.
To God's eternal house direct the way,
A broad and ample road. Milton.
Flutt'ring the god, and weeping laid,
Pity poor Cupid, generous maid!
Who happen'd, being blind, to stray,
And on thy bosom lost his way. Prior.
Know'st thou the way to Dover?—
—Both stile and gate, horse-way, and foot-path. Shakespeare.
3. A length of journey.
An old man that had travelled a great way under a huge burden, found himself so weary, that he called upon death to deliver him. L'Estrange.
4. Courte

WAY

2. Course; direction of motion.
I now go toward him, therefore follow me.
And mark what way I make. Shakef. Winter Tale.
He stood in the gate, and ask'd of ev'ry one,
Which way she took, and whither she was gone. Dryden.
Attending long in vain, I took the way,
Which through a path, but scarcely printed, lay. Dryden.
With downward force he took his way,
And roll'd his yellow billows to the sea. Dryden.
My seven brave brothers, in one fatal day,
To death's dark mansions took the mournful way. Dryden.
To observe every the least difference that is in things, keeps the understanding steady and right in its way to knowledge. Locke.
5. Advance in life.
The boy was to know his father's circumstances, and that he was to make his way by his own industry. Spektator, N° 123.
6. Passage; power of progression made or given.
Back do I to these treasours to thy head:
This sword of mine shall give them instant way,
Where they shall rest for ever. Shakef. K. Lear.
Th' angelick choirs,
On each hand parting, to his speed gave way,
Through all th' empyreal road. Milton's Par. Lost, b. v.
Youth and vain confidence thy life betray:
Through armies this has made Melantius' way. Waller.
The reason may be, that men seldom come into those posts, till after forty; about which time the natural heat beginning to decay, makes way for those distempers. Temple.
The air could not readily get out of those prisons, but by degrees, as the earth and water above would give way. Burnet.
As a soldier, foremost in the fight,
Makes way for others. Dryden.
Some make themselves way, and are suggested to the mind
by all the ways of sensation and reflection. Locke.
7. Vacancy made by timorous or respectful recession.
There would be left no difference between truth and falsehood, if what we certainly know, give way to what we may possibly be mistaken in. Locke.
Nor was he satisfy'd, unless he made the pure profession of the gospel give way to superstition and idolatry, wherever he had power to expel the one, and establish the other. Atterbury.
I would give way to others, who might argue very well upon the same subject. Swift.
8. Local tendency.
Come a little nearer this way,
I warrant thee no body hears. Shakef. Mer. Wives of Wind.
9. Course; regular progression.
But give me leave to seize my destin'd prey,
And let eternal justice take the way. Dryden.
10. Situation where a thing may probably be found.
These inquiries are never without baseness, and very often useless to the curious inquirer. For men stand upon their guards against them, laying all their counsels and secrets out of their way. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
11. A situation or course obstructive and obviating.
The imagination being naturally tumultuous, interposeth itself without asking leave, casting thoughts in our way, and forcing the understanding to reflect upon them. Duffa.
12. Tendency to any meaning, or act.
There is nothing in the words that sounds that way, or points particularly at perfection. Atterbury.
13. Accels; means of admittance.
Being once at liberty, 'twas said, having made my way with some foreign prince, I would turn pirate. Raleigh.
14. Sphere of observation.
The general officers, and the public ministers that fell in my way, were generally subject to the gout. Temple.
15. Means; mediate instrument; intermediate step.
By noble ways we conquest will prepare;
First offer peace, and that refus'd, make war. Dryden.
What conceivable ways are there, whereby we should come to be assured that there is such a being as God? Tillotson.
A child his mother so well instructed this way in geography, that he knew the limits of the four parts of the world. Locke.
It is not impossible to God to make a creature with more ways to convey into the understanding the notice of corporeal things, than those five he has given to man. Locke.
16. Method; scheme of management.
He durst not take open way against them, and as hard it was to take a secret, they being so continually followed by the best, and every way able of that region. Sidney, b. ii.
Will not my yielded crown redeem my breath?
Still am I fear'd? is there no way but death? Daniel.
As by calling evil good, a man is misrepresented to himself in the way of flattery; so by calling good evil, he is misrepresented to others, in the way of slander. South's Sermons.
Now what impious ways my wishes took?
How they the monarch, and the man forsook? Prior.
The senate, forced to yield to the tribunes of the people, thought it their wisest course to give way also to the time. Swift.

WAY

17. Private determination.
He was of an high mind, and loved his own will and his way,
as one that revered himself, and would reign indeed. Bacon.
If I had my way,
He had mew'd in flames at home, not i' th' senate;
I had sing'd his furs by this time. B. Johnson's Catiline.
18. Manner; mode.
She with a calm carelessness let every thing slide, as we do by their speeches, who neither in matter nor person do any way belong unto us. Stanes.
God hath so many times and ways spoken to men. Hooker.
Few writers make an extraordinary figure, who have not something in their way of thinking or expressing, that is entirely their own. Spektator, N° 160.
His way of expressing and applying them, not his invention of them, is what we admire. Addison.
19. Method; manner of practice.
Having lost the way of nobleness, he strove to climb to the height of terribleness. Sidney.
Matter of mirth,
She could devise, and thousand ways invent,
To feed her foolish humour, and vain jolliment. Spenser.
Taught
To live th' easiest way, not with perplexing thoughts. Milton.
20. Method or plan of life, conduct, or action.
A physician, unacquainted with your body, may put you in a way for a present cure, but overthroweth your health in some other kind. Bacon.
To attain
The height and depth of thy eternal way,
All human thought comes short. Milton.
When a man sees the prodigious expanse our forefathers have been at in these barbarous buildings, one cannot but fancy what miracles they would have left us, had they only been instructed in the right way. Addison on Italy.
21. Right method to act or know.
We are quite out of the way, when we think that things contain within themselves the qualities that appear to us in them. L.
They are more in danger to go out of the way, who are marching under the conduct of a guide that will mislead them, than he that has not yet taken a step, and is likelier to enquire after the right way. Locke.
By me, they offer all that you can ask,
And point an easy way to happiness. Rousseau.
22. General scheme of acting.
Men who go out of the way to hint free things, must be guilty of absurdity, or rudeness. Clarissa.
23. By the way. Without any necessary connection with the main design; en passant.
Note, by the way, that unity of continuance is easier to procure, than unity of species. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Will. Honeycomb, now on the verge of threescore, asked me, in his most serious look, whether I would advise him to marry lady Betty Single, who, by the way, is one of the greatest fortunes about town. Spektator, N° 475.
24. To go or come one's way, or ways; to come along, or depart.
A familiar phrase.
Nay, come your ways;
This is his majesty, say your mind to him. Shakespeare.
To a boy fast asleep upon the brink of a river, fortune came and wak'd him; prithee get up, and go thy ways, thou'lt tumble in and be drown'd else. L'Estrange.
25. Way and ways, are now often used corruptly for wise.
But if he shall any ways make them void after he hath heard them, then he shall bear her inquiry. Numb. xxx. 15.
They erect conclusions no way inferible from their pre-misses. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Being sent to reduce Paros, he mistook a great fire at a distance for the fleet, and being no ways a match for them, set sail for Athens. Swift.
'Tis no way the interest even of priesthood. Angus.
- WAYBREAD. n. s. A plant.
- WAYFARER. n. s. [way and fare, to go.] Passenger; traveller.
Howsoever, many wayfarers make themselves glee, by putting the inhabitants in mind of this privilege; who again, especially the women, forswear not to bairn them. Carew.
- WAYFARING. adj. Travelling; passing; being on a journey.
They to whom all this is revealed, if they will not be directed into a path so plain and smoothed, that the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein, must needs acknowledge themselves in the number of the blind, that will not enter into God's rest. Hammond's Fundamentals.
- WAYFARING TREE. n. s. [viburnum, Lat.] A plant.
The flower consists of one leaf, which is divided into five parts, and expands in a circular order; these are collected into the form of an umbrella: the ovary, which is placed on the upper part of the flower, becomes a soft berry, full of juice, which contains one stony compressed furrowed seed. Miller.

And the weak mind with double woe torment. Fairy Queen.
- WAYWARD. adj. pa. way, and wayward, Saxons.] Froward;
peevish; morose; vexatious.
That night the elder it was, the more wayward it shewed itself towards them. Sidney.
How wayward is this foolish love,
That, like a teffy babe, will scratch the nurse,
And presently all humbled, kiss the rod.
Wayward beauty doth not fancy move,
A frown forbids, a smile engendereth love. Fairfax.
To mischief bent,
He seldom does a good with good intent;
Wayward, but wise; by long experience taught
To please both parties, for ill ends he fought. Dryden.
- WAYWARDLY. adv. [from wayward.] Frowardly; per-versely.
Waywardly proud; and therefore bold: because extremely faultry. Sidney.
Howsoever, some will still be waywardly disposed; yet if such as be in authority will do their duties, they may by convenient discipline be kept within the bounds of modesty, or else removed. Whitefield.
- WAYWARDNESS. n. s. [from wayward.] Frowardness; perverseness.
Such the behaviour of ladies, as builded their chastity not upon waywardness, but choice of worthiness. Sidney.
The best of his time hath been but rash; then must we look from his age to receive not alone the imperfections of long engraved condition; but the unruly waywardness that infirm and choleric years bring. Shakespeare.
A child will have as much wit as he hath waywardness. Watson on Education.
- WE. pronoun. [See I.]

As the case stands with this present age, full of tongue and weak of brain, we yield to the stream thereof. Hooker.
This murder'd prince, though weak he was,
He was not ill, nor yet so weak, but that
He shew'd much martial valour in his place. Daniel.
She first his weak indulgence will accuse. Milton.
That Portugal hath yet no more than a suspension of arms, they may thank the Whigs, whose false representations they were so weak to believe. Swift.
6. Not much impregnated with any ingredient: as a weak tincture, weak beer.
7. Not powerful; not potent.
I must make fair weather yet a while,
Till Henry be more weak and I more strong. Shakespeare.
The weak, by thinking themselves strong, are induced to venture and proclaim war against that which ruins them; and the strong, by conceiving themselves weak, are thereby rendered unactive and useless. South's Sermons.
If the poor found the rich disposed to supply their wants, or if the weak might always find protection from the mighty,
they could none of them lament their own condition. Swift.
8. Not well supported by argument.
A case so weak and feeble hath been much persisted in. Hook.
9. Unfortified.
To quell the tyrant love, and guard thy heart
On this weak side, where most our nature fails,
Would be a conquest worthy Cato's son. Addison's Cato.
- To WEAKEN. v. a. To debilitate; to enfeeble; to deprive of strength.
The first which weakened them was their security. Hooker.

WEARISOME. adj. [from weary.] Troublesome; tedious; causing weariness.
The soul preferreth rest in ignorance before wearisome labour to know. Flaske.
These high wild hills, and rough uneven ways
Draw out our miles, and make them wearisome. Shakespeare.
Troops came to the army the day before, harassed with a long and wearisome march. Bacon.
Costly I reckon not them alone which charge the purse, but which are wearisome and importune in suits. Bacon.
Shrinking up, or stretching out are wearisome positions, and such as perturb the quiet of those parts. Brown.
This must be our task
In heav'n, this our delight; how wearisome
Eternity so spent, in worship paid
To whom we hate. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Satiety from all things else doth come,
Then life must to itself grow wearisome. Dequan.
WEARISOMELY. adv. [from wearisome.] Tediously; so as to cause weariness.
As of Nimrod, so are the opinions of writers different touching Assur, and the beginning of that great state of Assyria; a controversy wearisomely disputed without any direct proof or certainty. Raleigh.
WEARISOMENESS. n. f. [from wearisome.]
1. The quality of tiring.
2. The state of being easily tired.
A wit, quick without lightness, sharp without brittleness, desirous of good things without newliangleness, diligent in painful things without wearisomeness. Alchani's Schoolmaster.
TO WEARY. v. a. [from the adjective.]
1. To tire; to fatigue; to harass; to subdue by labour.
Better that the enemy seek us;
So shall he waste his means, weary his soldiers, Doing himself offence. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.
The people labour in the very fire, weary themselves for very vanity. Hab. ii. 13.
Dewy sleep oppress'd them weary'd. Milton.
Sea would be pools without the brushing air,
To curl the waves; and fire some little care
Should weary nature so, to make her want repose. Dryden.
You have already weary'd fortune so,
She cannot further be your friend or foe,
But fits all breathless. Dryden.
It would not be difficult to continue a paper by refusing the same subjects, and wearying out the reader with the same thoughts in a different phrase. Addison's Freeholder.
2. To make impatient of continuance.
I stay too long by thee, I weary thee. Shakespeare's Henry V.
Should the government be weary'd out of its present patience, what is to be expected by such turbulent men? Addison.
3. To subdue or harass by any thing irksome.
Must ring all her wiles,
With blandish'd parleys, feminine assaults,
Tongue-batteries; the surceas'd not day nor night
To storm me over-watch'd and weary'd out. Milton.
WEARY. adj. [pepiz, Saxon; waeren, to be tired, Dutch.]
1. Subdued by fatigue; tired with labour.
Fair Phoebeus gan decline, in haste,
His weary waggon to the western vale. Spenser.
Gentle Warwick,
Let me embrace thee in my weary arms,
I, that did never weep, now melt with woe. Shakespeare.
I am weary, yea, my memory is tir'd:
Have we no wine here? Shakespeare.
An old man broken with the storms of state,
Is come to lay his weary bones among ye:
Give him a little earth for charity. Shakespeare.
Let us not be weary in well-doing. Gal. vi. 9.
Our swords so wholly did the lates employ,
That they at length grew weary to destroy;
Refus'd the work we brought, and out of breath,
Made sorrow and despair attend for death. Dryden.
2. Impatient of the continuance of any thing painful or irksome.
The king was as weary of Scotland, as he had been impatient to go thither, finding all things proposed to him without consideration of his honour or interest. Clarendon.
My hopes all flat, nature within me sleeps,
In all her functions, weary of herself. Milton.
3. Desirous to discontinue.
See the revolution of the times,
Make mountains level, and the continent
Weary of solid firmness, melt itself
Into the seas. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
4. Weary;

4. Causing weariness; tirefome.
Their gates to all were open evermore
That by the weary way were travelling,
And one fat waiting ever them before
To call in comers by that needy were and poor. Fa. Queen.
The weariest and most loathed life
That age, ach, penury, imprisonment,
Can lay on nature, is a paradise
To what we fear of death. Shakespeare.
Put on what weary negligence you please,
You and your fellows; I'd have it come to question. Shak.
WEA'SEL. n. f. [pejel, Saxon; wesjel, Dutch; myfela, Latin.]
A small animal that eats corn and kills mice.
Ready in gybes, quick-answer'd, faucy, and
As quarrelsome as the wesjel. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
A wesjel once made shift to sink
In at a corn loft through a chink. Pope.
WE'SAND. n. f. [pajen, Saxon.] This word is is very variously written; but this orthography is nearest to the original word.
The windpipe; the passage through which the breath is drawn and emitted.
Marry Diggon, what should him affray,
To take his own where-ever it lay;
For had his wesand been a little wider,
He would have devoured both hider and shidder. Spenser.
Cut his wesand with thy knife. Shakespeare's Tempest.
Matter to be discharged by expectoration must first pass into the lungs, then into the aspera arteria, or wesand, and from thence be coughed up and spit out by the mouth. Wifem.
The shaft that slightly was impress'd,
Now from his heavy fall with weight increas'd,
Drove through his neck afloat; he spurns the ground,
And the soul issues through the wesand's wound. Dryden.
The unerring steel descended while he spoke,
Pierc'd his wide mouth, and through his wesand broke. Dryden.
WEATHER. n. f. [peben, Saxon.]
1. State of air, respecting either cold or heat, wet or drifels.
Who's there, besides foul weather?—One mended like the weather, most unquietly. Shakespeare's King Lear.
I am far better born than is the king;
But I must make fair weather yet a while,
Till Henry be more weak and I more strong. Shakespeare.
Men must content themselves to travel in all weathers, and through all difficulties. L'Estrange.
The fun
Foretells the change of weather in the skies,
Through mists he shoots his fullen beams,
Suspect a drifling day. Dryden.
2. The change of the state of the air.
It is a reverend thing to see an ancient castle not in decay;
how much more to behold an ancient family, which have stood against the waves and weathers of time? Bacon.
3. Tempest; storm.
What gusts of weather from that gathering cloud,
My thoughts preface. Dryden's Virgil.
To WEATHER. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To expose to the air.
He perch'd on some branch thereby,
To weather him and his moist wings to dry. Spenser.
Mustard-seed gather for being too ripe,
And weather it wel, yer ye give it a stripe. Tusser.
2. To pass with difficulty.
He weather'd fell Charibdis; but ere long,
The skies were darkened, and the tempests strong. Garth.
Could they weather and stand the shock of an eternal duration, and yet be at any time subject to a dissolution. Hale.
3. To WEATHER a point. To gain a point against the wind;
to accomplish against opposition.
We have been tugging a great while against the stream, and have almost weather'd our point; a stretch or two more will do the work. Addison.
4. To WEATHER out. To endure.
When we have pass'd these gloomy hours,
And weather'd out the storm that beats upon us. Addison.
WEATHERBEATEN. adj. Harassed and seasoned by hard wea- ther.
They perceived an aged man and a young, both poorly arrayed, extremely weatherbeaten; the old man blind, the young man leading him. Sidney.
She enjoys sure peace for evermore,
As weatherbeaten ship arrived on happy shore. Fairy Queen.
Thrice from the banks of Wye,
And fandy bottom'd Severn, have I sent Him bootless home, and weatherbeaten back. Shak. H. IV.
I hope when you know the worst, you will at once leap into the river, and swim through handomely, and not wea- therbeaten with the divers blasts of irresolution, stand shivering upon the brink. Suckling.
A weatherbeaten vessel holds Gladly the port. Milton.

- Dido received his weatherbeaten troops. Dryden's Virgil.
The old weatherbeaten soldier carries in his hand the Roman eagle. Addison.
WEATHERBOARD, or Weatherbow. n. f. In the sea language, that side of a ship that is to the windward. Dia.
WEATHERCOCK. n. f. [weather and cock.]
1. An artificial cock set on the top of a spire, which by turning shows the point from which the wind blows.
But alas! the sun keeps his light, though thy faith be darkened; the rocks stand still, though thou change like a weather- cock. Sidney.
A kingfisher hanged by the bill, converting the breast to that point of the horizon from whence the wind doth blow, is a very strange introducing of natural weathercocks. Brown.
2. Any thing fickle and inconstant.
Where had you this pretty weathercock?—I cannot tell what his name is my husband had him of. Shakespeare.
He break my promise and abolve my vow!
The word which I have given shall stand like fate,
Not like the king's that weathercock of state. Dryden.
WEATHERDRIVEN. part. Forced by storms or contrary winds.
Philip, during his voyage towards Spain, was weather- driven into Weymouth. Carver's Survey of Cornwall.
WEATHERGAGE. n. f. [weather and gage.] Any thing that shews the weather.
To vere and tack, and steer a cause,
Against the weathergage of laws. Hudibras.
WEATHERGLASS. n. f. [weather and glass.] A barometer.
As in some weatherglass my love I hold,
Which falls or rises with the heat or cold,
I will be constant yet. Dryden.
John's temper depended very much upon the air; his spirits rose and fell with the weatherglass. Arbutnot.
We shall hardly wish for a perpetual equinox to have the charges of weatherglasses; for the two equinoxes of our year are the most windy and tempestuous. Bentley's Sermons.
WEATHERGY. n. f. [weather and gy.] A star-gazer; an astrologer; one that foretells the weather.
And sooner may a gulling weathergy,
By drawing forth heav'n's scheme tell certainly,
What fashion'd hats or ruffs, or suits next year,
Our giddy-headed antick youth will wear. Dante.
WEATHERWISE. adj. [weather and wise.] Skillful in foretelling the weather.
WEATHERWISER. n. f. [weather and wiser, Dutch; to show.]
Any thing that foretells the weather.
Most vegetables expand their flowers and down in warm sun shiny weather, and again close them toward the evening, or in rain, as is in the flowers of pimpernel, the opening and shutting of which are the countryman's weatherwiser.
Derham's Physico-Theology.
To WEAVE. v. a. Preterite wove, wearud, part. pass. woven, wearud; [wejan, Saxon; woven, Dutch.]
1. To form by texture; to form by inserting one part of the materials within another.
Here in her hairs
The painter plays the spider, and hath woven
A golden mesh to intrap the hearts of men,
Faster than gnats in cobwebs. Shakespeare.
The women wove hangings for the grove. 2 Kings xxiii. 7.
White seem'd her robes, yet woven so they were,
As snow and gold together had been wrought. Dryden.
These purple vests were woven by Dardan dames. Dryden.
Dan Pope for thy misfortune griev'd,
With kind concern and skill has woven d
A silken web; and ne'er shall fade
Its colours; gently has he laid
The mantle o'er thy sad distress:
And Venus shall the texture blefs. Prior.
2. To unite by intermixture.
When religion was woven into the civil government, and flourished under the protection of the emperors, mens thoughts and discourses were full of secular affairs; but in the three first centuries of christianity, men who embraced this religion had given up all their interests in this world, and lived in a perpetual preparation for the next. Addison.
3. To interpose; to insert.
The duke be here to-night! the better! best!
This woven itself perforce into my business. Shakespeare.
To WEAVE. v. n. To work with a loom.
WEAVER. n. f. [from wave.] One who makes threads into cloth.
Upon these taxations,
The clothiers all not able to maintain,
The many to them 'lving, have put off
The spinners, carders, fullers, weavers. Shak. Hen. VIII.
My days are swifter than a weaver's shuttle, and are spent without hope. Feb. vii. 6.
The

- The weaver may cast religion upon what loom he please. Haw.
Her flag aloft spreads ruffling to the wind,
And sanguine streamers seem the flood to fire:
The weaver charm'd with what his loom design'd,
Goes on to see, and knows not to retire. Dryden.
WEAVERFISH. n. f. [araneus piscis, Latin.] A fish. Addison.
WEB. n. f. [pebba, Saxon.]
1. Texture; any thing woven.
Penelope, for her Ulysses' sake,
Devis'd a web her woovers to deceive;
In which the work that she all day did make,
The same at night she did again unweave. Spenser.
Spiders touch'd, seek their web's inmost part. Davies.
By day the web and loom,
And homely household talk shall be her doom. Dryden.
The fates, when they this happy web have spun,
Shall blefs the faced clue and bid it smoothly run. Dryden.
Dan Pope with skill hath weav'd
A silken web; and ne'er shall fade
Its colours. Prior.
2. Some part of a sword. Obsolete.
The sword, whereof the web was steel;
Pommel, rich stone; hilt, gold, approv'd by touch. Fairf.
3. A kind of dusky film that hinders the sight; suffusion.
This is the foul fibertigibbet; he gives the web and the pin, quints the eye, and makes the hairlip. Shakespeare.
WEBBED. adj. [from web.] Joined by a film.
Such as are whole-footed, or whose toes are webbed together, their legs are generally short, the most convenient size for swimming. Derham's Physico-Theology.
WEBFOOTED. adj. [web and foot.] Palmipedous; having films between the toes.
Webfooted fowls do not live constantly upon the land, nor fear to enter the water. Ray on the Creation.
WEBSTER. n. f. [prebyrne, Saxon; a woman-weaver.] A weaver. Obsolete.
After local names, the most in number have been derived from occupations; as Taylor, Webster, Wheeler. Camden.
To WED. v. a. [wejan, Saxon.]
1. To marry; to take for husband or wife.
If one by one you wedded all the world,
Or, from the all that are, took something good
To make a perfect woman; she you kill'd
Would be unparalell'd. Shakespeare.
Never did thy beauty, since the day
I saw thee first, and wedded thee, adorn'd
With all perfection, so inflame my senses.
Cloe, blind to wit and worth,
Weds the rich dullness of some son of earth. Pope.
2. To join in marriage.
In Syracuse was I born, and wed
Unto a woman happy but for me. Shakespeare.
Then I shall be no more;
And Adam, wedded to another Eve,
Shall live with her. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The woman in us still prosecutes a deceit like that begun in the garden; and our understandings are wedded to an Eve, as fatal as the mother of their miseries. Glanville.
3. To unite for ever.
Affliction is enamour'd of thy parts,
And thou art wedded to calamity. Shakespeare's Rom. and Jul.
To take for ever.
Though the principal men of the house of commons were again elected to serve in this parliament, yet they were far from wedding the war, or taking themselves to be concerned to make good any declaration made by the former. Clarendon.
They positively and concern'dly wedded his cause. Clarendon.
5. To unite by love or fondness.
Men are wedded to their lusts, and resolv'd upon a wicked course; and so it becomes their interest to with there were no God. Tillotson's Sermons.
To WED. v. n. To contract matrimony.
When I shall wed,
That lord whose hand shall take my plight, shall carry Half my love with him, half my care and duty. Shakespeare.
To love, to wed,
For Hymen's rites, and for the marriage bed
You were ordain'd. Suckling.
Nor took I Guiscard, by blind fancy led,
Or hasty choice as many women wed,
But with deliberate care. Dryden.
WEDDING. n. f. [from wed.] Marriage; nuptials; the nuptial ceremony.
Come, away!
For you shall hence upon your wedding-day. Shakespeare.
I will dance and eat plums at your wedding. Shakespeare.
Let her beauty be her wedding dower;
For me and my possessions the echeons not. Shakespeare.
When my son was entered into his wedding-chamber, he fell down and died. 2 Esdr. x. 1.
These three country bills agree, that each wedding produces four children. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

WEE

- His friends were invited to come and make merry with him;
and this was to be the wedding-feast. L'Estrange.
If she affirmed herself to be a virgin, she must on her wed- ding-day, and in her wedding cloaths perform the ceremony of going alone into the den, and stay an hour with the lion. Swift.
A woman seldom asks advice before she has bought her wed- ding-cloaths. Spectator.
WEDGE. n. f. [vegge, Danish; wegge, Dutch.]
1. A body, which having a sharp edge, continually growing thicker, is used to cleave timber; one of the mechanical powers.
A barbarous troop of clownish fone,
The honour of these noble bows down threw;
Under the wedge I heard the trunk to groan. Spenser.
The fifth mechanical faculty is the wedge used in the cleaving of wood. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.
He left his wedge within the cloven oak
To whet their courage. Dryden's Æneid.
The oak let many a heavy groan, when he was cleft with a wedge of his own timber. Arbutnot's Hist. of John Bull.
2. A mass of metal.
As sparks from the anvil used to fly,
When heavy hammers on the wedge are swaid. Fa. Qu.
When I saw a goodly Babylonish garment, and a wedge of gold of fifty shekels weight, then I coveted them. Jeph. vii.
3. Any thing in the form of a wedge.
In warlike multers they appear,
In rhombs and wedges and half-moons and wings. Milton.
To WEDGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To fasten with wedges; to straiten with wedges; to cleave with wedges; to stop; to obstruct.
My heart,
As wedged with a sigh would rive in twain,
Left Hector, or my father, should perceive me. Shakespeare.
Where have you been broiling?
—Among the crowd i' the abbey, where a finger
Could not be wedged in more. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
Your wit will not so soon out as another man's will; it is strongly wedged up in a blockhead. Shakespeare.
Part
In common, rang'd in figure wedge their way;
Intelligent of seasons. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Sergeffus in the centaur, soon he pals'd,
Wedge d in the rocky shoals and sticking fast. Dryden.
Wedge on the keenest scythes,
And give us steeds that snort against the foe. A. Phillips.
What impulse can be propagated from one particle, entomb'd and wedged in the very center of the earth, to another in the center of Saturn. Bentley's Sermons.
WEDLOCK. n. f. [web and lac, Sax. marriage and gift.] Marriage; matrimony.
She doth fray about
By holy crosses, where she kneels and prays
For happy wedlock hours. Shakespeare.
Sirrah, your brother is legitimate;
Your father's wife did after wedlock bear him:
And if she did play false, the fault was her's. Shakespeare.
Can wedlock know so great a curse,
As putting husbands out to nurse. Cleaveland.
He his happiest choice too late,
Shall meet already link'd, and wedlock-bound
To a fell adversary. Milton's Paradise Lost.
May not a prison or a grave,
Like wedlock, honour's title have?
One thought the sex's prime felicity
Was from the bonds of wedlock to be free:
And uncontrol'd to give account to none. Dryden.
A man determin'd about the fiftieth year of his age to enter upon wedlock. Addison.
WEDNESDAY. n. f. [pobeny-day, Saxon; oden-day, Swedish;
wonen-day, Dutch; wensday, Islandick.] The fourth day of the week, so named by the Gothick nations from Woden or Odin.
Where is the honour of him that died on wednesday. Shak.
WEE. adj. [A Saxon word of the same root with wearing, Dutch;
wenig, German.] Little; small: whence the word weasel or wesjel is used for little; as a wesjel face. In Scotland it denotes small or little; as wee ane, a little one, or child; a wee bit, a little bit.
Does he not wear a great round beard, like a Glover's pa-ring knife?—No, forsooth; he hath but a little wee face with a little yellow beard. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
WEECHM. n. f. [This is often written witch elm.] A species of elm.
A cion of a weechm grafted upon an ordinary elm, will put forth leaves as broad as the brim of a hat. Bacon.
WEED. n. f. [weob, Saxon, tares.]
1. An herb noxious or useless.
If he had an immoderate ambition; which is a weed, if it be a weed, apt to grow in the best soils, it doth not appear that it was in his nature. Clarendon.
He

- He wand'ring feeds
On slowly growing herbs and ranker weeds. Sandys.
Too much manuring fill'd that field with weeds,
While fests, like locusts, did destroy the feeds. Denham.
Stinking weeds and poisonous plants have their use. Mor.
When they are cut, let them lie, if weedy, to kill the weeds. Mortimer's Husbandry.
Their virtue, like their Tyber's flood
Rolling, its course design'd the country's good;
But oft the torrent's too impetuous speed,
From the low earth tore some polluting weed;
And with the blood of Jove there always ran
Some viler part, some tincture of the man. Prior.
2. [Weeda, Saxon; weed, Dutch.] A garment; cloaths; habit; drefs. Now scarce in use, except in widow's weeds, the mourning drefs of a widow. Hooker.
My mind for weeds your virtue's livery wears. Sidney.
Neither is it any man's business to cloath all his servants with one weed; nor theirs to cloath themselves so, if left to their own judgments. Hooker.
They meet upon the way
An aged fire, in long black weeds yelad;
His feet all bare, his beard all hoary gray,
And by his belt his book he hanging had. Fairy Queen.
Livery is also called the upper weed which a serving man wears, so called as it was delivered and taken from him at pleasure. Spenser.
The snake throws her enamelled skin,
Weed wide enough to wrap a fairy in. Shakespeare.
Throngs of knights and barons bold,
In weeds of peace hush triumphs hold,
With store of ladies. Milton.
Lately your fair hand in woman's weed
Wrapp'd my glad head. Waller.
To WEED. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To rid of noxious plants.
When you sow the berries of bays, weed not the borders for the first half year; for the weed giveth them shade. Bacon.
Your feedings having flood 'till June, bestow a weeding or a slight howing upon them. Mortimer.
2. To take away noxious plants.
Oh Marcius,
Each word thou'lt spoke hath weeded from my heart
A root of ancient envy. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.
3. To free from any thing hurtful or offensive.
He weeded the kingdom of such as were devoted to Elaiana, and manumiz'd it from that most dangerous confederacy.
Howel's Vocal Forest.
Sarcasms, contumelies, and invectives, fill so many pages of our controversial writings, that, were those weeded out, many volumes would be reduced to a more moderate bulk and temper. Decay of Piety.
4. To root out vice.
Wife fathers be not as well aware in weeding from their children ill things, as they were before in grafting in them learning. Sham's Schoolmaster.
One by one, as they appeared, they might all be weeded out, without any signs that ever they had been there. Locke.
WEEDER. n. f. [from weed.] One that takes away any thing noxious.
A weeder out of his proud adversaries,
A liberal rewarder of his friends. Shakespeare, Richard III.
WEEDHOOK. n. f. [weed and hook.] A hook by which weeds are cut away or extirpated.
In May get a weedhook, a crotch, and a glove,
And weed out such weeds as the corn doth not love. Tusser.
WEEDLESS. adj. [from weed.] Free from weeds; free from any thing useless or noxious.
So many weedless paradises be,
Which of themselves produce no venomous sin. Dominie.
A crystal brook,
When troubled most it does the bottom show;
'Tis weedless all above, and rockless all below. Dryden.
WEEDY. adj. [from weed.]
1. Consisting of weeds.
There on the pendant boughs, her coronet weed
Clamb'ring to hang, an envious fliver broke,
When down her weedy trophies and herself
Fell in the weeping brook. Shakespeare, Hamlet.
2. Abounding with weeds.
Hid in a weedy lake all night I lay,
Secure of safety. Dryden's Ann.
If it is weedy, let it lie upon the ground. Mortimer.
WEEK. n. f. [from weede, Dutch; wecka, Swedish.]
The space of seven days.
Fulfil her week, and we will give thee this also. Gen. xxix.
WEEKDAY. n. f. [week and day.] Any day not Sunday.
One solid dish his weekday meal affords,
An added pudding solemniz'd the Lord's. Pope.
WEEKLY. adj. [from week.] Happening, produced, or done once a week; hebdomadary.

WEE

- The Jews had always their weekly readings of the law of Moses. Hooker.
So liv'd our fires, ere doctors learn'd to kill,
And multiply'd with heirs their weekly bill. Dryden.
Nothing more frequent in their weekly papers, than affecting to confound the terms of clergy and high-church, and then loading the latter with calumny. Swift.
WEEKLY. adv. [from week.] Once a week; by hebdomadal periods.
These are obliged to perform divine worship in their turns weekly, and are sometimes called hebdomadal canons. Ascham.
WEEK. n. f. [from weede, Dutch.] To think;
to imagine; to form a notion; to fancy. Obsolete.
1. A whirlpool.
2. A twiggan snare or trap for fish, [perhaps from willow] To WEEN. v. n. [from weene, Dutch.] To think;
to imagine; to form a notion; to fancy. Obsolete.
Ah lady dear, quoth then the gentle knight,
Well may I ween your grief is wondrous great. Spenser.
So well it her belcoms, that ye would ween
Some angel had been. Spenser's Epithalamium.
When weening to return, whence they did stray,
They cannot find that path which first was shown;
But wander to and fro in ways unknown,
Furthest from end then, when they nearest ween. Fa. Queen.
Thy father, in pity of my hard distress,
Levy'd an army, weening to redeem
And reinstate me in the ciadem. Shakespeare, Henry VI.
Ween you of better luck,
I mean, in perjur'd witness, than your master,
Whose minister you are, while here he liv'd
Upon this naughty earth. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.
They ween'd
That self-same day, by fight or by surprize,
To win the mount of God; and on his throne
To set the envier of his state, the proud Aspirer; but their thoughts prov'd fond and vain. Milton.
To WEEN. v. n. preter. and part. pass. weep. [from weene, Saxon.]
1. To show sorrow by tears.
In that sad time
My manly eyes did scorn an humble tear;
And what these sorrows could not hence exhale,
That beauty hath, and made them blind with weeping. Shakespeare.
I fear he will prove the weeping philosopher when he grows old, being so full of unmanly sadness in his youth. Shakespeare.
The days of weeping and mourning for Moses were ended.
Deut. xxxiv. 8.
Have you wept for your sin, so that you were indeed sorrowful in your spirit? Are you so sorrowful that you hate it? Do you so hate it that you have left it? Taylor.
Away, with women weep, and leave me here,
Fix'd, like a man, to die without a tear,
Or save, or slay us both. Dryden.
A corps it was, but whose it was, unknown;
Yet mov'd, howe'er, she made the case her own;
Took the bad omen of a shipwreck'd man,
As for a stranger weep. Dryden.
When Darius wept over his army, that within a single age not a man of all that confluence would be left alive, Artaban-us improv'd his meditation by adding, that yet all of them should meet with so many evils, that every one should wish himself dead long before. Waller's Preparation for Death.
This lovely weeping fair cannot be dearer to thee,
Than thou art to thy faithful Scordil. Rare.
2. To shed tears from any passion.
Then they for sudden joy did weep,
And I for sorrow sung,
That such a king should play bo-peep,
And go the fools among. Shakespeare, King Lear.
3. To lament; to complain.
They weep unto me, saying, give us flesh that we may eat. Num.
To WEEN. v. a.
1. To lament with tears; to bewail; to bemoan.
If thou wilt weep my fortunes, take my eyes. Shakespeare.
Nor was I near to close his dying eyes,
To wash his wounds, to weep his obsequies. Dryden.
We wand'ring go
Through dreary wastes, and weep each other's woe. Pope.
2. To shed moisture.
Thus was this place
A happy rural seat of various view,
Groves whose rich trees wept od'rous gums and balm. Milton.
Let India boast her plants, nor envy we
The weeping amber or the balmy tree,
While by our oaks the precious loads are borne,
And realms commanded which those trees adorn. Pope.
3. To abound with wet.
Rey-grass grows on clayey and weeping grounds. Mortimer.
WEEP. n. f. [from weep.]
1. One who sheds tears; a lamer; a bawler; a mourner.
If you have served God in a holy life, send away the women

WEI

- men and the weepers: tell them it is as much intemperance to weep too much as to laugh too much: if thou art alone, or with fitting company, die as thou should'st; but do not die impatiently, and like a fox caught in a trap. Taylor.
Laughter is easy; but the wonder lies,
What store of brine supply'd the weeper's eyes. Dryden.
2. A white border on the sleeve of a mourning coat.
WEIRISH. adj. [See WEARISH.] This old word is used by Ascham in a sense which the lexicographers seem not to have known. Applied to tastes, it means insipid; applied to the body, weak and wat'ry: here it seems to mean sour; furly.
A voice not soft, weak, piping, womanish; but audible, strong, and manlike: a countenance not weaverish and crabbed, but fair and comely. Ascham's Schoolmaster.
To WEET. v. n. preterite wet, or wete. [from weete, Saxon; weten, Dutch.] To know; to be informed; to have knowledge.
Obsolete.
Him the prince with gentle court did board;
Sir knight, mought I of you this court'sy read,
To weel why on your shield, so goodly fcor'd,
Bear ye the picture of that lady's head? Spenser.
I bid,
On pain of punishment, the world to weel
We stand up peerless. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.
But well I weel thy cruel wrong
Adorns a nobler poet's song. Prior.
WEETLESS. adj. [from weel.] Unknown. Spenser.
WEVEL. n. f. [from weel, Dutch.] A grub.
A worm called a weevil, bred under ground, feedeth upon roots; as parsnips and carrots. Bacon's Natural History.
Corn is so innocent from breeding of mice, that it doth not produce the very weevils that live in it and consume it. Bentley.
WEZEL. n. f. [See WEASEL.]
I fuck melancholy out of a song, as a weasel fucks eggs. Shakespeare.
The corn-devouring weasel here abides,
And the wife ant. Dryden's Georg.
WEFT. The old preterite and part. pass. from To weave. Spenser.
WEFT. n. f. [from weft, French; wofa, to wander, Islandick;
wofa, Latin.]
1. That of which the claim is generally waved; any thing wandering without an owner, and seized by the lord of the manour.
His horse, it is the herald's weft;
No, 'tis a mare. Ben. Johnson's Underwoods.
2. It is in Bacon for weft, a gentle blast.
The smell of violets exceedeth in sweetness that of spices, and the strongest sort of smells are best in a weft air off. Bacon.
WEFT. n. f. [from weft, Saxon.] The woof of cloth.
WEFTAGE. n. f. [from weft.] Texture.
The whole muscles, as they lie upon the bones, might be truly tanned; whereby the weftage of the fibres might more easily be observed. Grey's Museum.
To WEIGH. v. a. [from weagan, Saxon; weylen, Dutch.]
1. To examine by the balance.
Earth taken from land adjoining to the Nile, and preserved, so as not to be wet nor wasted, and weighed daily, will not alter weight until the seventeenth of June, when the river beginneth to rise; and then it will grow more and more ponderous,
'till the river cometh to its height. Bacon's Natural History.
Wherein all things created first he weigh'd. Milton.
2. To be equivalent to in weight.
By the exsuction of the air out of a glass-vessel, it made that vessel take up, or suck up, to speak in the common language, a body weighing divers ounces. Boyle.
3. To pay, allot, or take by weight.
They that must weigh out my afflictions,
They that my trust must grow to, live not here;
They are, as all my comforts are, far hence. Shakespeare.
They weighed for my price thirty pieces of silver. Lech. xi.
4. To raise; to take up the anchor.
Barbarossa, using this exceeding cheerfulness of his soldiers, weighed up the fourteen galleys he had sunk. Knolles.
Here he left me, ling'ring here delay'd
His parting kiss, and there his anchor weigh'd. Dryden.
5. To examine; to balance in the mind.
Regard not who it is which speaketh, but weigh only what is spoken. Hooker.
I have in equal balance justly weigh'd
What wrongs our arms may do, what wrongs we suffer,
And find our griefs heavier than our offences. Shakespeare, H. IV.
The ripeness or unripeness of the occasion must ever be well weighed.
His majesty's speedy march left that design to be better weighed and digested. Clarendon.
You chose a retreat, and not 'till you had maturely weighed the advantages of rising higher, with the hazards of the fall. Dryden.
All grant him prudent; prudence interest weighs,
And interest bids him seek your love and praise. Dryden.
The mind, having the power to suspend the satisfaction of any of its desires, is at liberty to examine them on all sides, and weigh them with others. Locke.

WEI

- He is the only proper judge of our perfections, who weighs the goodness of our actions by the sincerity of our intentions.
Addison's Spectator.
6. To WEIGH down. To overbalance.
Fear weighs down faith with shame. Daniel's Civ. War.
7. To WEIGH down. To overburden; to oppress with weight; to depress.
The Indian fig boweth so low, as it taketh root again; the plenty of the sap, and the softness of the stalk, making the bough, being overladen, weigh down. Bacon.
In thy blood will reign
A melancholy damp of cold and dry;
To weigh thy spirits down. Milton.
Her father's crimes
Sit heavy on her, and weigh down her prayers;
A crown usurp'd, a lawful king depos'd,
His children murder'd. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
My soul is quite weigh'd down with care, and asks
The soft refreshment of a moment's sleep. Addison's Cato.
Excellent persons, weighed down by this habitual sorrow of heart, rather deserve our compassion than reproach. Addison.
To WEIGH. v. n.
1. To have weight.
Exactly weighing and frangling a chicken in the scales, upon an immediate ponderation, we could discover no difference in weight; but suffering it to lie eight or ten hours, until it grew perfectly cold, it weighed most sensibly lighter. Brown.
2. To be considered as important; to have weight in the intellectual balance.
This objection ought to weigh with those, whose reading is designed for much talk and little knowledge. Locke.
A wife man is then best satisfied, when he finds that the same argument which weighs with him has weighed with thousands before him, and is such as hath born down all opposition. Addison.
3. To raise the anchor.
When gathering clouds o'ershadow all the skies,
And shoot quick lightnings, weigh, my boys, he cries. Dry.
4. To bear heavily; to press hard.
Can't thou not minister to a mind diseas'd,
And with some sweet oblivious antidote
Cleanse the stuff'd bosom of that perilous stuff
Which weighs upon the heart? Shakespeare, Macbeth.
WEIGHED. adj. [from weigh.] Experienced.
In an embassy of weight, choice was made of some sad person of known experience, and not of a young man, not weighed in state matters. Bacon.
WEIGHED. n. f. [from weigh.] He who weighs.
WEIGHT. n. f. [from weigh, Saxon.]
1. Quantity measured by the balance.
Tobacco cut and weighed, and then dried by the fire, loseth weight; and, after being laid in the open air, recovereth weight again. Bacon's Natural History.
Fain would I chuse a middle course to steer;
Nature's too kind, and justice too severe:
Speak for us both, and to the balance bring,
On either side, the father and the king:
Heav'n knows my heart is bent to favour thee;
Make it but scanty weight, and leave the rest to me. Dryden.
Boerhaave fed a sparrow with bread four days, in which time it eat more than its own weight; and yet there was no acid found in its body. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
2. A mass by which, as the standard, other bodies are examined.
Just balances, just weights shall ye have. Lev. xix. 36.
Undoubtedly there were such weights which the physicians used, who, though they might reckon according to the weight of the money, they did not weigh their drugs with pieces of money. Arbuthnot on Coins.
When the balance is intirely broke, by mighty weights fallen into either scale, the power will never continue long in equal division, but run intirely into one. Swift.
3. Ponderous mass.
A man leapeth better with weights in his hands than without; for that the weight, if proportionable, strengtheneth the sinews by contracting them; otherwise, where no contraction is needful, weight hindereth: as we see in horseraces, men are curious to foresee that there be not the least weight upon the one horse more than upon the other. In leaping with weights, the arms are first cast backwards, and then forwards, with so much the greater force. Bacon's Natural History.
Wolley, who from his own great store might have
A palace or a college for his grave,
Lies here interr'd;
Nothing but earth to earth, no pond'rous weight
Upon him, but a pebble or a quoit:
If thus thou lie'st neglected, what must we Hope after death, who are but shreds of thee? Bp. Corbet.
All their confidence
Under the weight of mountains bury'd deep. Milton.
Pride, like a gulf, swallows us up; our very virtues, when so leavened, becoming weights and plummetts to sink us to the deeper ruin. Government of the Tongue.

WEL

- Then than the ill; and know, my dear,
Kindness and constancy will prove
The only pillars fit to bear
So vast a weight as that of love. Prior.
4. Gravity; heaviness; tendency to the center.
Heaviness or weight is not here considered as being such a natural quality, whereby condensed bodies do of themselves tend downwards; but rather as being an affection, whereby they may be measured. Wilkins.
- The shaft that slightly was impress'd,
Now from his heavy fall with weight increas'd,
Drove through his neck. Dryden.
- What natural agent impel them so strongly with a transverse force blow against that tremendous weight and rapidity, when whole worlds are falling? Bentley.
5. Pressure; burthen; overwhelming power.
Thou art no Atlas for so great a weight. Shakespeare.
- So shall the world go on,
To good malignant, to bad men benign,
Under her own weight groaning. Milton.
- We must those, who groan beneath the weight
Of age, disease, or want, commiserate. Denham.
- The prince may carry the plough, but the weight lies upon L'Estrange.
- Possession's load was grown so great,
He sunk beneath the cumbrous weight.
How to make ye suddenly an answer,
In such a point of weight, so near mine honour,
In truth I know not. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.
- If this right of heir carry any weight with it, if it be the ordinance of God, must not all be subject to it. Locke.
- To make the sense of esteem or disgrace sink the deeper, and be of the more weight, other agreeable or disagreeable things should constantly accompany these different states. Locke.
- An author's arguments lose their weight, when we are persuaded that he only writes for argument's sake. Addison.
- See, Lord, the sorrows of my heart,
Ere yet it be too late;
And hear my Saviour's dying groans,
To give thee sorrows weight. Addison's Spectator.
- The solemnities that encompass the magistrate add dignity to all his actions, and weight to all his words. Atterbury.
- WEIGHTILY. adv. [from weighty.]
1. Heavily; ponderously.
2. Solidly; importantly.
- Is his poetry the worse, because he makes his agents speak weightily and sententiously? Brown's Notes on the Odyssey.
- WEIGHTINESS. n. f. [from weighty.]
1. Ponderosity; gravity; heaviness.
2. Solidity; force.
- I fear I have dwelt longer on this passage than the weightiness of any argument in it requires. Locke.
3. Importance.
The apparent defect of her judgment, joined to the weightiness of the adventure, caused many to marvel. Hayward.
- WEIGHTLESS. adj. [from weight.]
1. Light; having no gravity.
How by him balanc'd in the weightless air?
Can't thou the wisdom of his works declare? Sandys.
2. Not possible to be weighed. Improper.
It must both weightless and immortal prove,
Because the centre of it is above. Dryden.
- WEIGHTY. adj. [from weight.]
1. Heavy; ponderous.
You have already weary'd fortune so,
She cannot farther be your friend or foe;
But sits all breathless, and admires to feel
A fate so weighty, that it stops her wheel. Dryden.
2. Important; momentous; efficacious.
I to your assistance do make love,
Masking the business from the common eye
For sundry weighty reasons. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
- No fool Pythagoras was thought:
Whilst he his weighty doctrines taught,
He made his listening scholars stand;
Their mouth still cover'd with their hand:
Else, may-be, some odd-thinking youth,
Lest friend to doctrine than to truth,
Might have refus'd to let his ears
Attend the music of the spheres. Prior.
- Thus spoke to my lady the knight full of care,
Let me have your advice in a weighty affair. Swift.
3. Rigorous; severe. Not in use.
If, after two days thine, Athens contains thee, Attend our weightier judgment. Shakespeare. Timon.
- WE'LAWAY. interj. [This I once believed a corruption of wel away, that is, baptisms is gone: so Junius explained it; but the Saxon exclamation is palapa, wes or wose: from welaway, is formed by corruption weladay.] Alas.
Harrow now out, and welaway, he cried,
What dismal day hath sent this cursed light! Spenser.

WEL

- Ah, welaway! most noble lords, how can
Your cruel eyes endure so piteous light? Fairy Queen.
- Welaway*, the while I was so fond,
To leave the good that I had in hand. Spenser.
- WE'LCOME. adj. [bien venu, French; pilicume, Saxon; wel- kom, Dutch.]
1. Received with gladness; admitted willingly to any place or enjoyment; grateful; pleasing.
I serve you, madam. Shakespeare. King Lear.
- Your graces are right welcome. Shakespeare. King Lear.
- He, though not of the plot, will like it,
And with it should proceed; for, unto men Prest with their wants, all change is ever welcome. B. John.
- Here let me earn my bread,
Till oft invoked death
Hasten the welcome end of all my pains. Milton.
- He that knows how to make those he converses with easy, has found the true art of living, and being welcome and valued every where. Lake.
2. To bid WELCOME. To receive with professions of kindness.
Some stood in a row in so civil a fashion, as if to welcome us; and divers put their arms a little abroad, which is their gesture when they bid any welcome. Bacon.
- WE'LCOME. interj. A form of salutation used to a new comer, elliptically used for you are welcome.
Welcome, he said,
O long expected to my dear embrace. Dryden.
- Welcome, great monarch, to your own. Dryden.
- WE'LCOME. n. f.
1. Salutation of a new comer.
Welcome ever smiles, and farewell goes out sighing. Shakespeare.
2. Kind reception of a new comer.
I should be free from injuries, and abound as much in the true causes of welcome, as I should find want of the effects thereof. Stacy.
- I look'd not for you yet, nor am provided For your fit welcome. Shakespeare. King Lear.
- Madam, new years may well expect to find
We come from you, to whom they are so kind:
Still as they pass they court and smile on you,
And make your beauty as themselves seem new. Waller.
- Where diligence opens the door of the understanding, and impartiality keeps it, truth finds an entrance and a welcome too. South's Sermons.
- To WELCOME. v. a. To salute a new comer with kindness.
I know no cause
Why I should welcome such a guest as grief,
Save bidding farewell to so sweet a guest
As my sweet Richard. Shakespeare. Richard II.
- They stood in a row in so civil a fashion, as if to welcome
us. Bacon.
- Thus we salute thee with our early song,
And welcome thee, and wish thee long. Milton.
- To welc me home
His warlike brother, is Pirithous come
The lark and linnet strain their warbling throats,
To welcome in the Spring. Dryden.
- WE'LCOME to our House. n. f. An herb. Answorth.
- WE'LCOMENESS. n. f. [from welcome.] Gratefulness.
Our joys, after some centuries of years, may seem to have grown elder, by having been enjoyed so many ages; yet will they really still continue new, not only upon the scores of their welcomeness, but by their perpetually equal, because infinite, distance from a period. Boyle.
- WE'LCOMER. n. f. [from welcome.] The saluter or receiver of a new comer.
Farewel, thou woful welcomer of glory. Shakespeare.
- WE'LD, or WOULD. n. f. [lutella, Latin.] Yellow weed, or dyers weed.
Its leaves are oblong and intire: it has an anomalous flower, consisting of many dissimilar leaves: the fruit is globular, hollow, and divided into three parts. The dyers use it for dying bright yellows and lemon colours; and this is by some supposed to be the plant used by the ancient Persians in painting their bodies. Miller.
- To WE'LD. v. a. To beat one mass into another, so as to incorporate them.
Sparkling or welding heat is used when you double up your iron to make it thick enough, and so weld or work in the doubling into one another. Moxon's Mech. Exer.
- WE'LDER. n. f. A term perhaps merely Irish; though it may be derived from To weld, to turn or manage: whence welder, welder.
Such immediate tenants have others under them, and so a third and fourth in subordination, till it comes to the welder, as they call him, who sits at a rack-rent, and lives mile-rably. Swift.
- WE'LFARE. n. f. [well and fare.] Happiness; success; prosperity.
If friends to a government lose their assistance, they put it

WEL

- it in the power of a few desperate men to ruin the welfare of those who are superior to them in strength and interest. Add.
- Discretion is the perfection of reason: cunning is a kind of instinct that only looks out after our immediate interest and advantage. Addison's Spectator.
- To WELK. v. a. [Of this word in Spenser I know not well the meaning: pealcan, in Saxon, is to roll; welken, in German, and welken, in Saxon, are clouds; whence I suppose welk, welk or whilk is an undulation or corrugation, or corrugated or convoluted body. Wilk is used for a small shell-fish.] To cloud; to obscure.
- Now bid Winter *welk*ed hath the day,
And Phœbus, weary of his yearly task,
Established hath his steeds in lowly lay,
And taken up his inn in fishes' haik. Spenser.
- As gentle shepherd in sweet eventide,
When ruddy Phœbus 'gins to welk in West,
Marks which do bite their hasty supper best. Fairy Queen.
- The *welk*ed Phœbus 'gan avail
His weary wain. Spenser.
- WE'KED. adj. Wrinkled; wreathed.
Methought his eyes
Were two full moons: he had a thousand noses, Horns welk'd and wav'd like the unridded sea. Shakespeare.
- WE'KIN. n. f. [from pealcan, to roll, or pelcen, clouds; Sax.]
1. The visible regions of the air. Out of use, except in poetry.
Ne in all the welkin was no cloud. Chaucer.
- He leaves the welkin way most beaten plain,
And rapt with whirling wheels inflames the skyen,
With fire not made to burn, but fairly for to shine. Fa. Qu.
- The swallow peeps out of her nest,
And cloudy welkin cleareth. Spenser's Pastorals.
- Spur your proud horses hard, and ride in blood:
Amaze the welkin with your broken flaves. Shak. R. III.
- With feats of arms
From either end of heav'n the welkin burns. Milton.
- Now my talk is smoothly done,
I can fly, or I can run
Quickly to the green earth's end,
Where the bow'd welkin flow doth bend. Milton.
- Their hideous yells
Rend the dark welkin. Philips.
2. WELKIN EYE, is, I suppose, blue eye; skycoloured eye.
Yet were it true
To say this boy were like me! Come, sir page, Look on me with your welkin eye, sweet villain. Shakespeare.
- WELL. n. f. [yelle, poell, Saxon.]
1. A spring; a fountain; a source.
Begin then, sisters of the sacred well,
That from beneath the seat of Jove doth spring. Milton.
- As the root and branch are but one tree,
And well and stream do but one river make;
So if the root and well corrupted be,
The stream and branch the same corruption take. Davies.
2. A deep narrow pit of water.
The muscles are so many well-buckets: when one of them ads and draws, 'tis necessary that the other must obey. Dryden.
3. The cavity in which hairs are placed.
Hollow newelled hairs are made about a square hollow newel: suppose the well-hole to be eleven foot long, and six foot wide, and we would bring up a pair of hairs from the first floor eleven foot high, it being intended a sky-light shall fall through the hollow newel. Moxon's Mech. Exer.
- To WELL. v. n. [reallan, Saxon.] To spring; to issue as from a spring.
Thereby a crystal stream did gently play,
Which from a sacred fountain welld forth away. Fa. Qu.
- The bubbling wave did ever freshly well. Fairy Queen.
- A dreary corse,
All wallow'd in his own yet lukewarm blood,
That from his wound yet welld fresh, alas!
Himself assits to lift him from the ground,
With clotted locks, and blood that welld from out the wound. Dryden's Æn.
- From his two springs,
Pure welling out, he through the lucid lake
Of fair Dambea rolls his infant stream. Thomson's Summer.
- To WELL. v. a. To pour any thing forth.
To her people wealth they forth do well,
And health to every foreign nation. Fairy Queen.
- WE'LL. adj. [Well seems to be sometimes an adjective, though it is not always easy to determine its relations.]
1. Not sick; not unhappy.
Mark, we use
To say the dead are well. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.
- Lady, I am not well, else I should answer
From a full flowing stomach. Shakespeare. King Lear.
- In poison there is physick; and this news,
That would, had I been well, have made me sick,
Being sick, hath in some measure made me well. Shakespeare.
- While thou art well, thou mayest do much good; but when thou art sick; thou can't not tell what thou shalt be able to do:

- it is not very much nor very good. Few men mend with sickness, as there are but few who by travel and a wandering life become devout. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.
- Men under irregular appetites never think themselves well, so long as they fancy they might be better; then from better they must rise to best. L'Estrange.
- 'Tis easy for any, when well, to give advice to them that are not. Wake's Preparation for Death.
2. Convenient; happy.
Holdings were so plentiful, and holders so scarce, as well was the landlord, who could get one to be his tenant. Carew.
- Charity is made the constant companion and perfection of all virtues; and well it is for that virtue where it most enters, and longest stays. Sprad's Sermons.
- This exactness is necessary, and it would be well too, if it extended itself to common conversation. Locke.
- It would have been well for Genoa, if she had followed the example of Venice, in not permitting her nobles to make any purchase of lands in the dominions of a foreign prince. Ad.
3. Being in favour.
He followed the fortunes of that family; and was well with Henry the fourth. Dryden.
4. Recovered from any sickness or misfortune.
I am forry
For your displeasure; but all will sure be well. Shakespeare.
- Just thoughts, and modest expectations are easily satisfied.
If we don't over-rate our pretensions, all will be well. Collier.
- WELL. adv. [well, Gothick; pell, Saxon; wel, Dutch; vel, Hilandick.]
1. Not ill; not unhappily.
Some sense, and more estate, kind heav'n
To this well-lotted peer has given:
What then? he must have rule and sway;
Else all is wrong till he's in play. Prior.
2. Not ill; not wickedly.
My bargains, and well-won thrift he calls int'rest. Shak.
- Thou one bad act with many deeds well done
3. Skillfully; properly.
A private caution I know not well how to fort, unless I should call it political, by no means to build too near a great neighbour. Wotton.
- Beware and govern well thy appetite.
Whether the learn'd Minerva be her theme,
Or chaste Diana bathing in the stream;
None can record their heavenly praise so well. Dryden.
- What poet would not mourn to see
His brother write as well as he? Swift.
4. Not amiss; not unsuccessfully; not erroneously.
Solymann commended them for a plot so well by them laid, more than he did the victory of others got by good fortune, not grounded upon any good reason. Kneller.
- The soldier that philosopher well blam'd,
Who long and loudly in the schools declaim'd. Denham.
- 'Tis almost impossible to translate verbally and well. Dryden.
5. Not insufficiently; not defectively.
The plain of Jordan was well watered every where. Gensfr.
- We are well able to overcome it. Nim. xiii. 30.
- The merchant adventurers being a strong company, and well underfet with rich men, held out bravely. Bacon.
6. To a degree that gives pleasure.
I like well, in some places, fair columns upon frames of carpenters work. Bacon.
7. With praise; favourably.
All the world speaks well of you. Pope.
8. Well is sometimes like the French bien, a term of concession.
The knot might well be cut, but untied it could not be. Sidney.
- To know
In measure what the mind can well contain. Milton.
9. It is a word by which something is admitted as the ground for a conclusion.
Well, let's away, and say how much is done. Shakespeare.
- Well, by this author's confession, a number superior are for the succession in the house of Hanover. Swift.
10. As well as. Together with; not less than.
Coptos was the magazine of all the trade from Æthiopia, by the Nile, as well as of those commodities that came from the west by Alexandria. Arbutnot on Coins.
11. Well is him or me; bene est, he is happy.
Well is him that dwelleth with a wife of understanding, and that hath not slipped with his tongue. Ecclus. xxv. 8.
12. Well nigh. Nearly; almost.
I freed well nigh half th' angelick name. Milton.
13. It is used much in composition, to express any thing right, laudable, or not defective.
Antiochus understanding him not be well affected to his affairs, provided for his own safety. 2 Mac. iv. 21.
- There may be safety to the well-affected Persians; but to those which do conspire against us, a memorial of destruction. Esth. xvi. 23.
- Should a whole host at once discharge the bow,
My well-aim'd shaft with death prevents the foe. Pope.

 And the well-balanc'd world on hinges hung. Milton.
 Learners must at first be believers, and their master's rules having been once made axioms to them, they mislead those who think it sufficient to excuse them, if they go out of their way in a well-beaten track. Locke.
 He chose a thousand horse, the flow'r of all
 His warlike troops, to wait the funeral:
 To bear him back, and share Evander's grief;
 A well-becoming, but a weak relief. Dryden.
 Those opposed files,

 Amid the main, two mighty fleets engage;
 Adium surveys the well-disputed prize. Dryden.
 The ways of well-doing are in number even as many, as are the kinds of voluntary actions: so that whatsoever we do in this world, and may do it ill, we shew ourselves therein by well-doing to be wise. Hooker, b. ii.
 The conscience of well-doing may pass for a recompense. L'Estrange.
 God will judge every man according to his works; to them, who by patient continuance in well-doing, endure through the heat and burden of the day, he will give the reward of their labour. Rogers's Sermons.
 As far the spear I throw,
 As flies an arrow from the well-drawn bow. Pope.
 Fair nymphs and well-dress'd youths around her shone,
 But ev'ry eye was fixt on her alone. Pope.
 Such a doctrine in St. James's air,
 Shou'd chance to make the well-drest rabble stare. Pope.
 The desire of esteem, riches, or power, makes men espouse
 the well-endowed opinions in fashion. Locke.
 We ought to stand firm in well-established principles, and not be tempted to change for every difficulty. Watts.
 Echeus sage, a venerable man!
 Whose well-taught mind the present age surpass'd. Pope.
 Some reliques of the true antiquity, though disguised, a well-eyed man may happily discover. Spenser on Ireland.
 How sweet the products of a peaceful reign?
 The heaven-taught poet, and enchanting strain:
 The well-fill'd palace, the perpetual feast;
 A land rejoicing, and a people blest. Pope.
 Turkish blood did his young hands imbue.
 From thence returning with deserv'd applause,
 Against the Moors his well-fleish'd sword he draws. Dryden.
 Fairest piece of well-form'd earth,

 Ah, welladay! I'm shent with baneful smart. Gay.
 WELLBEING. n. f. [well and be.] Happiness; prosperity.
 Man is not to depend upon the uncertain dispositions of men for his wellbeing, but only on God and his own spirit. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
 For whose wellbeing
 So amply, and with hands so liberal,
 Thou hast provided all things. Milton's Par. Lost, b. viii.
 The most sacred ties of duty are founded upon gratitude:
 such as the duties of a child to his parent, and of a subject to his sovereign. From the former there is required love and honour, in recompence of being; and from the latter obedience and subjection, in recompence of protection and well-being. South's Sermons.
 All things are subservient to the beauty, order, and well-being of the whole. L'Estrange.
 He who does not co-operate with this holy spirit, receives none of those advantages which are perfecting of his nature, and necessary to his wellbeing. Speccator, N° 571.
 WELLBORN. n. f. Not meanly descended.
 One whose extraction from an antient line,
 Gives hope again that wellborn men may shine. Waller.
 Heav'n, that wellborn souls inspires,
 Prompts me, through lifted frowns, and rising fires,
 To rush undaunted to defend the walls. Dryden.
 WELLBRED. adj. [well and bred.] Elegant of manners; polite.
 None have been with admiration read,
 But who, besides their learning, were wellbred. Roscom.
 Both the poets were wellbred and well-natur'd. Dryden.
 Wellbred panicles civilly delight,
 In mumbling of the game they dare not bite. Pope.
 WELLNATURED. adj. [well and nature.] Good-natured;
 kind.
 WELLNAT'VE. interj. A word of praise.
 Wellnate, thou good and faithful servant. Matt. xxv. 21.
 WELLFAVOUR'D. adj. [well and favour.] Beautiful; pleasing to the eye.
 His wife seems to be wellfavoured. I will use her as the key of the cuckoldy rogue's coffers. Shakespeare.
 WELLMET. interj. [well and meet.] A term of salutation.
 Once more to-day wellmet, distemper'd lords;
 The king by me requests your presence straight. Shakef.
 On their life no grievous burthen lies,
 Who are wellnatur'd, temperate and wife:
 But an inhuman and ill-temper'd mind,
 Not any easy part in life can find. Denham.
 The manners of the poets were not unlike; both of them were well-bred, wellnatured, amorous, and libertine at least in their writings; it may be also in their lives. Dryden.
 Still with esteem no less convers'd than read;
 With wit wellnatur'd, and with books well-bred. Pope.
 WELLNIGH. adv. [well and nigh.] Almost.
 The fame so sore annoy'd has the knight,
 That wellnigh choked with the deadly fink,
 His forces fail. Fairy Queen, b. i.
 My feet were almost gone: my steps had wellnigh slip't. Pf.
 England was wellnigh ruined by the rebellion of the barons, and Ireland utterly neglected. Davies.
 Whoever shall read over St. Paul's enumeration of the duties incumbent upon it, might conclude, that wellnigh the whole of christianity is laid on the shoulders of charity alone. Sprat's Sermons.
 Notwithstanding a small diversity of positions, the whole aggregate of matter, as long as it retained the nature of a chaos, would retain wellnigh an uniform tenuity of texture. Bentley.
 WELLSPE'NT. adj. Passed with virtue.
 They are to lie down without any thing to support them in their age, but the conscience of a wellspent youth. L'Estrange.
 What a refreshment then will it be to look back upon a wellspent life? Calamy's Sermons.
 The constant tenour of their wellspent days,
 No less deserv'd a just return of praise. Pope.
 WELLSRING. n. f. [wellspring, Saxon.] Fountain; source.
 The fountain and wellspring of impiety, is a resolved purpose of mind to reap in this world, what sensual profit or sensual pleasure forever the world yieldeth. Hooker.
 Understanding is a wellspring of life. Prov. xvi. 22.
 WELLWILLER. n. f. [well and willer.] One who means kindly.
 Disarming all his own countrymen, that no man might shew himself a wellwiller of mine. Sidney, b. ii.
 There are fit occasions ministered for men to purchase to themselves wellwillers by the colour, under which they oftentimes prosecute quarrels of envy. Hooker.
 WELLWISH. n. f. [well and wish.] A wish of happiness.
 Let it not enter into the heart of any one that hath a well-wish for his friends or posterity, to think of a peace with France, till the Spanish monarchy be entirely torn from it. Add.
 WELLWISHER. n. f. [from wellwish.] One who wishes the good of another.

WEN

The actual traitor is guilty of perjury in the eye of the law; the secret wellwisher of the cause is to before the tribunal of conscience. Addison's Freesholder, N° 6.
 Betray not any of your wellwishers into the like inconveniences. Speccator, N° 271.
 No man is more your sincere wellwisher than myself, or more the sincere wellwisher of your family. Pope.
 WELT. n. f. A border; a guard; an edging.
 Little low hedges made round like welts, with some pretty pyramids, I like well. Bacon.
 Certain scioll, or smatterers, are busy in the skirts and outsides of learning, and have scarce any thing of solid literature to recommend them. They may have some edging or trimming of a scholar, a welt, or so; but no more. B. Johnson.
 To WELT. v. a. [from the noun.] To sew any thing with a border.
 To WELTER. v. n. [pealtan, Saxon; welteren, Dutch; volu-tari, Lat.]
 1. To roll in water or mire.
 He must not float upon his watry bier
 Unweep'd, nor welter to the parching winds. Milton.
 The companions of his fall o'erwhelm'd
 He soon discerns; and wellring by his side
 The next himself. Milton's Par. Lost, b. i.
 The gasping head flies off; a purple flood Flows from the trunk, that welters in the blood. Dryden.
 He sung Darius, great and good,
 By too severe a fate,
 Fallen from his high estate.
 And wellring in his blood. Dryden's St. Cecilia.
 2. To roll voluntarily; to wallow.
 If a man inglut himself with vanity, or welter in filthiness like a swine, all learning, all goodness is soon forgotten. Afcham.
 WEMM. n. f. [wem, Saxon.] A spot; a scar.
 Although the wound be healed, yet the wemme or scar still remaineth. Brewer's on Languages.
 WEN. n. f. [pen, Saxon.] A fleshy or callous excrescence, or protuberance.
 Warts are said to be destroy'd by the rubbing them with a green elder stick, and then burying the stick to rot in muck.
 It would be tried with corns and wens, and such other excrescences. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
 Mountains seem but so many wens and unnatural protuberances upon the face of the earth. More.
 The poet rejects all incidents which are foreign to his poem: they are wens and other excrescences, which belong not to the body. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
 A promontory wen with grisly grace,
 Stood high upon the handle of his face. Dryden.
 WENCH. n. f. [pencil, Saxon.]
 1. A young woman.
 What do I, silly wench, know what love hath prepared for me? Sidney, b. ii.
 Now—how dost thou look now? Oh ill-star'd wench!
 Pale as thy smock! when we shall meet at court,
 This look of thine will hurl my soul from heav'n,
 And fiends will snatch at it. Cold, cold, my girl, Ev'n like thy chaffity. Shakef. Othello.
 Thou wouldst periwade her to a worse offence
 Than that, whereof thou dost accuse her wench. Donne.
 2. A young woman in contempt; a strumpet.

WHENCEVER. adv. [whence and ever, or soever.] At whatso*whencesoever* ever time.
O welcome hour whenever! Why delays
His hand to execute?
Men grow first acquainted with many of these self-evident truths, upon their being proposed; not because innate, but because the consideration of the nature of the things, contained in those words, would not suffer him to think otherwise, how or whenever he is brought to reflection. Locke.
Our religion, whenever it is truly received into the heart, will appear in justice, friendship, and charity. Rogers.
WHERE. adv. [Dycol, Saxon; whar, Dutch.]

 WHICH. pron. [whic, Saxon; welk, Dutch.]
 1. The pronoun relative; relating to things.
 The apostles term it the pledge of our heavenly inheritance, sometimes the hand or earnest of that which is to come. Hooker, b. v.
 Do they not blaspheme that worthy name, by the which ye are called? Ja. ii. 7.
 In destructions by deluge, the remnant which hap to be reserved are ignorant. Bacon.
 To which their want of judging abilities, add also their want of opportunity to apply to such a serious consideration as may let them into the true goodness and evil of things, which are qualities which seldom display themselves to the first view. South's Sermons.
 The queen of furies by their side is set,
 And fratches from their mouths th' untasted meat,
 Which, if they touch, her hissing snakes the reins. Dryden.
 After the several earths, consider the parts of the surface of this globe which is barren, as sand and rocks. Locke.
 2. It formerly was used for where, and related likewise to persons: as in the first words of the Lord's prayer.
 The Almighty, which giveth wisdom to whomsoever it pleaseth him, did, for the good of his church, slay those eager affections. Hooker.

 Do you hear, sir, of a battle?
 —Every one hears that, Shakespeare. King Lear.
 Which can distinguish sound.
 Had I been there, which am a silly woman,
 The soldiers should have told me on their pikes,
 Before I would have granted to that act. Shakespeare. H. VI.
 3. The genitive of which, as well as of where, is whose; but whose, as derived from which, is scarcely used but in poetry.
 Of man's first disobedience, and the fruit
 Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal taste,
 4. It is sometimes a demonstrative: as, take which you will.
 What is the night?
 —Almost at odds with morning, which is which. Shakespeare.
 5. It is sometimes an interrogative: as, which is the man.
 Two fair twins,
 The puzzled strangers which is which enquire. Tickel.
 WHICHESOEVER. pron. [which and soever.] Whether one or the other.
 Whichever of these he takes, and how often soever he doubles it, he finds that he is not one jot nearer the end of such addition than at first setting out. Locke.
 WHIFF. n. f. [chwyth, Welch.] A blast; a puff of wind.
 Pyrrhus at Priam drives, in rage strikes wide;
 But with the whiff and wind of his fell sword,
 Th' unnerv'd father falls. Shakespeare. Hamlet.
 Who,
 If some unflin'g whiff betray the crime,
 Invents a quarrel straight. Dryden.
 Three pipes after dinner he constantly smokes,
 And seasons his whiffs with impertinent jokes. Prior.
 Nick pulled out a boatwain's whistle: upon the first whiff the tradesmen came jumping in. Arbutnot.
 To WHIFFLE. v. n. [from whiff.] To move incessantly, as if driven by a puff of wind.
 Nothing is more familiar than for a whiffing fop, that has not one grain of the sense of a man of honour, to play the hero. L'Estrange.
 A person of a whiffing and unsteady turn of mind cannot keep close to a point of controversy, but wanders from it perpetually. Watts.
 Was our reason given, to be thus puff'd about,
 Like a dry leaf, an idle straw, a feather,
 The sport of ev'ry whiffing blast that blows? Roscoe.
 WHIFFLER. n. f. [from whiffle.]
 1. One that blows strongly.
 The beach
 Pales in the flood with men, with wives and boys,
 Whose shouts and claps out-voice the deep-mouth'd sea,
 Which, like a mighty whiffler, fore the king,
 Seems to prepare his way. Shak. Henry V.
 2. One of no consequence; one moved with a whiff or puff.
 Our fine young ladies retain in their service a great number of supernumerary and insignificant fellows, which they use like whiffles, and commonly call shoeing-horns. Spektator.
 Every whiffler in a laced coat, who frequents the chocolate-house, shall talk of the constitution. Swift.
 WHIG. n. f. [whiez, Saxon.]
 1. Whey.
 2. The name of a faction.
 The southwest counties of Scotland have seldom corn enough to serve them round the year; and the northern parts producing more than they need, those in the west come in the summer to buy at Leith the stores that come from the north; and from a word, whiggam, used in driving their horses, all that drove were called the whiggamors, and shorter the whiggs. Now in that year before the news came down of duke Hamilton's defeat, the ministers animated their people to rise and march to Edinburgh; and they came up marching on the head of their parishes with an unheard-of fury, praying and preaching all the way as they came. The marquis of Argyle and his party came and headed them, they being about six thousand. This was called the whiggamors' inroad; and ever after that, all that opposed the court came in contempt to be called whiggs; and from Scotland the word was brought into England, where it is now one of our unhappy terms of distinction. Burnet.
 Whoever has a true value for church and state, should avoid the extremes of whig for the sake of the former, and the extremes of tory on the account of the latter. Swift.
 WHIGGISH. adj. [from whig.] Relating to the whigs.
 She'll prove herself a tory plain,
 From principles the whigs maintain;
 And, to defend the whiggish cause,
 Her topicks from the tories draws. Swift.
 WHIGGISM. n. f. [from whig.] The notions of a whig.
 I could quote passages from fifty pamphlets, wholly made up of whiggism and atheism. Swift.
 WHILE. n. f. [weil, German; wile, Saxon.] Time; space of time.

W H I

If my beauty be any thing, then let it obtain this much of you, that you will remain some while in this company, to ease your own travel and our solitariness. Sidney.
I have seen her rise from her bed, and again return to bed; yet all this while in a most fast sleep. Shakspeare. Macbeth.
One while we thought him innocent;
And then w' accus'd the conful. Ben. Jonson's Catiline.
I hope all ingenious persons will advertise me fairly, if they think it worth their while, of what they dislike in it. Digby.
Pausing a while, thus to herself she mus'd.
How couldst thou look for other, but that God should condemn thee for the doing of those things for which thine own confidence did condemn thee, all the while thou wast doing of them? Tillotson.
That which I have all this while been endeavouring to convince men to, is no other but what God himself doth particularly recommend.
Few, without the hope of another life, would think it worth their while to live above the allurements of sense. Atterbury.
What fate has disposed of the papers, 'tis not worth while to tell. Locke.
WHILE. } adv. [Duple, Saxon. Whiles is now out of use.]
WHILES. }
WHILST. }
1. During the time that.
Whiles I was protector,
Pity was all the fault that was in me. Shakspeare. Henry VI.
What we have, we prize not to the worth,
Whiles we enjoy it; but being lackt and lost,
Why, then we rack the value. Shakspeare.
Repeated, while the sedentary earth
Attains her end. Milton.
2. As long as.
Use your memory, and you will sensibly experience a gradual improvement, while you take care not to over-load it. Watts's Logic.
3. At the same time that.
Whiles by the experiment of this ministration they glorify God, for your professed subjection unto the Gospel. 2 Cor. ix.
Can he imagine that God sends forth an irresistible strength against some sins, whilest in others he permits men a power of repelling his grace? Decay of Piety.
TO WHILE. v. n. [from the noun.] To loiter.
Men guilty this way never have observed that the whiling time, the gathering together, and waiting a little before dinner, is the most awkwardly pass'd away of any. Spektor.
WHILERE. adv. [while and ere, or before.] A little while ago.
That curst wight, from whom I fear'd whilere,
A man of hell, that calls himself despair. Fairy Queen.
Let us be jocund: will you trol the catch
You taught me but whilere-ere? Shakspeare.
Here lies Hobbins, our shepherd whilere. Raleigh.
He who, with all heav'n's heraldry, whilere
Enter'd the world, now bleeds to give us ease. Milton.
WHILOM. adv. [Epilom, Saxon, that is, once on a time.] Formerly; once; of old.
Where now the studious lawyers have their bowers,
There whilom wont the Templar knights abide,
'Till they decayed through pride. Spenser.
In northern clime a val'rous knight
Did whilom kill his bear in fight,
And wound a fiddler. Hudibras.
Yet art thou not inglorious in thy fate;
For so Apollo, with unweeting hand,
Whilom did slay his dearly loved mate. Milton.
WHIM. n. f. [This word is derived by Skinner from a thing turning round; nor can I find any etymology more probable.] A freak; an odd fancy; a caprice; an irregular notion of desire.
All the superfluous whims relate,
That fill a female gamester's pate. Swift.
TO WHIMPER. v. n. [winmeren, German.] To cry without any loud noise.
The father by his authority should always stop this sort of crying, and silence their whimpering. Locke.
A laughing, toying, wheedling, whimpering she,
Shall make him amble on a gossip's message. Rowe.
In peals of thunder now the roars, and now
She gently whimpering like a lowing cow. Swift.
WHIMPER. adj. [I suppose from whimper.] This word seems to mean distressed with crying.
This whimpering, whining, purblind, wayward boy,
This signior Junio's giant dwarf, Dan Cupid,
Regent of love-rhimes, lord of felded arms,
Th' anointed sovereign of sighs and groans. Shakspeare.
WHIMSEY. n. f. [Only another form of the word whim.] A freak; a caprice; an odd fancy; a whim.
At this rate a pretended freak or whimsy may be paliated.
All the ridiculous and extravagant shapcs that can be imagined, all the fancies and whimsies of poets and painters, and

Egyptian idolaters, if to be they are consistent with life and propagation, would be now actually in being, if our atheistic notion were true. Ray on the Creation.
So now, as health or temper changes,
In larger compass Alma ranges;
This day below, the next above,
As light or solid whimsies move. Prior.
What I speak, my fair Cloe, and what I write, shows
The difference there is betwixt nature and art;
I court others in verse, but I love thee in prose;
And they have my whimsies, but thou hast my heart. Prior.
Oranges in whimsy-boards went round. King.
Lefs should I dawb it o'er with transitory praise,
And water-colours of these days;
These days! where e'en th' extravagance of poetry
Is at a loss for figures to express
Men's folly, whimsies, and inconstancy. Swift.
WHIMSICAL. adj. [from whimsy.] Freakish; capricious; oddly fanciful.
Another circumstance in which I am very particular, or, as my neighbours call me, whimsical: as my garden invites into it all the birds, I do not suffer any one to destroy their nests. Addison's Spectator.
WHIN. n. f. [chwyn, Welsh; genista spinosa, Latin.] A weed; furze.
With whins or with furzes thy hovel renew. Tusser.
Plants that have prickles in their leaf are holly, juniper, whin-bush, and thistle. Bacon.
TO WHINE. v. n. [panian, Saxon; weenen, Dutch; cuyno, Welsh.] To lament in low murmurs; to make a plaintive noise; to moan meanly and effeminately.
They came to the wood, where the hounds were in couples flaying their coming, but with a whining accent craving liberty. Sidney.
At his nurse's tears
He whin'd and roar'd away your victory,
That pages blush'd at him. Shakspeare. Coriolanus.
Twice and once the hedge-pig whin'd. Shakspeare. Macbeth.
Whip him,
'Till, like a boy, you see him cringe his face,
And whine aloud for mercy. Shakspeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.
All the common people have a whining tone and accent in their speech, as if they did still smart or suffer some oppression. Davies on Ireland.
Then, if we whine, look pale,
And tell our tale,
Men are in pain
For us again;
So, neither speaking, doth become
The lover's state, nor being dumb. Suckling.
He made a viler noise than twine
In windy weather, when they whine. Hudibras.
Some, under sheeps clothing, had the properties of wolves, that is, they could whine and howl as well as bite and devour. South's Sermons.
I was not born so base to flatter crouds,
And move your pity by a whining tale. Dryden. Don Sebastian.
Laughing at their whining may perhaps be the proper method. Locke.
Life was given for noble purposes; and therefore it must not be sacrificed to a quarrel, nor whined away in love. Catier.
Upon a general mourning, mercers and woollen-drappers would in four and twenty hours raise their cloths and silks to above a double price; and, if the mourning continued long, then whining with petitions to the court, that they were ready to starve. Swift.
WHINE. n. f. [from the verb.] Plaintive noise; mean or affected complaint.
The favourable opinion of men comes oftentimes by a few demure looks and affected whines, set off with some odd devotional postures and grimaces. South.
Thy hateful whine of woe
Breaks in upon my sorrows, and distracts
My jarring senses with thy beggar's cry. Rowe's 7. Shore.
TO WHINNY. v. n. [hinny, Lat. from the sound.] To make a noise like a horse or colt.
WHINYARD. n. f. [pinnan and ape, to gain honour, Saxon, Skinner.] I know not whether this word was ever used seriously, and therefore perhaps it might be denominated in contempt from whin, a tool to cut whins.] A sword, in contempt.
He snatch'd his whinyard up, that fled
When he was falling off his steed. Hudibras.
TO WHIP. v. a. [Dyopan, Saxon; whippen, Dutch.]
1. To strike with any thing tough and flexible.
He took
The harness'd steeds, that fill with horror shook,
And plies them with the lash, and whips 'em on;
And, as he whips, upbraids 'em with his fon. Addison.
2. To sew lightly.
In half whipt muslin needles usefess lie. Gay.

W H I

3. To drive with lashes.
This unheard lawfulness, and boyish troops,
The king doth smile at; and is well prepar'd
To whip this dwarfish war, these pigny arms,
From out the circle of his territories. Shakspeare. King John.
Let's whip these stragglers o'er the seas again;
Lash hence these over-weening rags of France,
These famish'd beggars. Shakspeare. Richard III.
Since I pluckt geese, play'd truant, and whipt top, I knew not what 'twas to be beaten 'till lately. Shakspeare.
If ordered every day to whip his top, so long as to make him weary, he will wish for his book, if you promise it him as a reward of having whipt his top lustily quite out. Locke.
To correct with lashes.
I'll leave you to the hearing of the cause,
Hoping you'll find good cause to whip them all. Shakspeare.
Reason with the fellow,
Before you punish him, where he heard this,
Left you should chance to whip your information. Shakspeare.
Hourly we see some raw pin-feather'd thing
Attempt to mount, and fights and heroes sing,
Who for false quantities was whipt at school
But 'other day, and breaking grammar-rule. Dryden.
How did he return this haughty brave,
Who whipt the winds, and made the sea his slave? Dryden.
This requires more than setting children a task, and whipping them without any more ado, if it be not done to our fancy. Locke.
Oh chain me! whip me! let me be the scorn
Of sordid rabblies and insulting crowds!
Give me but life. Smith's Phœdra and Hippol.
Heirs to titles and large estates have a weakness in their eyes, and are not able to bear the pain and indignity of whipping. Swift.
5. To lash with farcain.
They would whip me with their fine wits, 'till I was as crest fallen as a dried pear. Shakspeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.
6. To twrap.
His firing hath both ends neatly lapt over with another about three inches in length, and so is firmly whipt about with small gut, that it may the easier move in the edge of the rowler. Maxon's Meeb, Exer.
TO WHIP. v. a. To take any thing nimble.
In his lawless fit,
Behind the arras hearing something stir,
He whips his rapier out, and cries a rat!
And in this brainish apprehension kills
The unseen good old man. Shakspeare. Hamlet.
She in a hurry whips up her darling under her arm. L'Estr.
Raise yourself upon your hinder legs, and then stretch out your head: I can easily whip up to your horns, and so out of the well. L'Estrange.
Brisk Susan whips her linnen from the rope,
Whilst the first drizzling shower's born aloope. Swift.
Thus disposed, it lies ready for you to whip it out in a moment. Swift.
TO WHIP. v. n. To move nimble.
Two friends travelling together met a bear upon the way:
The one whips up a tree, and the other throws himself flat upon the ground. L'Estrange.
The simple 'quire made a sudden start to follow; but the justice of the quorum whipped between. Talfer.
WHIP. n. f. [Dyopan, Saxon.] An instrument of correction tough and pliant.
There sat infernal pain,
And fast beside him sat tumultuous strife;
The one in hand an iron whip did strain,
The other brandish'd a bloody knife. Fairy Queen.
Put in ev'ry honest hand a whip,
To lash the rascal naked through the world. Shakspeare. Othello.
Love is merely madness, and deserves as well a dark-house and a whip as madmen do. Shakspeare.
A whip for the horse, a bridle for the ass. Prov. xxvi. 3.
High on her head she rears two twisted snakes;
Her chain she rattles, and her whip she shakes. Dryden.
In his right hand he holds the whip, with which he is supposed to drive the horses of the fun. Addison.
Each staunch polemic
Came whip and spur, and dash'd thro' thin and thick. Dunc.
WHIPCORD. n. f. [whip and cord.] Cord of which lashes are made.
In Raphael's first works are many small foldings, often repeated, which look like so many whipcords. Dryden.
WHIPGRAFTING. n. f. [In gardening.]
Whipgrafting is done two ways: first, cut off the head of the stock, and smooth it; then cut the graft from a knot or bud on one side sloping, about an inch and a half long, with a shoulder, but not deep, that it may rest on the top of the stock: the graft must be cut from the shoudering smooth and even, sloping by degrees, that the lower end be thin: place the shoulder on the head of the stock, and mark

W H I

the length of the cut part of the graft, and with your knife cut away so much of the stock as the graft did cover, but not any of the wood of the stock: place both together, that the cut part of both may join, and the sap unite the one to the other; and bind them close together, and defend them from the rain with tempered clay or wax, as before. The other way of whipgrafting is, where the grafts and the stocks are of an equal size: the stock must be cut sloping upwards from one side to the other, and the graft after the same manner from the shouder downwards, that the graft may exactly join with the stock in every part, and so bind, and clay or wax them as before. Mortimer's Husbandry.
WHIPHAND. n. f. [whip and hand.] Advantage over.
The archangel, when discord was restive and would not be drawn from her beloved monastery with fair words, has the whi-hand of her, and drags her out with many stripes. Dryden.
WHIPASH. n. f. The lash or small end of a whip.
Have whiplash wel knotted and cartrope enough. Tusser.
WHIPPER. n. f. [from whip.] One who punishes with whipping.
Love is meerly a madness, and deserves as well a dark-house and a whip as madmen do; and the reason why they are not so punished is, that the whippers are in love too. Shakspeare.
WHIPPINGPOST. n. f. [whip and post.] A pillar to which criminals are bound when they are lashed.
Could not the whippingpost prevail,
With all its rick, nor the jail,
To keep from flaying scourge thy skin,
And ankle free from iron gin? Hudibras.
WHIPSAW. n. f. [whip and saw.]
The whipsaw is used by joiners to saw such great pieces of stuff that the hand saw will not easily reach through. Maxon.
WHIPSTAFF. n. f. [On shipboard.] A piece of wood fastened to the helm, which the steersman holds in his hand to move the helm and turn the ship. Bailey.
WHIPSTER. n. f. [from whip.] A nimble fellow.
I am not valiant neither;
But ev'ry puny whipster gets my sword. Shakspeare. Othello.
Give that whipster but his errand,
He takes my lord chief justice' warrant. Prior.
WHIPT, for whipped.
In Bridewell a number be stript,
Lesse worthe than these to be whipt. Tusser.
TO WHIRL. v. a. [hwyppan, Saxon; wirbeln, Dutch.] To turn round rapidly.
Five moons were seen to-night,
Four fixed, and the fifth did whirl about
The other four in wond'rous motion. Shakspeare. King John.
My thoughts are whirled like a potter's wheel:
I know not where I am, nor what I do. Shakspeare. Henry VI.
He whirls his sword around without delay,
And hews through adverse foes an ample way. Dryden.
With his full force he whirl'd it first around;
But the soft yielding air receiv'd the wound. Dryden.
With what a whirling force his lance he tof'd!
Heav'n's what a spring was in his arm to throw!
The Stygian flood,
Falling from on high, with bellowing sound,
Whirls the black waves and rattling stones around. Addison.
With impetuous motion whirl'd apace,
This magic wheel still moves, yet keeps its place. Gravoy.
They have ever been taught by their senses, that the sun, with all the planets and the fixed stars, are whirled round this little globe. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
TO WHIRL. v. n. To run round rapidly.
He, rapt with whirling wheels, inflames the skyen,
With fire not made to burn, but fairly for to shine. Spenser.
As young striplings whip the top for sport
On the smooth pavement of an empty court,
The wooden engine flies and whirls about,
Admir'd with clamours of the beardless rout. Dryden.
She what he swears regards no more
Than the deaf rocks when the loud billows roar;
But whirl'd away, to shun his hateful sight,
Hid in the forest. Dryden's Zen.
Wild and distracted with their fears,
They jutting plunge amidst the founding deeps;
The flood away, the struggling quadron sweeps,
And men and arms, and horses whirling bears. Smith.
WHIRL. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Gyration; quick rotation; circular motion; rapid circum-volution.
'Twere well your judgments but in plays did range;
But ev'n your follies and debauches change
With such a whirl, the poets of your age
Are tir'd, and cannot score them on the stage. Dryden.
Wings raise my feet; I'm pleas'd to mount on high,
Trace all the mazes of the liquid sky;
Their various turnings and their whirls declare,
And live in the vast regions of the air. Creech's Manilius.

W H I

Nor whirl of time, nor flight of years can waste. Creach.
I have been watching what thoughts came up in the whirl
of fancy, that were worth communicating. Pope.
How the car rattles, how its kindling wheels
Smoke in the whirl: the circling sand ascends,
And in the noble dust the chariot's loft. Smith.
2. Any thing moved with rapid rotation:
Though in dreadful whirls we hung
High on the broken wave,
I knew thou wert not flow to heai,
Nor impotent to save. Addison's Spectator.
WHIRLBAT. n. f. [whirl and bat] Any thing moved rapidly round to give a blow. It is frequently used by the poets for the ancient cestus.
At whirlbat he had slain many, and was now himself slain
by Pollux. L'Estrange.
The whirlbat's falling blow they nimbly shun,
And win the race ere they begin to run. Creach's Manil.
The guardian angels of kingdoms he rejected, as Dares did the whirlbats of Eryx, when they were thrown before him by Entellus. Dryden.
The whirlbat and the rapid race shall be Reserved for Cæsar, and ordain'd by me. Dryden's Virgil.
WHIRLBONE. n. f. The patella. Stinson's th.
WHIRLIGIG. n. f. [whirl and gig.] A toy which children spin round.
He found that marbles taught him percussion, and whirligigs
the axis in peritrochio. Arbutnot and Pope's Mart. Scrib.
That since they gave things their beginnings,
And fed this whirligig a spinning. Prior.
WHIRLPOOL. n. f. [whirl and pool.] A place where the water moves circularly, and draws whatever comes within the circle towards its center; a vortex.
Poor Tom! whom the foul fiend hath led through ford and whirlpool, o'er bog and quagmire. Shak. King Lear.
In the fathomless profound
Down sunk they, like a falling stone,
By raging whirlpools overthrown. Sandys.
This calm of heaven, this mermaid's melody,
Into an unseen whirlpool draws you fast,
And in a moment sinks you. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
Send forth, ye wife! send forth your lab'ring thought:
Let it return with empty notions fraught,
Of airy columns every moment broke,
Of circling whirlpools, and of spheres of smoke. Prior.
In the matter of the chaos, whereby the atoms must be thrust and crowded to the middle of those whirlpools, and there conspicuous another into great solid bodies. Bentley.
WHIRLWIND. n. f. [whirl and wind, German.] A stormy wind moving circularly.
In the very torrent and whirlwind of your passion, beget a temperance that may give it smoothness. Shaksp. Hamlet.
With whirlwinds from beneath the tofs'd the ship,
And bare expos'd the bosom of the deep. Dryden's Æn.
WHIRRING. adj. A word formed in imitation of the sound expressed by it.
From the brake the whirring pheasant springs,
And mounts exulting on triumphant wings. Pope.
WHISK. n. f. [whishen, to wipe, German.]
1. A small becom, or brush.
The white of an egg, though in part transparent, yet, being long agitated with a whisk or spoon, loses its transparency.
If you break any china with the top of the whisk on the mantle-tree, gather up the fragments. Swift.
2. A part of a woman's dress.
An easy means to prevent being one farthing the worse for the abatement of interest, is wearing a lawn whisk instead of a point de Venice. Child of Trade.
TO WHISK. v. a. [whishen, to wipe, German.]
1. To sweep with a small becom.
2. To move nimbly, as when one sweeps.
Cardan believ'd great states depend Upon the tip o' th' bear's tail's end;
That as the whisk'd it towards the sun,
Strow'd mighty empires up and down. Hudibras.
WHISKER. n. f. [whisk.] The hair growing on the cheek unshaven; the mustachio.
A sacrifice to fall of state,
Whose thread of life the fatal sisters
Did twist together with its whiskers. Hudibras.
Behold four kings in majesty rever'd,
With hoary whiskers and a forked beard. Pope.
A painter added a pair of whiskers to the face. Addison.
TO WHISPER. v. n. [whisperen, Dutch.] To speak with a low voice, so as not to be heard but by the ear close to the speaker.
He sometime with fearful countenance would desire the king to look to himself; for that all the court and city were full of whisperings and expectation of some sudden change. Sidney.

W H I

All that hate me whisper together against me. Pf. xli. 7.
In speech of man, the whispering or fufurru, whether louder or softer, is an interior sound; but the speaking out is an exterior sound, and therefore you can never make a tone, nor sing in whispering; but in speech you may. Bacon.
The king Accetis calls;
Then softly whisper'd in her faithful ear,
And bade his daughters at the rites appear. Pope.
It is as offensive to speak wit in a fool's company, as it would be ill manners to whisper in it: he is displeased at both, because he is ignorant of what is said.
He comes and whispers in his ear. Pope.
The hollow whispering breeze, the pliant rills
Purle down amid' the twisted roots. Swift.
TO WHISPER. v. a.
1. To address in a low voice.
When they talk of him they shake their heads,
And whisper one another in the ear. Shak. King John.
Give sorrow words; the grief that does not speak,
Whispers the o'erfraught heart, and bids it break. Shaksp.
He first whispers the man in the ear, that such a man should think such a card. Bacon's Natural History.
The steward whispered the young Templar, that's true to my knowledge. Taylor.
2. To utter in a low voice.
You have heard of the news abroad, I mean the whisper'd ones; for they are yet but ear-kissing arguments. Shaksp.
They might buzz and whisper it one to another, and tacitly withdrawing from the apostles, noise it about the city. Bent.
3. To prompt secretly.
Charles the emperor,
Under pretence to see the queen his aunt,
For 'twas indeed his colour, but he came
To whisper Wolsey, here makes visitation. Shak. H. VIII.
WHISPER. n. f. [whisper.] A low soft voice.
The extension is more in tones than in speech; therefore the inward voice or whisper cannot give a tone. Bacon.
Strictly observe the first hints and whispers of good and evil that pass in the heart, and this will keep conscience quick and vigilant. South.
Soft whispers through th' assembly went. Dryden.
He uncalled, his patron to controul,
Divulg'd the secret whispers of his soul. Dryden.
WHISPERER. n. f. [whisperer.]
1. One that speaks low.
2. A private talker.
Kings trust in eunuchs hath rather been as to good spies and good whisperers than good magistrates. Bacon.
WHIST. n. f. [whist.] This word is called by Skinner, who seldom errs, an interjection commanding silence, and so it is commonly used;
but Shakespeare uses it as a verb, and Milton as an adjective.
1. Are silent.
Come unto these yellow sands,
And then take hands;
Curt'sied when you have, and kist,
The wild waves whist. Shakespeare's Tempest.
2. Still; silent.
The winds, with wonder whist,
Smoothly the waters kiss'd,
Whispering new joys to the mild ocean. Milton.
3. Be still.
WHIST. n. f. A game at cards, requiring close attention and silence.
The clergyman used to play at whist and swobbers. Swift.
Whist awhile
Walks his grave round, beneath a cloud of smoke, Wreath'd fragrant from the pipe. Thomson's Autumn.
TO WHISTLE. v. n. [whistlen, Saxon; whistulo, Latin.]
1. To form a kind of musical sound by an inarticulate modulation of the breath.
I've watch'd and travell'd hard;
Some time I shall sleep out, the rest I'll whistle. Shaksp.
His big manly voice
Changing again toward childish treble pipes,
He whistles in his sound. Shaksp.
Let one whistle at the one end of a trunk, and hold your ear at the other, and the sound shall strike so sharp as you can scarce endure it. Eaton's Natural History.
While the plowman near at hand
Whistles o'er the furrow'd land. Milton.
Should Bertran found his trumpets,
And Torrismond but whistle through his fingers,
He draws his army off. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
He whistl'd as he went for want of thought. Dryden.
The ploughman leaves the talk of day,
And trudging homeward whistles on the way. Gay.
2. To make a sound with a small wind instrument.
3. To sound shrill.
Soft whispers run along the leafy woods,
And mountains whistle to the murm'ring floods. Dryden.
Rhætus

W H I

Rhætus from the hearth a burning brand
Selects, and whirling waves; 'till from his hand
The fire took flame, then dash'd it from the right
On fair Charaxus' temples, near the fight
Then whistling past came on. Dryden.
When winged deaths in whistling arrows fly,
Wilt thou, though wounded, yet undaunted stay,
Perform thy part, and share the dangerous day?
The wild winds whistle, and the billows roar,
The splitting raft the furious tempest tore. Pope.
TO WHISTLE. v. a. To call by a whistle.
Whistle them backwards and forwards, 'till he is weary. South's Sermons.
He chanced to miss his dog: we stood still 'till he had whistled him up. Addison.
When simple pride for flattery makes demands,
May duncie by duncie be whistled off my hands! Pope.
WHISTLE. n. f. [whistle, Saxon.]
1. Sound made by the modulation of the breath in the mouth.
My fire in caves constrains the wind,
Can with a breath their clam'rous rage appease;
They fear his whistle, and forsake the seas. Dryden.
2. A sound made by a small wind instrument.
3. The mouth; the organ of whistling.
Let's drink the other cup to wet our whistles, and so sing away all sad thoughts. Walton's Angler.
4. A small wind instrument.
The masters and pilots were so astonish'd that they knew not how to direct; and if they knew, they could scarcely, when they directed, hear their own whistle. Sidney.
Behold,
Upon the hempen tackle shipboys climbing;
Hear the shrill whistle, which doth order give
To founds confus'd. Shaksp. Henry V.
Small whistles, or shepherds oaten pipes, give a sound, because of their extreme slenderness, whereby the air is more pent than in a wider pipe. Bacon's Natural History.
Her infant grandame's whistle next it grew,
The bells she gungl'd, and the whistle blew. Pope.
5. The noise of winds.
6. A call, such as sportsmen use to their dogs.
Madam, here comes my lord.
—I have been worth the whistle. Shaksp. King Lear.
The knight, pursuing this epistle,
Believ'd he'd brought her to his whistle. Hudibras.
WHISTLER. n. f. [whistler.] One who whistles.
The prize was a guinea to be confer'd upon the ablest whistler, who could whistle clearest, and go through his tune without laughing. Addison.
WHIT. n. f. [whit, a thing; aphre, any thing, Saxon.] A point; a jot.
We love, and are no whit regarded.
The motive cause of doing it is not in ourselves, but carrieth us as if the wind should drive a feather in the air; we no
whit furthering that whereby we are driven. Hooker.
Her sacred book with blood ywrit,
That none could read, except the did him teach;
She unto him disclosed every whit,
And heavenly documents thereout did preach. Fairy Queen.
Although the lord became the king's tenant, his country was no whit reformed thereby, but remained in the former barbarism. Davies on Ireland.
Nature's full blessings would be well dispens'd
In unsuperfluous, even proportion,
And the no whit encumber'd with her store. Milton.
In account of ancient times it ought to satisfy any enquirer, if they can be brought any whit near one another. Tillotson.
It is every whit as honourable to assist a good minister, as to oppose a bad one. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 48.
WHITE. adj. [whit, Saxon; wit, Dutch.]
1. Having such an appearance as arises from the mixture of all colours; snowy.
When the paper was held nearer to any colour than to the rest, it appeared of that colour to which it approached nearest;
but when it was equally, or almost equally distant from all the colours, so that it might be equally illuminated by them all, it appeared white. Newton's Opticks.
Why round our coaches crowd the white-glov'd beaux?
Pope.
Ulysses cut a piece from the chine of the white-tooth'd boar, round which there was much fat. Broom.
2. Having the colour of fear; pale.
My hand will
That multitudinous sea incarnadine,
Making the green one red. —
—My hands are of your colour, but I shame
To wear a heart to white. Shaksp. Macbeth.
3. Having the colour appropriated to happiness and innocence.
Welcome, pure-ey'd faith, white-handed hope;
Thou hovering angel girl with golden wings,
And thou unblemish'd form of chastity. Milton.

W H I

Wert thou that sweet-smiling youth?
Or that crown'd matron, fage, white-robed truth? Milton.
Let this auspicious morning be express'd
With a white stone, distinguish'd from the rest;
White as thy flame, and as thy honour clear, Dryden.
And let new joys attend on thy new-added year.
To faithful mirth be this white hour assign'd,
And sweet discourse, the banquet of the mind. Pope.
Peace o'er the world her olive-wand extend,
And white-robd innocence from heav'n descend. Pope.
4. Grey with age.
I call you servile ministers,
That have with two pernicious daughters join'd,
Your high-engender'd battles 'gainst a head
So old and white as this. Shakespeare's K. Lear.
So minutes, hours, and days, weeks, months and years
Past over, to the end they were created,
Would bring white hairs unto a quiet grave. Shakespeare.
5. Pure; unblemish'd.
Unhappy Dryden! in all Charles's days,
Rofcommon only boasts unpotted lays:
And in our own, excuse some courtly stains,
No whiter page than Addison's remains. Pope.
WHITE. n. f.
1. Whiteness; any thing white; white colour.
A friend coming to visit me, I stopp'd him at the door, and before I told him what the colours were, or what I was doing, I asked him which of the two whites were the best, and wherein they differed? and after he had at that distance view'd them well, he answer'd, that they were both good whites, and that he could not say which was best, nor wherein their colours differ'd. Newton's Opticks.
My Nan shall be the queen of all the fairies,
Finely attired in a robe of white. Shakespeare.
2. The mark at which an arrow is shot.
If a mark be set up for an archer at a great distance, let him aim as exactly as he can, the least wind shall take his arrow, and divert it from the white. Dryden.
Remove him then, and all your plots fly sure Point blank, and level to the very white
Of your designs. Southern.
3. The albuginous part of eggs.
I'll fetch some flax and whites of eggs
To apply to's bleeding face. Shakespeare.
The strongest repellents are the whites of new-laid eggs beaten to a froth, with alum. Wifeman's Surgery.
What principle manages the white and yolk of an egg into such a variety of textures, as is requisite to fashion a chick? Boyle.
The two in most regions represent the yolk and the membrane that lies next above it; so the exterior region of the earth is as the shell of the egg, and the abyss under it as the white that lies under the shell. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
4. The white part of the eye.
Our general himself
Sanctifies himself with's hands,
And turns up the white o' th' eye to his discourse. Shaksp.
The horny or pellucid coat of the eye, doth not lie in the same superficies with the white of the eye, but riseth up as a hillock, above its convexity. Ray.
TO WHITE. v. a. [whiten, from the adjective.] To make white; to dealbate.
His raiment became shining, exceeding white as snow; so as no fuller on earth can white them. Mar. ix. 3.
Like unto whited sepulchres, which appear beautiful outward, but are within full of dead men's bones. Matt. xxiii.
WHITELEAD. n. f.
White lead is made by taking sheet-lead, and having cut it into long and narrow slips, they make it up into rolls, but so that a small distance may remain between every spiral revolution. These rolls are put into earthen pots, so ordered that the lead may not sink down above half way, or some small matter more in them: these pots have each of them very sharp vinegar in the bottom, so full as almost to touch the lead. When the vinegar and lead have both been put into the pot, it is covered up close, and so left for a certain time; in which space the corrosive fumes of the vinegar will reduce the surface of the lead into a more white coal, which they separate by knocking it with a hammer. There are two sorts of this fold at the colour shops, the one called ceruse, which is the most pure part, and the other is called white lead. Quincy.
WHITELY. adj. [whiten.] Coming near to white.
A whiten y wanton, with a velvet brow,
With two pitch-balls stuck in her face for eyes. Shaksp.
Now, governor, I see I must blush
Quite through this veil of night a whiten flame,
To think I could design to make those free,
Who were by nature slaves. Southern's Oronoko.

WHITE-

WHI

WHI'TMEAT. n. f. [white and meat.] Food made of milk. Much fatness in whitemeat is ill for the stone. Tusser.
The Irish banished into the mountains, lived only upon whitemeats. Spenser.

To WHI'TEN. v. a. [from white.] To make white. The smoke of sulphur will not black a paper, and is commonly used by women to whiten tiffanies. Brown.
Flax, the soil and climate are proper for whitening, by the frequency of brooks, and also of winds. Temple.
Women of my complexion ought to be more modest, especially since our faces debar us from all artificial whitenings. Guardian, N<sup>o</sup>. 61.

Striking her cliff, the storm confirms her pow'r;
The waves but whiten her triumphant shore.
Whether the darken'd room to muse invite,
Or whiten'd wall provoke the skew'r to write;
In durance, exile, Bedlam, or the mint,
Like Lee or Budgell, I will rhyme and print.

To WHI'TEN. v. n. To grow white. Pope.
The bark expects its freight;
The loosen'd canvas trembles with the wind,
And the sea whitens with auspicious gales. Smith.

WHI'TENESS. n. f. [from white.] Oneness who makes anything white.

1. The state of being white; freedom from colour.
This doth lead me to her hand,
Of my first love the fatal band,
Where whiteness doth for ever fit;
Nature herself enamell'd it. Sidney, b. ii.
Whiteness is a mean between all colours, having disposed itself indifferently to them all, so as with equal facility to be tinged with any of them. Newton's Opticks.

2. Paleness.
Thou tremblest, and the whiteness of thy cheek,
Is apter than thy tongue to tell thy errand. Shakespeare.

3. Purity; cleanness.
The least spot is visible on ermine; but to preserve this whiteness in its original purity, you have, like that ermine, forsaken the common track of business, which is not always clean. Dryden.

WHI'TEPOT. n. f. A kind of food.
Cornwall snub-pye, and Devon whitopot brings. King.

WHITES. n. f. [from albus.] It arises from a laxness of the glands of the uterus, and a cold pituitous blood. Quincy.

WHITETHORN. n. f. A species of thorn.
As little as a whitethorn and a pear-tree seem of kin, a cion of the latter will sometimes prosper well, being grafted upon a stock of the former. Boyle.

WHITTEWASH. n. f. [white and wash.] A wash to make the skin feel fair.
The clergy, during Cromwell's usurpation, were very much taken up in reforming the female world; I have heard a whole sermon against a whitewash. Addison.

WHITTEWINE. n. f. [white and wine.] A species of wine produced from the white grapes.
The seeds and roots are to be cut, beaten, and infused in whitewine. Wifeman's Surgery.

WHI'THER. adv. [whithen, Saxon.]

1. To what place? interrogatively.
Sister, well met; whither away so fast?
—No farther than the Tower. Shakespeare. Rich. III.
The common people swarm like summer flies;
And whither fly the gnats, but to the sun?
Ah! whither am I hurry'd? ah! forgive,
Ye shades, and let your sister's issue live. Dryden.

2. To what place? Absolutely.
I stray'd I knew not whither. Milton.

3. To which place; relatively.
Whither, when as they came, they fell at words,
Whether of them should be the lord of lords. Spenser.
At Canterbury, whither some voice was run on before, the mayor feized on them, as they were taking fresh horses. Wotton.
That lord advanced to Winchester, whither Sir John Berkeley brought him two regiments more of foot. Clarendon.

4. To what degree? Obsolete; perhaps never in use.
Whither at length wilt thou abuse our patience?
Still shall thy fury mock us? B. Johnson.

WHITHERSOEVER. adv. [whither and soever.] To whatsoever place.
For whatever end faith is designed, and whithersoever the nature and intention of the grace does drive us, thither we must go, and to that end we must direct all our actions. Taylor.

WHITING. n. f. [whittingh, Dutch; alburnus, Lat.]

1. A small sea-fish.
Some fish are gutted, split, and kept in pickle, as whiting and mackerel. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
The muscular fibres of fishes are more tender than those of terrestrial animals, and their whole substance more watery. Some fishes, as whittings, can be almost entirely dissolved into water. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. A soft chalk. [from white.]
That this impregnated liquor may be improved, they pour

WHO

it upon whiting, which is a white chalk, or clay finely powdered, cleaned, and made up into balls.
When you clean your plate, leave the whiting plainly to be seen in all the chinks. Boyle.

WHI'TISH. n. f. [from white.] Somewhat white.
The flame aqua-fortis, that will quickly change the redness of red lead into a darker colour, will, being put upon crude lead, produce a whitish substance, as with copper it did a bluish. Boyle.

WHI'TISHNESS. n. f. [from whitish.] The quality of being somewhat white.
Take good venereal vitriol of a deep blue, and compare with some of the entire crystals, purposely reserved, some of the subtle powder of the same salt, which will exhibit a very considerable degree of whitishness. Boyle on Colours.

WHI'TLEATHER. n. f. [white and leather.] Leather dressed with alum, remarkable for toughness.
Whole bridle and saddle, whitlather and nal,
With collars and harness. Tusser's Husbandry.
He bor'd the nerves through, from the heel to th' ankle,
And then knit
Both to his chariot, with a thong of whitlather. Chapman.
Nor do I care much, if her pretty snout
Meet with her furrow'd chin, and both together
Hem in her lips, as dry as good whitlather. Suckling.

WHI'TLOW. n. f. [whit, Saxon, and low, a wolf. Skinner. whit, Saxon, and low, a flame. M. Lye.] A swelling between the cuticle and cutis, called the mild whitlow, or between the periosteum and the bone, called the malignant whitlow.
Paronychia is a small swelling about the nails and ends of the fingers, by the vulgar people generally called whitlow. Wifem.

WHITSOUR. n. f. A kind of apple. See APPLE.

WHITSTER. or whiter. n. f. [from white.] A whiteners.
Carry it among the whitsters in Datchet mead. Shakespeare.

WHITSUL. n. f. A provincial word.
Their meat was whitsul, as they call it, namely, milk, four milky cheese, curds, butter. Carew.

WHITSUNDAY. n. f. [white and Sunday; because the converts newly baptized, appeared from Easter to Whitsunday in white. Skinner.] The feast of Pentecost.
Strephon, with leafy twigs of laurel tree,
A garland made on temples for to wear;
For he then chosen was the dignity
Of village lord that Whitsunday to bear. Sidney.
This they employ in brewing and baking against Whitsunday. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

And let us do it with no shew of fear;
Nor with no more than if we heard that England
Were busied with a Whitson morrice dance. Shakespeare.

WHITTENTREE. n. f. A sort of tree.

WHITTLE. n. f. [whitel, Saxon.]

1. A white dress for a woman. Not in use.

2. [whitel, Saxon.] A knife.
There's not a whittle in th' unruly camp,
But I do prize it at my love, before
The reverend'st throat in Athens. Shakespeare.
A dagger hanging at his belt he had,
Made of an ancient sword's well-temper'd blade;
He wore a Sheffield whittle in his hose. Betterton's Miller.

To WHI'TTLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut with a knife; to edge; to sharpen. Not in use.

When they are come to that once, and are thoroughly whittled, then shall you have them cast their wanton eyes upon men's wives. Hakewill on Providence.

To WHIZ. v. n. [from the sound that it expresses.] To make a loud humming noise.
The exhalations, whizzing in the air,
Give so much light, that I may read by them. Shakespeare.
Turn him about,
I know him, he'll but whiz, and strait go out. Dryden.
Soon all with vigour bend their trusty bows,
And from the quiver each his arrow chose:
Hippocoon's was the first; with forceful sway
It flew, and whizzing cut the liquid way. Dryden.

WHO. pronoun. [wha, Saxon; wie, Dutch.]

1. A pronoun relative, applied to persons.
We have no perfect description of it, nor any knowledge how, or by whom it is inhabited. Mist.
Oft have I seen a timely-parted ghost,
Of ashy femblance, meagre, pale, and bloodless,
Being all descended to the lab'ring heart,
Who, in the conflict that it holds with death,
Attracts the flame for aidance 'gainst the enemy. Shakespeare.
Were the grac'd person of our Banquo present,
Whom I may rather challenge for unkindness,
Than pity for mischance. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
The son of Duncan,
From whom this tyrant holds the due of birth, Lives in the English court. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
A man can never be obliged to submit to any power, unless he can be satisfied, who is the person who has a right to exercise it. Locke.

WHO

Tell who loves who; what favours some partake,
And who is jilted. Dryden.
We are still as much at a loss, who civil power belongs to. Locke.

2. As who should say, elliptically for as one who should say.
Hope throws a generous contempt upon ill usage, and looks like a handsome defiance of a misfortune: as who should say, you are somewhat troublesome now, but I shall conquer you. Collier against Despair.

3. Who is the genitive of which, as well as of who, and is applied to things.
Who soever sins ye remit, they are remitted; and whose soever sins ye retain, they are retained. John xx. 23.
The question whose solution I require,
Is what the sex of women most desire. Dryden.
Is there any other doctrine, whose followers are punished? Add.
It has sometimes a disjunctive sense.
There thou tell'st of kings, and who aspire;
Who fall, who rise, who triumphs, who do moan. Daniel.

WHOEVER. pronoun. [who and ever.] Any one, without limitation or exception.
Whoever doth to temperance apply
His steadfast life, and all his actions frame,
Trust me, shall find no greater enemy,
Than stubborn perturbation to the same. Fairy Queen.
I think myself beholden, whoever shews me my mistakes. Locke.
Who or thou art, that fortune brings to keep
The rights of Neptune, monarch of the deep;
Thee first it fits, O stranger, to prepare
The due libation, and the solemn prayer. Pope.
Whoever is really brave, has always this comfort when he is oppress'd, that he knows himself to be superior to those who injure him, by forgiving it. Pope.

WHOLE. adj. [whol, Saxon; heal, Dutch.]

1. All; total; containing all.
Burn the whole ram upon the altar. Ex. xxix. 18.
All the whole army stood agaz'd at him. Shakespeare.
Pierce extremes,
Contiguous might dismember the whole frame. Milton.

2. Uninjured; unimpaired.
Anguish is come upon me, because my life is yet whole in me. 2 Sa. i. 9.

3. Well of any hurt or sickness.
When they had done circumcising all the people, they abode in the camp, till they were whole. Jos. v. 8.

WHOLE. n. f. The totality; no part omitted; the complex of all the parts.
Fear God, and keep his commandments, for this is the whole of man. Becklesfites.
Begin with sense, of ev'ry art the foul;
Parts answering parts, shall slide into a whole. Pope.
It contained the whole of religion amongst the antients; and made philosophy more agreeable. Bracone.
There is a metaphysical whole, when the essence of a thing is said to consist of two parts, the genus and the difference, i. e. the general and the special nature, which, being joined together, make up a definition. Watts's Logick.

WHOLESALE. n. f. [whole and sale.] Sale in the lump, not in separate small parcels.
These are wholesale chapmen to Satan, that do not truck and barter one crime for another, but take the whole herd. Government of the Tongue.
This cost me at the wholesale merchant's a hundred drachma's; I make two hundred by selling it in retail. Addison.
Some from vanity, or envy, despise a valuable book, and throw contempt upon it by wholesale. Watts.

WHOLESOME. adj. [healsam, Dutch; heylsam, Teutonic; both from heil, Saxon, health.]

1. Sound. Contrary to un sound in doctrine.
They suffer us to famish, repeal daily any wholesome act established against the rich, and provide more piercing statutes to chain up the poor. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
'Tis no less
To govern justly, make your empire flourish,
With wholesome laws, in riches, peace, and plenty;
Than, by the expence of wealth and blood, to make
New acquisitions. Denham's Sephy.
So the doctrine contain'd be but wholesome and edifying, a want of exactness in speaking may be overlook'd. Atterbury.

2. Contributing to health.
Night not now, as ere man fell,
Wholesome and cool and mild; but with black air Accompany'd, with damps and dreadful gloom. Milton.
Besides the wholesome luxury which that place abounds with, a kitchen garden is a more pleasant sight than the finest orangery. Addison.
She held it wholesome by much,
To rest a little on the couch. Prior.

3. Prefering; salutary. Obsolete.
The Lord helpeth his anointed, and will hear him from his holy heaven; even with the wholesome strength of his right hand. Psalms xx. 6.

WHO

4. Kindly; pleasing. A burlesque use.
I cannot make you a wholesome answer; my wit's diseased. Shakespeare. Hamlet.
To wail friends lost,
Is not by much so wholesome, profitable,
As to rejoice at friends but newly found. Shakespeare.

WHOLESOMELY. adv. [from wholesome.] Salubriously; salutiferously.

WHOLESOMENESS. n. f. [from wholesome.]

1. Quality of conducing to health; salubrity.
We made a standard of the healthfulness of the air, from the proportion of acute and epidemical diseases, and of the wholesomeness of the food from that of the chronical. Graunt.
At Tonon they shewed us a great fountain of water, that is in great esteem for its wholesomeness; weighing two ounces in a pound less than the same measure of the lake water. Add.

2. Salutariness; conduciveness to good.

WHO'LLY. adv. [from whole.]

1. Completely; perfectly.
The thrust was so strong, that he could not so wholly beat it away, but that it met with his thigh, through which it ran. Sidney, b. ii.

Nor wholly lost we so deserv'd a prey;
For storms repenting part of it refo'd. Dryden.
Thus equal deaths are dealt with equal chance;
By turns they quit their ground, by turns advance:
Victors, and vanquish'd in the various field,
Nor wholly overcome, nor wholly yield. Dryden.
This story was written before Boccace; but its author being wholly lost, Chaucer is now become an original. Dryden.
They employ'd themselves wholly in domestic life; and provided a woman could keep her house in order, the never troubled herself about regulating the commonwealth. Addison.

2. Totally; in all the parts or kinds.
Metals are wholly subterranean. Bacon.

WHOM. the accusative of who, singular and plural.
Here be men in the world, whom you had rather have your son be with five hundred pounds, than some other with five thousands. Locke on Education.

WHOMSOEVER. pron. [who and soever.] Any without exception.
With whomsoever thou findest thy goods, let him not live. Gen. xxxi. 32.
Nature has bestowed mines on several parts; but their riches are only for the industrious and frugal. Whomsoever else they visit, 'tis with the diligent and sober only they stay. Locke.

WHOOBUB. n. f. Hubbub. See HUBBUB.
In this time of lethargy, I pick'd and cut most of their festival purles: and had not the old man come in with a whooobub against his daughter, and fear'd my choughs from the chaff, I had not left a purse in the whole army. Shakespeare.

WHOOOP. n. f. [See hoop.]

1. A shout of pursuit.
Let them breathe a-while, and then
Cry whoop, and set them on again. Hudibras.
A fox crossing the road, drew off a considerable detachment, who clapp'd spurs to their horses, and pursued him with whoops and hallowes. Addison.

2. [Upupa, Latin.] A bird.

To WHOOP. v. n. [from the noun.] To shout with malignity.
Treason and murder ever kept together,
As two yoke devils sworn to either's purpose:
Working so grossly in a nat'ral cause,
That admiration did not whoop at them. Shakespeare.

To WHOOP. v. a. To insult with shouts.
While he trusts me, 'twere so base a part
To fawn, and yet betray; I shou'd be his'd
And whoop'd in hell for that ingratitude. Dryden.

WHORE. n. f. [hōr, Saxon; hoere, Dutch.]

1. A woman who converses unlawfully with men; a fornicatrix; an adulteress; a strumpet.
To put out the word whore, thou dost me wo,
Throughout my book; troth, put out woman too. B. Johnson.

2. A prostitute; a woman who receives men for money.
Orontes
Conveys his wealth to Tiber's hungry shores,
And fattens Italy with foreign whores. Dryden.
We weary'd should lie down in death:
This cheat of life would take no more;
If you thought fame but empty breath;
Your Phyllis but a perjurd whore. Prior.

To WHORE. v. n. [from the noun.] To converse unlawfully with the other sex.
'Tis a noble general's prudent part,
To cherish valour, and reward desert:
Let him be daub'd with lace, live high, and whore;
Sometimes be lousy, but be never poor. Dryden.

To WHORE. v. a. To corrupt with regard to chastity.

WHO'REDOM. n. f. [from whore.] Fornication.
Some let go whoredom as an indifferent matter, which yet active for an holy-day, as for their life. Hall.

WHY

Nor can that person who accounts it his recreation to see one man wallowing in his filthy revels, and another infamous by his sensuality, be so impudent as to allege, that all the enormous draughts of the one can leave the least relish upon the tip of his tongue; or that all the fornications and whoredoms of the other can quench his own lust. South's Sermons.

WHOREMASTER. n. s. [whore and master or monger.] One who keeps whores, or converses with a fornicator.

What is a whoremaster, fool? a fool in good cloaths and something like thee. Shakespeare.

As if we were drunkards, by a planetary influence; an admirable evasion of whoremaster man, to lay his goatish disposition on the change of a star. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Art thou fully persuaded that no whoremonger nor adulterer shall have any inheritance in the kingdom of God? and dost thou continue to practise these vices? Tillotson's Sermons.

A rank notorious whoremaster, to choose, Dryden.

To thrust his neck into the marriage noose. Dryden.

If he were jealous, he might clip his wife's wings; but what would this avail, when there were flocks of whoremasters perpetually hovering over his house. Addison's Guardian.

WHO'RESON. n. s. [whore and son.] A bastard. It is generally used in a ludicrous sense.

Whoreson, mad compound of majesty, thou art welcome. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Which of the conquer'd world had made them lord;
What hope had ours, while yet their pow'r was new,
To rule victorious armies, but by you?
He worthiest, after him, his sword to wield,
Or wear his armour, or sustain his shield. Dryden.
- WIELDY. adj. [from wield.] Manageable.
- WIERY. adj. [from wiere.]
1. Made of wire: it were better written wiry.
Your gown going off, such beauteous state reveals,
As when through flow'ry meads th' hill's shadow steals;
Off with that wiery coronet, and shew
The hairy diadem which on your head doth grow. Donne.
2. Drawn into wire.
Polymnia shall be drawn with her hair hanging loose about her shoulders, resembling wiery gold. Peacham on Drawing.
3. [From wær, a pool.] Wet; wearish; moist. Obsolete.

Ev'n to that drop ten thousand wiery friends
Do glew themselves in sociable grief. Shakef.
- WIFE. n. f. Plural wives [wif, Saxon; wiff, Dutch.]
A woman that has a husband.
Your claim, fair sister,
I bar it in the interest of my wife. Shakef. King Lear.
- There's no bottom, none
In my voluptuousness: your wives, your daughters,
Your matrons and your maids could not fill up
The cistern of my lust. Shakef. Macbeth.
- Why saidst thou, she is my sister? so I might have taken her to me to wife. Gen. xii. 19.
- The wif, where danger or dishonour lurks, Safest and seemliest by her husband flays. Milton.
- The wife her husband murders, he the wife. Dryden.
- Fond of his friend, and civil to his wife. Pope.
2. It is used for a woman of low employment.
Strawberry wives lay two or three great strawberries at the mouth of their pot, and all the rest are little ones. Bacon.
- WIG. n. f. Wig being a termination in the names of men signifies war, or else a hero, from wiga, a word of that signification.
Gibson's Camden.
- WIG. n. f. [Contracted from periwig.]
1. False hair worn on the head.
Triumphing Tories and desponding Whigs Forget their feuds, and join to save their wigs. Swift.

Which might thereof distinguish ev'ry part. Daniel.
- This meaner wights, of trust and credit bare,
Not so respected, could not look t'effect. Daniel.
- A wight he was, whose very sight would Entitle him mirror of knighthood. Hadibro.
- The water flies all taste of living wight. Milton.
- How couldst thou suffer thy devoted knight,
On thy own day, to fall by foe oppress'd?
The wight of all the world who lov'd thee best,
His station he yielded up to a wight as disagreeable as himself. Dryden.
- WIGHT. adj. Swift; nimble. Out of use.
- He was so wimble and so wighty swift, Spenser's Pastoral.
- From bough to bough he leaped light,
And oft the pumies latched. Spenser's Pastoral.
- WIGHTLY. adv. [from wight.] Swiftly; nimbly.
- Her was her, while it was day-light,
But now her is a most wretched wight;
For day that was is wighty past,
And now at last the night doth last. Spenser.
- WINT. An initial in the names of men; signifies strong; nimble;
lusty; being purely Saxon. Gibson's Camden.
- WILD. adj. [wild, Saxon; wild, Dutch.]
1. Not tame; not domestick.

And bring you from a wild cat to a kate,
Conformable as other household kates. Shakef.
- Winter's not gone yet, if the wild geese fly that way. Shak.
- All beasts of the earth since wild. Milton.
2. Propagated by nature; not cultivated.
Whatsoever will make a wild tree a garden tree, will make a garden tree to have less core or stone. Bacon's Natural History.
- Goose grass or wild tanfy is a weed that strong clays are very subject to. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- The wild bee breeds in the stocks of old willows, in which they first bore a canal, and furnish afterwards with hangings, made of rose leaves: and to finish their work divide the whole into several rooms or nests. Grew's Museum.
3. Defart; uninhabited.
The wild beast where he wons in forest wild. Milton.
4. Savage; uncivilized.
Affairs that walk,
As they say spirits do, at midnight, have
In them a wilder nature, than the business
That seeks dispatch by day. Shakef. Henry VIII.
- Though the inundation destroyed man and beast generally, yet some few wild inhabitants of the woods escaped. Bacon.
- When they might not converse with any civil men without peril of their lives, whither should they fly but into the woods and mountains, and there live in a wild and barbarous manner. Daniel.
- May those already curst Essexian plains,
Where hasty death and pining sickness reigns,
Prove as a desert, and none there make stay,
But savage beasts, or men as wild as they. Waller.
5. Turbulent; tempestuous; irregular.
His passions and his virtues lie confus'd,
And mixt together in so wild a tumult,
That the whole man is quite disfigur'd in him. Addison.
6. Licentious; ungoverned.
That wild rout that tore the Thracian bard. Milton.
- Valour grown wild by pride, and pow'r by rage,
Did the true charms of majesty impair:
Rome by degrees advancing more in age,
Shew'd sad remains of what had once been fair. Prior.
7. Inconstant; mutable; fickle.
In the ruling passion, there alone,
The wild are constant, and the cunning known. Pope.
8. Inordinate; loose.
Other bars he lays before me,
My riots past, my wild societies. Shakef.
- Besides, thou art a beau; what's that my child?
A top well-drest, extravagant and wild:
She that cries herbs has less impertinence,
And in her calling, more of common sense. Dryden.
9. Uncouth; strange.
What are these,
So wither'd, and so wild in their attire,
That look not like th' inhabitants of the earth,
And yet are on't. Shakef. Macbeth.
10. Done or made without any consistent order or plan.
With mountains, as with weapons, arm'd; they make wild work in heav'n. Milton's Paradise Lost.
- The sea was very necessary to the ends of providence, and would have been a very wild world had it been without.
Woodward's Natural History.
11. Meerly

WIN

11. Meerly imaginary.
As universal as these appear to be, an effectual remedy might be applied: I am not at present upon a wild speculative project, but such a one as may be easily put in execution. Swift.
- WILD. n. f. [from the adjective.] A desert; a tract uncultivated and uninhabited.
We sometimes
Who dwell this wild, constrain'd by want come forth
To town or village nigh. Milton's Paradise Regained.
- This gentle knight
Forlook his easy couch at early day,
And to the wood and wilds pursu'd his way. Dryden.
- Then Libya first, of all her moisture drain'd, Became a barren waste, a wild of sand. Addison.
- Is there a nation in the wilds of Africa,
Amidst the barren rocks and burning sands
That does not tremble at the Roman name? Addison.
- You rais'd these hollow'd walls; the desert smil'd,
And paradise was open'd in the wild. Pope.
- WILD Basil. n. f. [acinus, Lat.] A plant.
It hath leaves like those of the lesser basil; the cup of the flower is oblong and furrow'd; the flowers are produced in bunches on the top of little footstalks, which arise from between the footstalk of the leaf and the stalk of the plants in which it differs from Cerpyllum. Miller.
- WILD Cucumber. n. f. [elaterium, Latin.] A plant.
The branches are somewhat like those of the cucumber, but have no tendrils; the fruit is prickly, and when ripe bursts with great elasticity, and abounds with fetid juice. Miller.
- WILD Olive. n. f. [oleagus, Latin, from olea, an olive, and lyos witez.] This plant hath leaves like those of the chaste tree, and a fruit like an olive. Miller.
- WILD Service. n. f. [cratagus, Lat.] A plant.
The leaves are single; the flower consists of five leaves, which expand in form of a rose. The fruit is small, and shaped like a pear, in which are many hard seeds. Miller.
- To WILDER. v. a. [from wild.] To loose or puzzle in an unknown or pathless tract.
The little courtiers, who ne'er come to know
The depth of factions, as in mazes go,
Where interests meet, and cross so oft, that they
With too much care are wilder'd in the way. Dryden.
- Oh thou! who free'st me from my doubtful state,
Long lost and wilder'd in the maze of fate,
Be present still. Pope.
- WILDERNESS. n. f. [from wild.]
1. A desert; a tract of solitude and savageness.
He travell'd through wide wasteful ground,
That nought but desert wilderness shew'd all around. F. Qu.
- When as the land she saw no more appear,
But a wild wilderness of waters deep,
Then 'gan she greatly to lament and weep. Spenser.
- O my poor kingdom, sick with civil blows!
When that my care could not withhold thy riots,
What wilt thou do when riot is thy care?
O, thou wilt be a wilderness again,
Peopled with wolves, thy old inhabitants. Shakef.
- But who can always on the billows lie?
The wat'ry wilderness yields no supply. Waller.
- All those animals have been obliged to change their woods and wildernesses for lodgings in cities. Arbut. & Pope.
2. The state of being wild or disorderly. Not in use.
The paths and bow'rs, doubt not, but our joint hands
Will keep from wilderness with ease. Milton.
- WILDFIRE. n. f. [wild and fire.] A composition of inflammable materials, easy to take fire, and hard to be extin-guish'd.
When thou rann'st up Gadhill in the night to catch my horse, I did think thou had'st been an ignis fatuus, or a ball of wildfire. Shakef.
- Though brimstone, pitch, wildfire, burn equally, and are hard to quench, yet they make no such fry wind as gunpowder. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
- Yet shall it in his boiling stomach turn
To bitter poison, and like wildfire burn;
He shall cast up the wealth by him devour'd.
No matter in the world so proper to write with as wildfire, as no characters can be more legible than those which are read by their own light. Addison's Guard.
- In flames, like Semele's, be brought to bed,
While opening hell spouts wildfire at your head. Pope.
- WILDOOSECHASE. n. f. A pursuit of something as unlikely to be caught as the wildgoose.
- If our wits run the wildgoosechace, I have done; for thou hast more of the wildgoose in one of thy wits, than I have in my whole five. Shakef.
- Let a man consider the time, money, and vexation, that this wildgoosechace has cost him, and then say what have I gotten to answer all this expence, but loose, giddy frolick?
L'Estrange.
- WILDLING. n. f. [wildlinge, Dut.] A wild four apple.

WIN

- Ten ruddy wildings in the wood I found,
And stood on tip-toes, reaching from the ground. Dryd.
- The red streak, of all cyder fruit, hath obtained the preference, being but a kind of wilding, never pleasing to the palate. Mortimer.
- The wilding's fibres are contriv'd
To draw th' earth's purest spirit, and resist
Its feculence. Phillips.
- WILDLY. adv. [from wild.]
1. Without cultivation.
That which grows wildly of itself, is worth nothing. More.
2. With disorder; with perturbation or distraction.
Put your discourse into some frame, and start not so wildly
from my affair. Shakef.
- Mrs. Page, at the door, sweating, blowing, and looking wildly, would needs speak with you. Shakef.
- Young mothers wildly stare with fear oppress'd,
And strain their helpless infants to their breast. Dryden.
- His fever being come to a height, he grew delirious, and talked very wildly. Female Quixote.
3. Without attention; without judgment.
As th' unthought accident is guilty
Of what we wildly do, so we profess
Ourselves to be the slaves of chance, and flies
Of every wind that blows. Shakef.
4. Irregularly.
She, wildly wanton, wears by night away
The sign of all our labours done by day. Dryden.
- WILDNESS. n. f. [from wild.]
1. Rudeness; disorder like that of uncultivated ground.
The heath, which was the third part of our plot, I wish to be framed, as much as may be, to a natural wildness. Bac.
2. Inordinate vivacity; irregularity of manners.
This fame starved justice hath done nothing but prated to me of the wildness of his youth, and the feats he hath done about Turnbal street; and every third word a lie. Shakef.
- He is giv'n
To sports, to wildness, and much company. Shakef.
3. Savageness; brutality.
He came in like a wild man; but such a wildness as shewed his eye-sight had tamed him, full of withered leaves; which though they fell not, still threatened falling. Sidney.
- Vainly thou tell'st me, what the woman's care Shall in the wildness of the wood prepare. Prior.
4. Uncultivated state.
Their wildness lose, and quitting nature's part,
Obey the rules and discipline of art. Dryden.
5. Deviation from a settled course; irregularity.
A delirium is but a short wildness of the imagination; and a settled irregularity of fancy is distraction and madness. Watts's Log.
6. Alienation of mind.
Ophelia, I wish
That your good beauties be the happy cause
Of Hamlet's wildness; so shall I hope your virtues
May bring him to his wonted way again. Shakef.
- WILE. n. f. [wile, Saxon; wiel, Islandick.] A deceit; a fraud; a trick; a stratagem; a practice artful, sly, and infi-dious.
Their leader by his wiles had much obtain'd,
And done much mischief on the English state. Daniel.
- My sentence is for open war; of wiles
More unexpert, I boast not; them let those Contrive who need. Milton.
- Life essay'd the surest wile, Gilding itself with Laura's smile. Roscommon.
- So Sforza, curs'd with a too fertile brain,
Lost by his wiles the pow'r his wit did gain. Dryd.
- The heart of man is so full of wiles, artifices, and deceit, that there is no guessing at what he is from his speeches.
Addison's Guardian.
- Wisdom's above suspecting wiles,
The queen of learning gravely smiles. Swift.
- WILFUL. adj. [will and full.]
1. Stubborn; contumacious; perverse; inflexible.
2. Done or suffered by design.
Sthenobœa herself did choak
With wilful cord, for wanting of her will. Fairy Queen.
- Thou to me
Art all things under heav'n, all places thou,
Who for my wilful crime art banish'd hence. Milton.
- The silent stranger stood amaz'd to see Contempt of wealth, and wilful poverty. Dryden.
- WILFULLY. adv. [from wilful.]
1. Obstinate; stubbornly.
The mother, who being determinately, least I should say of a great lady wilfully, bent to marry her to Demagoras, tried all ways which a witty and hard-hearted mother could devise. Sidney.
- Evil could she conceal her fire, and wilfully perverted she in it. Sidney.

WIL

- Religion is matter of our free choice; and if men will obstinately and wilfully set themselves against it, there is no remedy. Tillotson's Serm.
2. By design; on purpose.
That will carry us, if we do not wilfully betray our succours, through all difficulties. Hammond.
If you do not wilfully pass over any of your greater offences, but confess particularly, and repent seriously of them, God will more easily pass by your lesser infirmities. Bp. Tayl.
This let him know;
Left, wilfully offending, he pretend Surprised. Milton.
- WILFULNESS. n. f. [from wilful.] Obstinacy; stubbornness; perverseness.
So full of wilfulness and self-like is our nature, that without some definitive sentence, which being given, may stand, small hope there is that strifes will end. Hooker.
Thy causeless ruth repels;
He that his sorrow sought through wilfulness,
And his foe fetter'd would release again,
Deserves to taste his folly's fruit. Fairy Queen.
Never hydra-headed wilfulness
So soon did lose his feat, and all at once,
As in this king. Shakespeare.
A stiff and stubborn obstinacy, is not so much firmness and resolution, as wilfulness. L'Estrange.
That is not hastily to be interpreted obstinacy or wilfulness, which is the natural product of their age. Locke.
- WILLY. adv. [from wily.] By stratagem; fraudulently.
They did work willy, and went and made as if they had been ambassadors. Jef.
- WILYNESS. n. f. [from wily.] Cunning; guile.
The ungodly, for his own lust, doth persecute the poor: let them be taken in the crafty wiles that they have imagined. Psal. x. 2.
She supplied the weakness of force by wile of art, and advantage of treaty. How. Voc. Forest.
- WILL. n. f. [pilla, Saxon; wille, Dutch.]
1. Choice; arbitrary determination.
Will is the power, which the mind has to order the consideration of any idea, or the forbearing to consider it, or to prefer the motion of any part of the body to its rest, and vice versa. Locke's Works.
Two principal fountains there are of human actions, knowledge and will; which will, in things tending towards any end, is termed choice. Hooker, b. i.
Is it her nature, or is it her will,
To be so cruel to an humble foe?
If nature, then she may it mend with skill;
If will, then she at will may will forego. Spenser.
These things have a shew of wisdom in will worship and humility. Col. ii. 23.
Will holds the sceptre in the soul,
And on the passions of the heart doth reign. Sir J. Dav.
The truth is, such a man understands by his will, and believes a thing true or false, merely as it agrees or disagrees with a violent inclination; and therefore, whilst that inclination lasts in its strength, he discovers nothing of the different degrees of evidence. Atterbury.
2. Discretion; choice.
Go then the guilty at thy will chastize. Pope.
3. Command; direction.
At his first sight the mountains are shaken, and at his will the fourth wind bloweth. Eccles. xliii. 16.
4. Disposition; inclination; desire.
I make bold to press upon you with so little preparation.
Your welcome; what's your will?
He hath a will, he hath a power to perform. Drummond.
He said, and with so good a will to die,
Did to his breast the fatal point apply,
It found his heart. Dryden.
5. Power; government.
Deliver me not over unto the will of mine enemies. Psal.
He had the will of his maid before he could go; he had the mastery of his parents ever since he could prattle; and why, now he is grown up, must he be restrained? Locke.
6. Divine determination.
I would give a thousand furlongs of sea for an acre of barren ground. The wills above be done; but I would fain die a dry death. Shakespeare.
7. Testament; disposition of a dying man's effects.
Another branch of their revenue still Remains, beyond their boundless right to kill,
Their father yet alive, impower'd to make a will. Dryd.
Do men make their last wills by word of mouth only?
Stephen's Sermons.
8. Good-will. Favour; kindness.
I'll to the doctor, he hath my good-will,
And none but he to marry with Nan Page. Shakespeare.
9. Good-will. Right intention.
Some preach Christ of envy, and some of good will. Phil. i. 15.

WIL

10. Ill-will. Malice; malignity.
11. [Contracted from William.] Will with a wife, Jack with a lantern.
Will with the wife is of a round figure, in bigness like the flame of a candle; but sometimes broader, and like a bundle of twigs set on fire. It sometimes gives a brighter light than that of a wax-candle; at other times more obscure, and of a purple colour. When viewed near at hand, it shines less than at a distance. They wander about in the air, not far from the surface of the earth; and are more frequent in places that are unctuous, mouldy, marshy, and abounding with reeds. They haunt burying places, places of execution, dunghills. They commonly appear in summer, and at the beginning of autumn, and are generally at the height of about six feet from the ground. Now they dilate themselves, and now contract. Now they go on like waves, and rain as it were sparks of fire; but they burn nothing. They follow those that run away, and fly from those that follow them. Some that have been caught were observed to consist of a shining, viscous, and gelatinous matter, like the spawn of frogs, not hot or burning, but only shining; so that the matter seems to be phosphorus, prepared and raised from putrified plants or carcasses by the heat of the sun; which is condensed by the cold of the evening, and then shines. Musch.
Will-a-wisp misleads night-faring clowns,
O'er hills and sinking bogs. Gay.
- To WILL. v. a. [wiltgon, Gothick; pillan, Saxon; willen, Dutch.]
1. To desire that any thing should be, or be done.
To will, is to bend our souls to the having or doing of that which they see to be good. Hooker.
Let Richard be restored to his blood,
As will the rest; so wilteth Winchester. Shakespeare.
I speak not of God's determining his own will, but his pre-determining the acts of our will. There is as great difference betwixt these two, as betwixt my willing a lawful thing myself, and my inducing another man to do that which is unlawful. Hammond on Fundamentals.
Whoever wills the doing of a thing, if the doing of it be in his power, he will certainly do it; and whoever does not do that thing, which he has in his power to do, does not properly will it. South.
A man that sits still, is said to be at liberty, because he can walk if he wills it. Locke.
2. To be inclined or resolved to have.
She's too rough for me;
There, there, Hortensio, will you any wife? Shakespeare.
3. To command; to direct.
St. Paul did will them of Corinth, every man to lay up somewhat on the Sunday, and to relieve it in store for the church of Jerusalem, for the relief of the poor there. Hooker.
How rarely does it meet with this time's guile,
When man was willed to love his enemies. Shakespeare.
Our battle is more full of names than yours,
Our men more perfect in the use of arms,
Our armour all as strong, our cause the best;
Then reason wills our hearts should be as good. Shakespeare.
He willed him to be of good comfort, promising to bestow upon him whatsoever he should win.
If they had any business, his Majesty willed that they should attend. Carendon.
4. To work, which duty binds me to fulfil. Dryden.
It has a loose and slight signification.
Let the circumstances of life be what, or where they will, a man should never neglect improvement.
5. It is one of the signs of the future tense; of which it is difficult to show or limit the signification.
I will come. I am determined to come; importing choice.
Thou wilt come. It must be so that thou must come; importing necessity.
Wilt thou come? Hast thou determined to come? importing choice.
He will come. He is resolved to come; or it must be that he must come, importing either choice or necessity.
It will come. It must be so that it must come; importing necessity.
The plural follows the analogy of the singular.
- WILL and WILL, among the English Saxons, as wiele at this day among the Germans, signified many. So willimus is the defender of many; wilfrid, peace to many; which are answered in sense and signification by Polymachus, Poly-crates, and Polyphilus. Gib. Camd.
- WILLING. adj. [from will.]
1. Inclined to any thing.
He willing to please one in authority, forced all his skill to make the resemblance of the best fashion. Wisd.
Some other able, and as willing, pays
The rigid satisfaction. Milton.
Can any man trust a better support under affliction, than the friendship of Omnipotence, who is both able and willing, and knows how to relieve him?
2. Pleased;

WIL

2. Pleased; desirous.
3. Favourable; well disposed to any thing.
3. As many as were willing hearted brought bracelets and ear-rings. Ex. xxxv. 22.
4. Ready; complying.
Religion hath force to qualify all sorts of men, to make governors the apter to rule with conscience, inferiors for conscience sake the willing to obey. Hooker.
We've willing dames enough. Shakespeare.
He stoop'd with weary wings and willing feet. Milt.
5. Chosen.
They're held with his melodious harmony,
In willing chains, and sweet captivity. Milton.
6. Spontaneous.
Forbear, if thou hast pity,
These groans proceed not from a senseless plant,
No spouts of blood run willing from a tree. Dryden.
7. Consenting.
How can hearts not free serve willing. Milton.
- WILLINGLY. adv. [from will.]
1. With one's own consent; without dislike; without reluctance.
That preservation of peace and unity amongst Christian churches should be by all good means procured, we join most willingly and gladly with them. Hooker.
I dare not make myself so guilty,
To give up willingly that noble title
Your matter wed me to. Shakespeare.
This ransom, if my whole inheritance
May compass, it shall willingly be paid. Milton.
2. By one's own desire.
The condition of that people is not so much to be envied as some would willingly represent it. Addison.
- WILLINGNESS. n. f. [from willing.] Consent; freedom from reluctance; ready compliance.
We praise the things we hear with much more willingness, than those we see; because we envy the present, and reverence the past, thinking ourselves intruded by the one, and overlaid by the other. Ben. Johnson.
It is not doing good after that same wonderful manner, that Christ's example obligeth us unto, but to a like willingness and readiness to do good as far as our power reacheth. Calamy.
Force never yet a generous mind did gain;
We yield on parley; but are storm'd in vain;
Confront, in all things, makes the pleasure less,
Sweet is the love which comes with willingness. Dryden.
- WILLOW. n. f. [pelie, Saxon; salix, Lat. gwillow, Welsh.] A tree worn by forlorn lovers.
It hath amentaceous flowers consisting of several stamina, which are collected into a spike but are barren. The embryos are produced upon different trees from the male flowers, and afterwards become a fruit or husk, shaped like a cone, opening in two parts, and containing downy seeds. Mil.
I offered him my company to a willow tree, to make him a garland, as being forsaken, to bind him up a rod, as being worthy to be whipt.
In such a night
Stood Dido with a willow in her hand
Upon the wild sea banks. Shakespeare.
Tell him, in hope he'll prove a widower shortly,
I wear the willow garland for his sake. Shakespeare.
When heaven's burning eye the fields invades,
To marishes he resorts, obscur'd with reeds,
And hoary willows, which the moisture feeds.
Afflicted Israel shall sit weeping down,
Their harps upon the neighbouring willows hung,
Nor joyous hymn encouraging their tongue. Prior.
- WILLOWISH. adj. [willom.] Resembling the colour of willow. Make his body with greenish coloured crewel, or willowish colour. Walton.
- WILLOWWORT. n. f. A plant.
The flower consists of several leaves, produced from the inclosures of the flower-cup, placed circularly, and expanded like a rose; from the centre of the flower-cup rises the pointal, which becomes a fruit of two cells, full of small seeds, wrapped up in the flower-cup. Miller.
- WILY. adj. [from wile.] Cunning; sly; full of stratagem; fraudulent.
They are so cautious and wily headed, especially being men of small practice in law matters, that you would wonder whence they borrow such subtilities and shifts. Spenser.
In the wily snake
Whatever slights, none would suspicions mark
As from his wit, and native subtilty Proceeding. Milton's Par. Lost.
Since this false, wily, doubling disposition of mind, is so intolerably mischievous to society, God is sometimes pleased, in mere compassion to men, to give them warning of it, by setting some odd mark upon such Cains. South's Serm.
My wily nurse by long experience found,
And first discover'd to my soul its wound;
'Tis love laid the WIMBLE. n. f. [wimpele, old Dutch, from wimelen, to bore.] An instrument with which holes are bored.

- At harvest-home, trembling to approach
The little barrel, which he fears to broach:
He says the wimble, often draws it back,
And deals to thirsty servants but a smack. Dryd.
As when a shipwright stands his workmen o'er,
Who ply the wimble some huge beam to bore;
Urg'd on all hands it nimbly spins about,
The grain deep-piercing till it scoops it out. Pope.
The trepan is like a wimble, used by joiners. Sharp.
- WIMBLE. adj. Active; nimble; shifting to and fro. Such seems to be the meaning here.
He was so wimble and so wight,
From bough to bough he leaped light,
And oft the pumies latched:
Therewith afraid I ran away;
But he that earst seem'd but to play,
A shaft in earnest finished. Spenser.
- WIMPLE. n. f. [guimpe, Fr.] A hood; a veil. It is printed in Spenser perhaps by mistake wimble.
So fair and fresh, as fairest flower in May,
For she had laid her mournful stole aside,
And widow-like sad wimble thrown away. Fairy Q.
The Lord will take away the changeable suits of apparel, and the wimples, and the crisping-pins. Israel ii. 22.
- To WIMPLE. v. a. To draw down as a hood or veil.
The fame did hide,
Under a veil that wimpled was full low. Fairy Q.
- WIN. Whether initial or final in the names of men, may either denote a masculine temper, from pin, which signifies in Saxon, war, strength, &c. or else the general love and esteem he hath among the people; from the Saxon pine, i. e. dear, beloved. In the name of places it implies a battle fought there. Gibb.
- To WIN. v. a. [Pret. wan and won; part. pas. won, pinna, Saxon; winnen, Dutch.]
1. To gain by conquest.
The town of Gaza where the enemy lay encamped, was not so strong but it might be won. Knoles.
His whole descent, who thus shall Canaan win. Milton.
Follow cheerful to the trembling town;
Press but an entrance, and presume it won. Dryden.
2. To gain the victory in a contest.
Loyalty is still the same
Whether it win or lose the game:
True as the dial to the sun,
Altho' it be not shin'd upon. Hudibras, b. iii.
I five years at Tarentum won
The questorship, and then our love began. Denham.
Thy well breath'd horse
Impels the flying car and wins the course. Dryd.
3. To gain something withheld.
Resolv'd to win, he meditates the way,
By force to ravish, or by fraud betray. Pope.
4. To obtain.
Thy virtue won me; with virtue preserve me. Dost thou love me? Keep me then still worthy to be beloved. Sidney.
When you see my son, tell him, that his sword can never win the honour that he loses. Shakespeare.
Devilish Macbeth
By many of these trains hath fought to win me. Shak.
5. To gain by play.
He had given a disagreeable vote in parliament, for which reason not a man would have so much correspondence with him as to win his money. Addison.
6. To gain by persuasion.
They win great numbers to receive
With joy the tidings brought from heav'n. Milton.
7. To gain by courtship.
She's beautiful; and therefore to be woo'd:
She is a woman, therefore to be won. Shakespeare.
That flood witness'd his inconstant flame,
When thus he swore, and won the yielding dame. Gay.
- To WIN. v. n.
1. To gain the victory.
Nor is it ought but just,
That he who in debate of truth hath won,
Should win in arms. Milton.
2. To gain influence or favour.
You express yourself very desirous to win upon the judgment of your matter, and not upon his affections only. Bacon.
You have a softness and beneficence winning on the hearts of others. Dryden.
Thy words like musick every breast controul;
Steal thro' the air, and win upon the soul. Pope.
3. To gain ground.
The rabble will in time win upon power. Shakespeare.
4. To be conqueror or gainer at play.
Charles I will play no more to night;
My mind's not on't, you are too hard for me.
—Sir, I did never win of you before.
—But little, Charles;
Nor shall not when my fancy's on my play. Shak.

To WINCE. v. n. [guings, Welsh.] To kick as impatient of a rider, or of pain.
I will sit as quiet as a lamb,
I will not stir, nor wince, nor speak a word. Shakefp.
Room, room, for my horse will wince,
If he came within so many yards of a prince. B. Johnf.
The angry beast did straight resent
The wrong done to his fundament,
Began to kick, and fling, and wince,
As if he had been beside his fence. Hudibras.
WINCH. n. f. [guincher, French, to twist.] A windlace; something held in the hand by which a wheel or cylinder is turned.
Put a winch with the wheel. Mortimer.
To WINCH. v. a. [The same with wince, or perhaps from guincher, French, to twist; winch signifying sometimes to writhe or contort the body.] To kick with impatience; to shrink from any uneasiness.
We who have free souls,
It touches not, let the gall'd jade wince;
Our withers are unwrung. Shakefp. Hamlet.
Have these bones rattled, and this head
So often in thy quarrel bled!
Nor did I ever wince or grudge it. Hudibras.
This last allusion gall'd the panther more;
Yet seem'd she not to wince, tho' shrewdly pain'd. Dryd.
Their consciences are gall'd, and this makes them wince and fling, as if they had some mettle. Tillotson.
WINDPIPE. n. f.
There is a small red flower in the stubble-fields, which country people call the windpipe; which if it open in the morning, you may be sure, a fair day will follow. Bacon.
WIND. n. f. [pinb, Saxon; wind, Dutch; gwynt, Welsh.]
1. Wind is when any tract of air moves from the place it is in, to any other, with an impetus that is sensible to us, wherefore it was not ill called by the ancients, a swifter course of air; a flowing wave of air; a flux, effusion, or stream of
air. Muschenbroek.
The worthy fellow is our general. He's the rock, the oak not to be wind-shaken. Shak. Coriolanus.
Love's heralds should be thoughts,
Which ten times faster glides than the sun beams,
Driving back shadows over lowering hills.
Therefore do nimble-pinion'd doves draw love;
And therefore hath the wind-swift Cupid wings. Shak.
Falmouth lieth farther out in the trade way, and so offereth a sooner opportunity to wind-driven ships than Plymouth. Carew.
Wind is nothing but a violent motion of the air, produced by its rarefaction, more in one place than another, by the sunbeams, the attractions of the moon, and the combinations of the earth's motions. Cheyne.
2. Direction of the blast from a particular point. As eastward;
westward.
I'll give thee a wind.
I myself have all the other,
And the very points they blow;
All the quarters that they know
T' th' shipman's card. Shakefp. Macbeth.
3. Breath; power or act of respiration.
If my wind were but long enough to say my prayers, I would repent. Shakefp.
His wind he never took whilst the cup was at his mouth, but justly observ'd the rule of drinking with one breath. Hake.
The perfume of the flowers, and their virtues to cure shortness of wind in purify old men, seems to agree most with the orange. Temple.
It stop'd at once the passage of his wind,
And the free soul to flitting air resign'd. Dryden.
4. Air caused by any action.
On each side her
Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids
With divers colour'd fans, whose wind did seem
To glow the delicate cheeks which they did cool. Shakefp.
In an organ, from one blast of wind,
To many a row of pipes the found-board breathes. Milt.
5. Breath modulated by an instrument.
Where the air is pent, there breath or other blowing, which carries but a gentle percussion, suffices to create sound;
as in pipes and wind instruments. Bacon.
Their instruments were various in their kind,
Some for the bow, and some for breathing wind. Dryden.
6. Air impregnated with scent.
A hare had long escap'd pursuing hounds,
By often shifting into distant grounds,
Till finding all his artifices vain,
To save his life, he leap'd into the main.
But there, alas! he could no safety find,
A pack of dog-fish had him in the wind. Swift.
7. Flatulence; windiness.
It turns
Wisdom to folly, as nourishment to wind. Milton.

8. Any thing insignificant or light as wind.
Think not with wind of airy threats to awe. Milton.
9. Down the WIND. To decay.
A man that had a great veneration for an image in his house, found that the more he prayed to it to prosper him in the world, the more he went down the wind still. L'Estrange.
10. To take or have the WIND. To gain or have the upper-hand.
Let a king in council beware how he opens his own inclinations too much, for else counsellors will but take the wind of him; instead of giving free counsel. Bacon.
To WIND. v. a. [pinban, Sax. winden, Dutch. from the noun.]
1. To blow; to found by inflation.
The squire 'gan nigher to approach,
And wind his horn upon the castle wall,
That with the noise it shook as it would fall. F. 2.
Every Triton's horn is winding,
Welcome to the wat'ry plain. Dryden.
Ye vigorous swains! while youth ferments your blood,
Wind the shrill horn, or spread the waving net. Pope.
2. To turn round; to twist.
Nero could touch and time the harp well; but in government sometimes he used to wind the pins too high, and sometimes let them down too low. Bacon.
The figure of a sturdy woman done by Michael Angelo, washing and winding of linen cloaths, in which act the wings out the water that made the fountain. Wotton.
Wind the wood-bine round this arbour. Milton.
3. To regulate in action.
He vaulted with such ease into his seat,
As if an angel dropt down from the clouds,
To turn and wind a fiery pegasus,
And witch the world with noble horsemanship. Shak.
In a commonwealth or realm,
The government is call'd the helm;
With which, like vessels under sail,
They're turn'd and winded by the tail. Hudibras.
4. To nose; to follow by scent.
To turn by shifts or expedients.
Whence turning of religion's trade
The means to turn and wind a made. Hudibras.
6. To introduce by insinuation.
You have contriv'd to take
From Rome all season'd offices, and to wind Yourself into a power tyrannical. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
Edmund, seek him out, wind me into him, frame the business after your own wisdom. Shakefp. King Lear.
Little arts and dexterities they have to wind in such things into discourse. Government of the Tongue.
7. To change.
Were our legislature vested in the prince, he might wind and turn our constitution at his pleasure, and shape our government to his fancy. Addison.
8. To entwine; to encircle.
Sleep thou and I will wind thee in my arms. Shak.
You know me well, and herein spend but time
To wind about my love with circumstance. Shakefp.
Sometime am I
All wound with adders who with cloven tongues
Do hiss me into madness. Shakefp.
9. To WIND out. To extricate.
When he found himself dangerously embarked he bethought himself of all possible ways to disentangle himself, and to wind himself out of the labyrinth he was in. Clarendon.
10. To WIND up. To bring to a small compass, as a bottom of thread.
Without solemnly winding up one argument, and intimating that he began another, he lets his thoughts, which were fully possessed of the matter, run in one continued strain. Lect.
11. To WIND up. [Used of a watch] To convolve the spring; to put in order to a certain end.
I frown the while, and perchance wind up my watch, or play with some rich jewel.
Fate seem'd to wind him up for fourcore years,
Yet freshly ran he on, ten winters more:
Till like a clock worn out with calling time,
The wheels of weary life at last stood still. Dryd.
Will not the author of the universe, having made an automaton, which can wind up itself, see whether it hath stood still, or gone true. Grev.
12. To WIND up. To raise by degrees.
These he did so wind up to his purpose that they withdrew from the court. Hayward.
When they could not coolly convince him, they rais'd, and called him an heretic: thus they wound up his temper to a pitch, and treacherously made use of that infirmity. Aler.
13. To WIND up. To straiten a string by turning that on which it is rolled; to put in tune.
Hylas! why sit we mute,
Now that each bird saluteth the spring?
Wind up the slacken'd strings of thy lute,
Never canst thou want matter to sing. Waller.

O you kind gods!
Cure this great breach of his abused nature;
Th' untun'd and jarring senses, O, wind up,
Of this child chang'd father. Shakefp.
The weyrd sisters, hand in hand,
Posters of the sea and land,
Thus do go about, about,
Thrice to thine, and thrice to mine,
And thrice again to make up nine:
Peace, the charm's wound up. Shakefp. Macbeth.
To WIND. v. n.
1. To turn; to change.
So swift your judgments turn and wind,
You cast our fleetest wits a mile behind. Dryden.
2. To turn; to be convolved.
Some plants can support themselves, and some others creep along the ground, or wind about other trees, and cannot support themselves. Bacon's Natural History.
Stairs of a solid newel spread only upon one small newel, as the several folds of fans spread about their center; but these, because they sometimes wind, and sometimes fly off from that winding, take more room up in the stair-case. Moxon.
3. To move round.
If aught obstruct thy course, yet stand not still,
But wind about, 'till thou hast topp'd the hill. Dentam.
4. To proceed in flexures.
It shall not wind with such a deep indent,
As rob me of so rich a bottom here. Shakefp. As You Like It.
He winds with ease
Through the pure marble air his oblique way,
Amongst innumerable stars. Milton's Paradise Lost.
It was a rock winding with one ascent. Milton.
The silver Thames, her own domestick flood,
Shall bear her vessels, like a sweeping train;
And often wind, as of his mistress proud,
With longing eyes to meet her face again. Dryden.
You that can search those many corner'd minds,
Where woman's crooked fancy turns and winds, Dryden.
Still fix thy eyes intent upon the throng,
And, as the palfies open, wind along. Gay.
Swift ascending from the azure wave,
He took the path that winded to the cave. Pope.
5. To be extricated; to be disentangled.
Long lab'ring underneath, ere they could wind
Out of such prison. Milton.
WINDBOUND. adj. [wind and bound.] Confined by contrary winds.
Yet not for this the windbound navy weigh'd;
Slack were their sails, and Neptune disobey'd. Dryden.
When I bestir myself, it is high sea in his house; and when I sit still, his affairs forsooth are windbound. Addison's Spectator.
Is it reasonable that our English fleet, which used to be the terror of the ocean, should be windbound? Spectator.
WINDEGG. n. f. An egg not impregnated; an egg that does not contain the principles of life.
Sound eggs sink, and such as are addled swim; as do also those termed hypenemia, or windeggs. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
WINDER. n. f. [from wind.]
1. An instrument or person by which any thing is turned round.
To keep troublesome servants out of the kitchen, leave the winder sticking on the jack to fall on their heads. Swift.
2. A plant that twists itself round others.
Plants that put forth their sap hastily, have their bodies not proportionable to their length; and therefore they are winders and creepers, as ivy and bryony. Bacon's Natural History.
WINDFALL. n. f. [wind and fall.] Fruit blown down from the tree.
Gather now, if ripe, your Winter fruits, as apples, to prevent their falling by the great winds; also gather your windfalls. Everlyn's Kalendar.
WINDFLOWER. n. f. The anemone. A flower.
WINDGALL. n. f. [wind and gall.]
Windgalls are soft, yielding, flatulent tumours or bladders, full of corrupt jelly, which grow upon each side of the fet-lock joints, and are so painful in hot weather and hard ways, that they make a horse to halt. They are caused by violent straining, or by a horse's standing on a sloping floor, or from extreme labour and heat, or by blows. Farrier's Dict.
His horse infected with the falshion, full of windgalls, and sped with pavins. Shakefp. Taming of the Shrew.
WINDGUN. n. f. [wind and gun.] Gun which discharges the bullet by means of wind compressed.
The windgun is charged by the forcible compression of air, being injected through a syringe; the strife and distention of the imprisoned air serving, by the help of little falls or shuts within, to stop and keep close the vents by which it was admitted. Wilkins's Math. Magic.

WINDINESS. n. f. [from windy.]
1. Fulness of wind; flatulence.
A windiness and puffing up of your stomach after dinner, and in the morning. Harvey on Consumptions.
Orifices are prepared for the letting forth of the rarefied spirits in ructus, or windings, the common effects of all fermented liquors. Flayer on the Humours.
2. Tendency to generate wind.
Sena loseth somewhat of its windings by decocting; and,
generally, subtiler or windy spirits are taken off by incension or evaporation. Bacon's Natural History.
3. Tumour; puffiness.
From this his modest and humble charity, virtues which rarely cohabit with the swelling windings of much knowledge, issued this. Brewster on Languages.
WINDING. n. f. [from wind.] Flexure; meander.
It was the pleasantest voyage in the world to follow the windings of this river Inn, through such a variety of pleasing scenes as the course of it naturally led us. Addison on Italy.
The ways of heav'n are dark and intricate;
Our understanding traces them in vain,
Nor sees with how much art the windings run,
Nor where the regular confusion ends. Addison's Cato.
WINDINGSHEET. n. f. [wind and sheet.] A sheet in which the dead are enwrapped.
These arms of mine shall be thy windingsheet;
My heart, sweet boy, shall be thy sepulchre;
For from my heart thine image ne'er shall go. Shak. H. VI.
The great windingsheets, that bury all things in oblivion, are deluges and earthquakes. Bacon.
The chaste Penelope, having, as she thought, lost Ulysses at sea, employed her time in preparing a windingsheet for Laertes, the father of her husband. Spectator.
WINDLASS. n. f. [wind and lace.]
1. A handle by which a rope or lace is wrapped together round a cylinder.
2. A handle by which any thing is turned.
Thus do we of wisdom and of reach,
With windlasses, and with assays of byas,
By indirections find directions out. Shakefp. Hamlet.
WINDLE. n. f. [from To wind.] A spindle. Ainsworth.
WINDMILL. n. f. [wind and mill.] A mill turned by the wind.
We like Don Quixote do advance Against a windmill our vain lance. Waller.
Such a failing chariot might be more conveniently framed with moveable sails, whose force may be impelled from their motion, equivalent to those in a windmill. Wilkins.
Windmills grind twice the quantity in an hour that water-mills do. Mortimer's Husbandry.
His fancy has made a giant of a windmill, and he's now engaging it. F. Atterbury.
WINDOW. n. f. [windue, Danish. Skinner thinks it originally wind-door.]
1. An aperture in a building by which air and light are intromitted.
Being one day at my window all alone,
Many strange things happened me to see. Spenser.
A fair view her window yields,
The town, the river, and the fields. Waller.
He through a little window cast his sight,
Though thick of bars that gave a scanty light;
But ev'n that glimmering serv'd him to descry
Th' inevitable charms of Emily. Dryden.
When you leave the windows open for air, leave books on the window-seat, that they may get air too. Swift.
2. The frame of glass or any other materials that covers the aperture.
To thee I do commend my watchful soul,
Ere I let fall the windows of mine eyes:
Sleeping or waking, oh defend me still! Shakefp. R. III.
In the fun's light, let into my darkened chamber through a small round hole in my window-shutter, at about ten or twelve feet from the window, I placed a lens. Newton's Opt.
3. Lines crossing each other.
The fav'rite, that just begins to prattle,
Is very humorfome, and makes great clutter,
'Till he has wind'ed on his bread and butter. King.
4. An aperture resembling a window.
To WINDOW. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To furnish with windows.
Between these half columns above, the whole room was windowed round. Watson's Architecture.
With pert flat eyes she window'd well its head,
A brain of feathers, and a heart of lead. Pope's Dunciad.
2. To place at a window.
Would'st thou be wind'ed in great Rome, and see Thy master thus with placid arms, bending down
His corrigible neck, his face subdu'd To penetrative shame? Shakefp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

- WINDPIPE. n. f. [wind and pipe.] The passage for the breath;
the apara arteria.
Let gallows gape for dogs, let man go free,
And let not hemp his windpipe suffocate. Shak. H. V.
The wezzon, rough artery, or windpipe, is a part inservient to voice and respiration: thereby the air descendeth unto the lungs, and is communicated unto the heart. Brown.
The quacks of government, who fat
At th' unregarded helm of state,
Consider'd timely how t' withdraw,
And save their windpipes from the law. Hudibras.
Because continual respiration is necessary for the support of our lives, the windpipe is made with annular cartilages. Ray.
The windpipe divides itself into a great number of branches, called bronchia: these end in small air-bladders, capable to be inflated by the admission of air, and to subside at the expulsion of it. Arbutnot on Aliments.
- WINDWARD. adv. [from wind.] Towards the wind.
WINDY. adj. [from wind.]
1. Consisting of wind.
See what flowers arise,
Blown with the windy tempest of my soul
Upon thy wounds, that kill mine eyes and heart. Shak. Sp.
Subtle or windy spirits are taken off by incension or evaporation. Bacon.
2. Next the wind.
Lady, you have a merry heart.
—Yes, my lord, I thank it, poor fool,
It keeps on the windy side of care. Shak. Sp.
3. Empty; airy.
Why should calamity be full of words?
—Windy attorneys to their client woes,
Poor breathing orators of miseries.
What windy joy this day had I conceiv'd,
Hopeful of his deliver, which now proves
Abortive as the first-born bloom of Spring,
Nipt with the lagging rear of Winter's frost. Milton.
Look, here's that windy applause, that poor transitory pleasure, for which I was dishonoured. South.
Of ev'ry nation, each illustrious name
Such toys as these have cheated into fame,
Exchanging solid quiet to obtain
The windy satisfaction of the brain. Dryden's Juvenal.
4. Tempestuous; molested with wind.
On this windy sea of land the hend
Walk'd up and down. Milton.
It is not bare agitation, but the sediment at the bottom, that troubles and defiles the water; and when we see it windy and dusty, the wind does not make but only raise dust. South.
5. Puffy; flatulent.
In such a windy colic, water is the best remedy after a surfeit of fruit. Arbutnot on Aliments.
- WINE. n. f. [pin, Saxon; winn, Dutch.]
1. The fermented juice of the grape.
The wine of life is drawn, and the meek lees
Is left this vault to brag of. Shak. Macbeth.
Do not fall in love with me;
For I am false than vows made in wine. Shak. Sp.
The increase of the vineyards for the wine-cellars. Chron.
Be not amongst wine-bibbers, amongst riotous eaters. Prov.
Thy garments like him that treadeth in the wine-fat. Jef. ix. 4.
They took old facks upon their asses, and wine-bottles old and rent, and bound up. Bacon.
Where the wine-press is hard wrought, it yields a harsh wine that taltes of the grape-stone. Bacon.
His troops on my strong youth like torrents rush;
As in a wine-press, Judah's daughter crush'd.
With large wine-offerings pour'd, and sacred feast. Milt.
Shall I, to please another wine-sprung mind,
Lose all mine own? God hath giv'n me a measure,
Short of his canne and body: must I find
A pain in that, wherein he finds a pleasure? Herbert.
The firstlings of the flock are doom'd to die;
Rich fragrant wines the cheering bowl supply. Pope.
If the hoghead falls short, the wine-cooper had not fill'd it in proper time. Swift's Directions to the Butler.
2. Preparations of vegetables by fermentations, called by the general name of wines, have quite different qualities from the plant; for no fruit, taken crude, has the intoxicating quality of wine. Arbutnot.
- WING. n. f. [gehping, Saxon; wing, Danish.]
1. The limb of a bird by which it flies.
As Venus' bird, the white swift lovely dove,
Doth on her wings her utmost swiftness prove,
Finding the gripe of falcon fierce not fur. Sidney.

WIN

- Ignorance is the curse of God,
Knowledge the wing wherewith we fly to heav'n. Shak. Sp.
An eagle stirreth up her nest, spreadeth abroad her wings, taket them, and beareth them on her wings. Deut. xxxii.
A spleenless wind fo stretch
Her wings to waft us, and fo urg'd our keel. Chapman.
The prince of augurs, Heliotheser, rose;
Precient he view'd th' aerial tracts, and drew
A sure preface from ev'ry wing that flew. Pope's Odyssey.
2. A fan to winnow.
Wing, carthave, and bushel, peck, ready at hand. Tupper.
3. Flight; passage by the wing.
Light thickens, and the crow
Makes wing to th' rooky wood:
Good things of day begin to droop and drowse,
While night's black agents to their prey do rouse. Shak.
Thy affections hold a wing
Quite from the flight of all thy ancestors. Shak. H. IV.
I have pursued her as love hath pursued me, on the wing of all occasions. Shak. Merry Wives of Windsor.
While passion is upon the wing, and the man fully engaged in the prosecution of some unlawful object, no remedy or controul is to be expected from his reason. South.
You are too young your power to understand;
Lovers take wing upon the least command. Dryden.
And straight, with in-born vigour, on the wing,
Like mounting larks, to the new morning sing. Dryden.
Then life is on the wing; then most the links,
When most she seems reviv'd. Smith's Phœdra and Hippol.
4. The motive of flight.
Fearful commenting
Is leaden servitor to dull delay;
Delay leads impotent and snail-paced beggary:
Then fiery expedition be my wing,
Jove's Mercury, and herald for a king. Shak. R. III.
5. The side bodies of an army.
The footmen were Germans, to whom were joined as wings certain companies of Italians. Knales's Hist. of the Turks.
The left wing put to flight,
The chiefs o'erborn, he rushes on the right. Dryden.
6. Any side piece.
The plough most proper for stiff black clays is long, large, and broad, with a deep head and a square earth-board, the coulter long and very little bending, with a very large wing.
Mortimer's Husbandry.
- To WING. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To furnish with wings; to enable to fly.
The speed of gods
Time counts not, tho' with swiftest minutes wing'd. Milt.
Who knows but he, whose hand the lightning forms,
Who heaves old ocean, and who wings the storms,
Pours fierce ambition in a Cæsar's mind,
Or turns young Ammon loose to scourge mankind. Pope.
2. To supply with side bodies.
We ourself will follow
In the main battle, which on either side
Shall be well winged with our chiefest horse. Shak. R. III.
To WING. v. n. To pass by flight.
I, an old turtle,
Will wing me to some wither'd bough, and there
My mate, that's never to be found again,
Lament 'till I am lost. Shak. Sp.
Warm'd with more particles of heav'nly flame,
He wing'd his upward flight, and soar'd to fame;
The rest remain'd below, a crowd without a name. Dryd.
Struck with the horror of the fight,
She turns her head, and wings her flight. Prior.
From the Meotis to the northern sea,
The goddess wings her desperate way. Prior.
WINGED. adj. [from wing.] Furnished with wings; flying;
swift; rapid.
Now we bear the king
Tow'rd Calais: grant him there, and there being seen,
Heave him away upon your winged thoughts
Athwart the sea. Shak. Sp.
Hie, good sir Michael, bear this sealed brief
With winged haste to the lord marshal. Shak. H. IV.
And shall grace not find means, that finds her way,
The speediest of thy winged messengers,
To visit all thy creatures? Milton's Paradise Lost.
We can fear no force
But winged troops, or Pegasean horse. Waller.
The winged lion's not so fierce in fight,
As Lib'ri's hand presents him to our sight. Waller.
The cockney is surpris'd at many actions of the quadruped and winged animals in the fields. Watts.
- WINGEDPEA. n. f. [cobrus, Latin.] A plant.
It hath a papilionaceous flower, out of whose empalement rises the pointal, which afterwards becomes a pod, for the most part round and cylindrical, filled with roundish seeds.
Miller.
- WINGSHELL. n. f. [wing and shell.] The shell that covers the wing of insects.
The long-shelled goat-chaffer is above an inch long, and the wingshells of themselves an inch, and half an inch broad; fo deep as to come down below the belly on both sides. Grew.
WINGY. adj. [from wing.] Having wings.
They spring together out, and swiftly bear
The flying youth through clouds and yielding air;
With wingy speed out-strip the eastern wind,
And leave the breezes of the morn behind. Addison.
To WINK. v. n. [pinetian, Saxon; wincken, Dutch.]
1. To shut the eyes.
Let's see thine eyes; wink now, now open them:
In my opinion, yet, thou see'st not well. Shak. Hen. VI.
They're fairies; he that speaks to them shall die:
I'll wink and couch; no man their sports must eye. Shak.
His false cunning
Taught him to face me out of his acquaintance,
And grew a twenty years removed thing.
While one would wink. Shak. Twelfth Night.
He with great imagination,
Proper to madmen, led his pow'rs to death. Shak. H. IV.
And, winking, leap'd into destruction.
In despite of all this, he runs foolishly into his sin and ruin, merely because he winks hard, and rushes violently like a horse into the battle. Taylor.
The Scripture represents wicked men as without understanding; not that they are destitute of the natural faculty:
they are not blind, but they wink. Tillotson.
If any about them should make them think there is any difference between being in the dark and winking, get it out of their minds. Locke.
2. To hint, or direct by the motion of the eyelids.
You saw my master wink and laugh upon you. Shak. Sp.
Send him a spoon when he wants a knife: wink at the footman to leave him without a plate. Swift.
3. To close and exclude the light.
While Hermes pip'd and sung, and told his tale,
The keeper's winking eyes began to fail,
And drowsily lumber on the lids to creep,
'Till all the watchman was at length asleep. Dryden.
When you shoot, and shut one eye,
You cannot think he would deny
To lend the other friendly aid,
Or wink, as coward, and afraid. Prior.
4. To connive; to seem not to see; to tolerate.
They be better content with one that will wink at their faults, than with him that will reprove them. Whitgift.
I, for winking at your discords too,
Have lost a brace of kinsmen. Shak. Romeo and Juliet.
Let not night see my black and deep desires;
The eye wink at the hand! Shak. Sp.
The king gave him great gifts, and winked at the great spoil of Bosworth-field, which came almost wholly to this man's hands. Bacon's Henry VII.
Let us not write at a loose rambling rate,
In hope the world will wink at all our faults. Roscommon.
Some faults of course with childhood end;
We therefore wink at wags, when they offend,
And spare the boy, in hopes the man may mend. Dryden.
Obstinacy cannot be winked at, but must be subdued. Locke.
Cato is stern, and awful as a god:
He knows not how to wink at human frailty,
Or pardon weakness that he never felt. Addison's Cato.
5. To be dim.
The fullen tyrant slept not all the night,
Bat, lonely walking by a winking light,
Sob'd, wept and groan'd, and beat his wither'd breast. Dry.
WINK. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Act of closing the eye.
You doing thus,
To the perpetual wink for ay might put
This ancient moral. Shak. Sp.
At every wink of an eye some new grace will be born. Shak.
Since I receiv'd command to do this business,
I have not slept one wink. Shak. Cymbeline.
The beams do reverend and strong,
Do'st thou not think
I could eclipse and cloud them with a wink,
But that I would not lose her fight so long?
It rag'd fo all night, that I could not sleep a wink. Donne.
Not write! but then I think;
And for my soul I cannot sleep a wink. Pope.
2. A hint given by motion of the eye.
Her wink each bold attempt forbids. Sidney.
The stockjobber thus from 'Change-alley goes down,
And tips up the freeman a wink;
Let me have but your vote to serve for the town,
And here is a guinea to drink. Swift.
WINKER. n. f. [from wink.] One who winks.
A set of nodders, winkers, and whisperers, whose business is to flangle all others offspring of wit in their birth. Pope.

- WINKINGLY. adv. [from winking.] With the eye, almost closed.
If one beholdeth the light, he vieweth it winkingly, as those do that are purblind; but if any thing that is black, he looketh upon it with a broad and full eye. Peacocks on Drawing.
WINNER. n. f. [from win.] One who wins.
A gamester, having lost all, borroweth of his next fellow-gamester somewhat to maintain play; which he setting unto him again, shortly thereby winneth all from the winner. Spenser.
Go together,
You precious winners all; your exultation Partake to every one. Shak. Winter's Tale.
Behew the winners; for they play'd me false. Shak. Sp.
Whether the winner laughs or no, the loser will complain; and rather than quarrel with his own skill, will do it at the dice. Temple.
WINNING. participial adj. [from win.] Attractive; charming.
Yet less fair,
Less winning soft, less amiably mild,
Than that smooth wat'ry image. Milton's Paradise Lost.
On her, as queen,
A pomp of winning graces waited still;
And from about her shot darts of desire
Into all eyes, to wither her still in sight. Milt. Parad. Lost.
Cato's soul
Shines out in every thing she acts or speaks,
While winning mildness and attractive smiles
Dwell in her looks, and with becoming grace
Soften the rigour of her father's virtues. Addison's Cato.
WINNING. n. f. [from win.] The sum won.
A simile in one of Congreve's prologues compares a writer to a buttering gamester, that flakes all his winnings upon every cast; so that if he loses the last throw, he is sure to be undone. Addison's Freeholder.
To WINNOW. v. a. [pinetian, Saxon; evanno, Latin.]
1. To separate by means of the wind; to part the grain from the chaff.
Were our royal faith martyrs in love,
We shall be winnow'd with so rough a wind,
That even our corn shall seem as light as chaff,
And good from bad find no partition. Shak. Hen. IV.
In the fun your golden grain display,
And thrash it out and winnow it by day. Dryden's Virgil.
2. To fan; to beat as with wings.
Now on the polar winds, then with quick fan
Winnows the buxom air. Milton's Paradise Lost.
3. To sift; to examine.
Winnow well this thought, and you shall find
'Tis light as chaff that flies before the wind. Dryden.
4. To separate; to part.
Bitter torture shall Winnow the truth from falsehood. Shak. Sp.
To WINNOW. v. n. To part corn from chaff.
Winnow not with every wind, and go not into every way. Eccles. v. 9.
- WINNOWER. n. f. [from winnow.] He who winnows.
WINTER. n. f. [pinetian, Saxon; winter, Danish, German, and Dutch.] The cold season of the year.
Though he were already steep'd into the winter of his age, he found himself warm in those desires, which were in his son far more excusable. Sidney.
After Summer evermore succeeds
The barren Winter with his nipping cold. Shak. Hen. VI.
Those flaws and starts
Impostors brow to fear, would well become A woman's story at a Winter's fire. Shak. Sp.
He hath bought a pair of cast lips of Diana: a nun of Winter's sisterhood kisses not more religiously; the very ice of chastity is in them. Shak. As you like it.
The two beneath the distant poles complain
Of endless Winter and perpetual rain. Dryden.
Lie'st thou asleep beneath those hills of snow?
Stretch out thy lazy limbs; awake, awake,
And Winter from thy furry mantle shake. Dryden.
Suppose our poet was your foe before,
Yet now, the business of the field is o'er,
'Tis time to let your civil wars alone.
When troops are into Winter-quarters gone. Dryden.
He that makes no reflections on what he reads, only loads his mind with a rhapsody of tales, fit in Winter-nights for the entertainment of others. Locke.
The republick have sent to prince Eugene to desire the emperor's protection, with an offer of Winter-quarters for four thousand Germans. Addison on Italy.
Stern Winter smiles on that auspicious clime,
The fields are florid with unfading prime.
To define Winter, I consider first wherein it agrees with Summer, Spring, Autumn, and I find they are all seasons of the year; therefore a season of the year is a genus: then I observe wherein it differs from these, and that is in the shortness of the days; therefore this may be called its special nature, or difference.

To WIT. v. n. [pyran, Saxon.] To know. This word is now only used in the phrase to wit; that is to say.

There is an officer, to wit, the sheriff of the shire, whose office it is, to walk up and down his bailiwick.

Yet are these feet, whose strengthless stay is numb, Unable to support this lump of clay,

Swift-winged with desire to get a grave;

As witting, I no other comfort have.

WIT. n. f. [pyre, Saxon; from pyran, to know.]

1. The powers of the mind; the mental faculties; the intellects.

This is the original signification.

Who would set his wit to fooolish a bird?

The king your father was reputed for A prince most prudent, of an excellent And unmatch'd wit and judgment.

Will puts in practice what the wit deviseth: Will ever acts, and wit contemplates still:

And as from wit the power of wisdom riseth, All other virtues daughters are of will.

Will is the prince, and wit the counsellor, Which doth for common good in council sit; And when wit is resolv'd, will lends her power To execute what is advis'd by wit.

For wit and pow'r, their last endeavours bend To outline each other.

2. Imagination; quickness of fancy.

They never meet, but there's a skirmish of wit between them.—Alas, in our last conflict four of his five wits went halting off, and now is the whole man govern'd by one.

And though a tun in thy large bulk be writ, Yet thou art but a kilderkin of wit.

WIT

- Wit* lying most in the assemblage of ideas, and putting those together with quickness and variety, wherein can be found any resemblance, or congruity, thereby to make up pleasant pictures in the fancy. Judgment, on the contrary, lies in separating carefully one from another, ideas, wherein can be found the least difference, thereby to avoid being misled by similitude. Locke.
- Cou'd any but a knowing prudent cause
Begin such motions, and assign such laws?
If the great mind had form'd a different frame,
Might not your wanton wit the system blame? Blackmore.
3. Sentiments produced by quickness of fancy.
All sorts of men take a pleasure to gird at me. The brain of this foolish compounded clay, man, is not able to invent any thing that tends more to laughter, than what I invent, and is invented on me. I am not only witty in myself, but the cause that wit is in other men. Shakespeare.
His works become the frippery of wit. B. Johnson.
The Romans made those times the standard of their wit, when they subdu'd the world. Sprat.
The definition of wit is only this; that it is a propriety of thoughts and words; or, in other terms, thoughts and words elegantly adapted to the subject. Dryden.
Let a lord once but own the happy lines;
How the wit brightens, and the style refines! Pope.
4. A man of fancy.
Intemperate wits will spare neither friend nor foe; and make themselves the common enemies of mankind. L'Estrange.
A poet, being too witty himself, could draw nothing but wits in a comedy: even his fools were infected with the disease of their author. Dryden.
To tell them would a hundred tongues require;
Or one vain wit's, that might a hundred tire. Pope.
5. A man of genius.
Searching wits, of more mechanick parts;
Who grac'd their age with new-invented arts:
Those who to worth their bounty did extend,
And those who knew that bounty to commend. Dryden.
How vain that second life in others breath?
Th' estate which wits inherit after death;
Ease, health, and life, for this they must resign,
Unsure the tenure, but how vast the fine!
The great man's curse, without the gain endure;
Be envy'd, wretched; and be flatter'd, poor. Pope.
6. Sense; judgment.
Strong was their plot,
Their practice close, their faith suspected not;
Their states far off, and they of wary wit. Daniel.
Come, leave the loathed stage,
And this more loathsome age;
Where pride and impudence in faction knit,
Ush'ring the chair of wit. B. Johnson.
Though his youthful blood be fir'd with wine,
He wants not wit the danger to decline. Dryden.
7. In the plural. Sound mind; intellect not crazed.
If our wits run the wild-goose chase, I have done: for thou hast more of the wild-goose in one of thy wits, than I have in my whole five. Shakespeare. Romeo and Juliet.
I had a son,
Now outlaw'd from my blood; he sought my life:
The grief hath craz'd my wits. Shakespeare. K. Lear.
Are his wits safe? is he not light of brain? Shakespeare.
Sound sleep cometh of moderate eating; he riseth early, and his wits are with him: but the pain of watching, and choler, and pangs of the belly, are with an unfatiable man. Ecclesiast. xxxi. 20.
Wickedness is voluntary frenzy, and every finner does more extravagant things than any man that is crazed, and out of his wits, only that he knows better what he does. Tillotson.
No man in his wits can seriously think that his own soul hath existed from all eternity. Bentley.
8. Contrivance; stratagem; power of expedients.
How can it chuse but bring the simple to their wits end? how can it chuse but vex and amaze them? Hooker.
I was like to be apprehended for the witch of Brainford; but that my admirable dexterity of wit, counterfeiting the action of an old woman, delivered me. Shakespeare.
Sleights from his wit and subtlety proceed.
The neighbourhood were at their wits end, to consider what would be the issue. L'Estrange.
9. Witcraft. n. f. [wit and craft.] Contrivance; invention.
He was no body that could not hammer out of his name an invention by this witcraft, and picture it accordingly. Camden's Remains.
10. Witcracker. n. f. [wit and cracker.] A joker; one who breaks a jest.
A college of witcrackers cannot flout me out of my humour; dost thou think I care for a satire or an epigram? Shakespeare.

WIT

- Thus to come forth so suddenly a witworm. B. Johnson.
- WITCH. n. f. [picce, Saxon.]
1. A woman given to unlawful arts.
Wife judges have prescribed, that men may not rashly believe the confessions of witches, nor the evidence against them. For the witches themselves are imaginative; and people are credulous, and ready to impute accidents to witchcraft. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
The night-hag comes to dance
With Lapland witches, while the lab'ring moon
Eclipses at their charms. Milton.
When I consider whether there are such persons as witches, my mind is divided: I believe in general that there is such a thing as witchcraft, but can give no credit to any particular instance of it. Addison's Spectator, N° 117.
2. [From pic, Saxon.] A winding sinuous bank.
Leave me those hills where harb'rough his to see;
Nor holy bush, nor briar, nor winding witch. Spenser.
To WITCH. v. a. [from the noun.] To bewitch; to enchant.
'Tis now the very witching time of night,
When churchyards yawn. Shakespeare. Hamlet.
Me ill befits, that in der-doing arms,
And honour's suit my vowed days do spend,
Unto thy bounteous baits, and pleasing charms,
With which weak men thou witchest to attend. Spenser.
I'll witch sweet ladies with my words and looks. Shakespeare.
Sit and witch me? Shakespeare. Hen. VI.
- WITCHCRAFT. n. f. [witch and craft.] The practices of witches.
Urania name, whose force he knew so well,
He quickly knew what witchcraft gave the blow. Sidney.
If you cannot
Bar his access to the king, never attempt
Any thing on him, for he hath a witchcraft
Over the king in his tongue. Shakespeare. Hen. VIII.
People are credulous, and ready to impute accidents and natural operations to witchcraft. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
What subtle witchcraft man constrains,
To change his pleasure into pains. Denham.
- WITCHERY. n. f. [from witch.] Enchantment.
Another kind of petty witchery, if it be not altogether deceit, they call charming of beasts and birds. Raleigh.
Great Comus!
Deep-skill'd in all his mother's witcheries. Milton.
- To WITTE. v. a. [pizan, Saxon.] To blame; to reproach.
The palmer 'gan moan bitterly
Her to rebuke, for being loose and light;
Which not abiding, but more scornfully
Scoffing at him, that did her justly witte.
She turn'd her boat about. Fairy Queen, c. xii.
- WIFE. n. f. [from the verb.] Blame; reproach. Spenser.
- WITH. preposit. [pið, Saxon.]
1. By. Noting the cause.
Truth, tir'd with iteration,
As true as steel, as pliantage to the moon. Shakespeare.
With ev'ry stab her bleeding heart was torn,
With wounds much harder to be seen than born. Rowe.
2. Noting the means.
Rude and unpolished are all operations of the soul in their beginnings, before they are cultivated with art and study. Dryden.
3. Noting the instrument.

Yet it must be withal considered, that the greatest part of the world are they which be farthest from perfection. Hooker.
How well supply'd with noble counsellors?
How modest in exception, and withal
How terrible in constant resolution? Shakespeare. Hen. V.
The one contains my picture, prince;
If you chuse that, then I am yours withal. Shakespeare.
This that prince did not transmit as a power, to make conquest, but as a retinue for his son, and withal to enable him to recover some part of Ulster. Davies's Ireland.
God, when he gave me strength, to shew withal
How slight the gift was, hung it in my hair. Milton.
Christ had not only an infinite power to work miracles, but also an equal wisdom to know the just force and measure of every argument, to persuade, and withal to look through and through all the dark corners of the soul of man, and to discern what prevails upon them, and what does not. South.
I cannot, cannot bear; 'tis past; 'tis done:
Perish this impious, this detested son!
Perish his fire, and perish I withal,
And let the house's heir, and the hop'd kingdom fall. Dryden.
2. It is sometimes used by writers where we now use with.

At this excess of courage all amaz'd,
The foremost of his foes a-while withdrew:
With such respect in enter'd Rome they gaz'd,
Who on high chairs the godlike fathers saw. Dryden.
Dumvir has pass'd the noon of life; but cannot withdraw from entertainments, which are pardonable only before that stage of our being. Tatler, N° 54.
- WITHDRAWINGROOM. n. f. [withdraw and room.] Room behind another room for retirement.
For an ordinary gentleman, a hall, a great parlour, with a withdrawingroom, with a kitchen, butteries, and other conveniences, is sufficient. Mortimer's Husbandry.

WIT

- WITHER. n. f.
1. A willow twig.
An Irish rebel put up a petition, that he might be hanged in a with, and not a halter, because it had been so used with former rebels. Bacon.
2. A band, properly a band of twigs; [preðe signifies a band.]
These cords and withers will hold men's consciences, when force attends and twists them. K. Charles.
Birch is of use for ox-yokes, hoops, screws, withers for faggots. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- To WYTHIER. v. n. [wepðerob, Saxon, dry, faded.]
1. To fade; to grow sapless; to dry up.
That which is of God we defend, to the uttermost of that ability which he hath given: that which is otherwise, let it wither even in the root from whence it hath sprung. Hooker.
When I have pluck'd thy rose,
I cannot give it vital growth again;
It needs must wither.
It shall wither in all the leaves of her spring. Shakespeare. Othello.
The foul may sooner leave off to subside, than to love; and like the vine, it withers and dies, if it has nothing to embrace. South's Sermons.
2. To waste, or pine away.
Are there so many left of your own family, that you should desire wholly to reduce it, by suffering the last branch of it to wither away before its time. Temple.
3. To lose, or want animal moisture.

The sun is no sooner risen with a burning heat, but it withereth the grass, and the flower thereof falleth. Jer. i. 11.
2. To make to shrink, decay, or wrinkle, for want of animal moisture.
Age cannot wither her, nor custom stale her infinite variety. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.
Look how I am bewitch'd; behold, mine arm
Is, like a blasted sapling, wither'd up. Shakespeare.
What are these,
So wither'd, and so wild in their attire,
That look not like th' inhabitants o' th' earth,
And yet are on't? Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Thy youth, thy strength, thy beauty, which will change
To wither'd, weak, and grey. Milton.
In Spain our springs, like old men's children be,
Decay'd and wither'd, from their infancy:
No kindly showers fall on our barren earth,
To hatch the seasons in a timely birth. Dryden.
- WYTHERNESS. n. f. [from wither'd.] The state of being wither'd; marcidness.
Water them as soon as set, till they have recovered their witherness. Mortimer's Husbandry.

- WYTHERS. n. f. Is the joining of the shoulder-bones at the bottom of the neck and mane, towards the upper part of the shoulder. Farrier's Dict.
Let the gall'd beast wince;
We are unwrung in the withers. Shakespeare.
Rather than let your master take long journeys, contrive that the saddle may pinch the beast in his withers. Swift.
- WYTHERRUNG. n. f. Witherung sometimes is caused by a bite of a horse, or by a saddle being unfit, especially when the bows are too wide; for when they are so, they bruise the flesh against the spines of the second and third vertebrae of the back, which forms that prominence that rises above their shoulders. Farrier's Dict.
- To WYTHOLD. v. a. [with and hold.] Withheld, or withheld, pret. and part.
1. To restrain; to keep from action; to hold back.
That hand, which as no kind of imminent danger could cause at first to withhold itself, so neither have any practices, so many, so bloody, following since, been ever able to make weary. Hooker, b. iv.
Sith mine he is, or free or bound;
Withhold, O sovereign prince, your hasty hand
From knitting league with him. Spenser.
The prince
Would fain have come with me to meet your grace;
And by his mother was perforce withheld. Shakespeare.
Be careful to withhold
Your talons from the wretched and the bold:
Tempt not the brave and needy to despair;
For though your violence should leave them bare (Of gold and silver, swords and darts remain. Dryden.
Volition is an act of the mind, knowingly exerting that dominion it takes itself to have over any part of man, by employing it in, or withholding it from any particular action. Locke.

2. To keep back; to refuse.
What difficulties there are, which as yet withhold our assent, till we be further and better satisfied, I hope no indifferent amongst them will scorn or refuse to hear. Hooker.
Soon as Titan 'gan his head exalt,
And soon again as he his light withbault,
Their wicked engines they against it bent. Fairy Queen.
WITHHOLDEN. part. pass. of withhold.
The word keep back, sheweth, that it was a thing formerly due unto God; for we cannot say that any thing is kept back, or withholden, that was not due before. Spelman.
WITHHOLDER. n. f. [from withhold] e who withholds.
WITH'N. prep. [from within, Saxon.]
1. In the inner part of.
Who then shall blame
His peffer'd senses to recoil and start,
When all that is within him does condemn Itself for being there. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
By this means, not only many helpless persons will be provided for, but a generation of men will be bred up, within ourselves, not perverted by any other hopes. Sprat.
'Till this be cur'd by religion, it is as impossible for a man to be happy, that is, pleased and contented within himself, as it is for a sick man to be at ease. Tillotson.
The river is afterwards wholly lost within the waters of the lake, that one discovers nothing like a stream, till within about a quarter of a mile from Geneva. Addison.
2. In the compass of; not beyond; used both of place and time.
Next day we saw, within a kenning before us, thick clouds, which put us in hope of land. Bacon.

Be inform'd how much your husband's revenue amounts to, and be so good a computer, as to keep within it. Swift.
8. In the inclosure of.
No interwoven reeds a garland made,
To hide his brows within the vulgar shade;
But poplar wreaths around his temples spread. Addison.
Sedentary and within-door arts, and delicate manufactures, that require rather the finger than the arm, have a contrariety to a military disposition. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
WITH'N. adv.
1. In the inner parts; inwardly; internally.
This is yet the outward, fairest side
Of our design. Within rests more of fear,
More dread of sad event yet undecy'd. Daniel.
Death thou hast seen
In his first shape on man; but many shapes
Of death, and many are the ways that lead
To his grim cave; all dismal! yet to sense
More terrible at th' entrance, than within. Milton.

WITTED. adj. [from wit.] Having wit; as a quick witted boy.
WITTING. n. f. [from witty.] A mean attempt at wit.
We have a libertine fooling even in his last agonies, with a witticism between his teeth, without any regard to sobriety and confidence. L'Estrange.
He is full of conceptions, points of epigram and witticism, all which are below the dignity of heroic verse. Addison.
WITTY. adv. [from witty.]
1. Ingeniously; cunningly; artfully.
But is there any other beast that lives,
Who his own harm so wittily contrives? Dryden.
2. With flight of imagination.
In conversation wittily pleasant, pleasantly gamefome. Sidney.
The old hermit, that never saw pen and ink, very wittily said to a niece of king Gordobuck, that that is, is. Shakespeare.
The obstinate contemners of all helps and arts, such as presuming on their own natural parts, dare deride all diligence, and seem to mock at the terms when they understand not the things; think that way to get off wittily with their ignorance. Ben. Johnson.
WITTINGLY. n. f. [from witty.] The quality of being witty.
No less deserveth his wittiness in devising, his pithiness in uttering, his pastoral rudeness and his moral wisdom. Spenser.
WITTINGLY. adv. [from witting, knowing; pran, Saxon, to weet or know.] Knowingly; not ignorantly; with knowledge; by design.
Whatever we work as men, the same we do wittingly work and freely; neither are we, according to the manner of natural agents any way so tied, but that it is in our power to leave things we do undone. Hooker.
Withhold revenge, 'tis not my fault,
Nor wittingly have I infring'd my vow. Shak. Henry VI.
During that dreadful siege, every particular accident for brevity I wittingly pass over. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.

2. Full of imagination.
Historics make men wise, poets witty, the mathematick subtle. Bacon.
Where there is a real stock of wit, yet the wittiest sayings will be found in a great measure the issues of chance. South.

WOE

In gentle verse the witty told their flame,
And grac'd their choicest songs with Emma's name. Prior.
3. Sarcastick; full of taunts.
Honeycomb, who was so unmercifully witty upon the women, has given the ladies ample satisfaction by marrying a farmer's daughter. Addison's Spectator.
WITWAL. n. f. A bird. Answer.
To WIVE. v. n. [from wife.] To marry; to take a wife.
Were she as rough
As are the swelling Adriatick seas,
I come to wive it wealthily in Padua. Shakespeare.
The ancient saying is no heresy,
Hanging and wiving goes by destiny. Shakespeare.
A shop of all qualities that man loves woman for; besides that hook of wiving, fairness, which strikes the eye. Shakespeare.
Design or chance makes others wive,
But nature did this match contrive. Waller.
To WIVE. v. a.
1. To match to a wife.
She dying gave it me;
And bid me, when my fate would have me wiv'd,
To give it her. Shakespeare's Othello.
2. To take for a wife.
If he have the condition of a saint, and the complexion of a devil, I had rather he should thrive me than wive me. Shakespeare.
WIVELY. adv. [from wiver.] Belonging to a wife.
Basilus could not abstain from praising Parthenia, as the perfect picture of a womanly virtue, and wively faithfulness. Sid.
WIVES. n. f. The plural of wife.
A man of his learning should not so lightly have been carried away with old wives tales, from approbation of his own reason. Spenser's Ireland.
WIZARD. n. f. [from wife.] A conjurer; an enchanter; a he-witch. It had probably at first a laudable meaning.
Patience, good lady; wizards know their times. Shakespeare.
He hearkens after prophecies and dreams,
And from the cross-row plucks the letter G;
And says, a wizard told him that by G
His issue disinherited should be. Shakespeare's Richard III.
That damn'd wizard, hid in fly disguise,
For so by certain signs I knew, had met Already, ere my best speed could prevent
The aidless innocent lady his wiv'd prey. Milton.
The prophecies of wizards old Increases'd her terror, and her fall foretold. Waller.
The wily wizard must be caught,
For, unconstrain'd, he nothing tells for nought. Dryden.
WO. n. f. [from wife.] Grief; sorrow; misery; calamity.
1. Grief; sorrow; misery; calamity.
The king is mad; how stiff is my vile sense,
That I stand up and have ingenious feeling
Of my huge sorrows! better I were distract;
So should my thoughts be fever'd from my griefs;
And woes by wrong imaginations, lose
The knowledge of themselves. Shakespeare's King Lear.
So many miseries have craz'd my voice,
That my woe weary'd tongue is still. Shakespeare.
Her rash hand in evil hour,
Forth reaching to the fruit, Eve pluck'd, the eat:
Earth felt the wound; and nature from her seat
Sighing through all her works, gave signs of woe
That all was lost. Milton's Paradise Lost.
O'er dreary wastes, they weep each other's woe. Pope.
2. It is often used in denunciations, wo be; or in exclamations of sorrow wo is; anciently wo wurth; pa puppy, Saxon.
All is but lip wisdom which wants experience: I now, wo is me, do try what love can do. Sidney.
Wo is my heart;
That poor soldier, that so richly fought,
Whose rags sham'd gilded arms; whose naked breast
Stept before shields of proof, cannot be found. Shakespeare.
Many of our princes, woe the while!
Lie drown'd and foak'd in mercenary blood. Shakespeare.
Happy are they which have been my friends; and woe to my lord chief-justice. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
Howl ye, wo worth the day. Ezek. xxx. 2.
Wo be to the shepherds of Israel that do feed themselves. Ez.
Wo is me for my hurt, my wound is grievous. Jer. x. 19.
If God be such a being as I have described, wo to the world if it were without him: this would be a thousand times greater loss to mankind than the extinguishing of the sun. Tillotson.
Wo to the vanquish'd, woe!
3. A denunciation of calamity; a curse.
Can there be a wo or curse in all the flocks of vengeance equal to the malignity of such a practice; of which one single instance could involve all mankind in one universal confusion.
4. Wo seems in phrases of denunciation or imprecation to be a substantive; and in exclamation an adjective, as particularly in the following lines.
Wo are we, fir! you may not live to wear
All your true followers out. Shak. Antony and Cleopatra.

WOL

5. Wo is used by Shakespeare for a stop or cessation; from the particle wo pronounced by carters to their horses when they would have them stop.
Love's a mighty lord;
And hath so humbled me, as, I confess,
There is no wo to his correction. Shakespeare.
WOAD. n. f. [from wo, Saxon.] A plant, which grows in the form of a cross; out of whose flower cup rises the point, at which afterwards turns to a fruit in the shape of a tongue, flat at the edge, gaping two ways, having but one cell, in which is contained for the most part one oblong seed; is cultivated in England for the use of dyers, who use it for laying the foundation of many colours. Miller.
In times of old, when British nymphs were known
To love no foreign fashions like their own;
When drefs was monstrous, and fig-leaves the mode,
And quality put on no paint but woad. Garth.
WOEGONE. n. f. [from wo and gone.] A lost in wo; distracted in wo; overwhelmed with sorrow.
Such a man, who to himself said
So dull, so dead in look, so woe-gone,
Drew Priam's curtain in the dead of night,
And would have told him half his Troy was burn'd;
But Priam found the fire, ere he his tongue. Shakespeare.
Tancred he saw his life's joy set at naught,
So woe-gone was he with pains of love. Fairfax.
WOFT. The obsolete participle passive from To WAT.
A braver choice of dauntless spirits
Than now the English bottoms have woft,
Did never float upon the swelling tide. Shakespeare.
WOFUL. adj. [from wo and full.]
1. Sorrowful; afflicted; mourning.
The woful Gynecia, to whom rest was no ease, had left her loathed lodgings, and gotten herself into the solitary places those deserts were full of. Sidney.
How many woful widows left to bow
To sad disgrace! Daniel's Civil War.
In a tow'r, and never to be loos'd,
The woful captive kinsmen are inclos'd, Dryden.
2. Calamitous; afflictive.
3. Wretched; paltzy; sorry.
What woful stuff this madrigal would be,
In some star'd hackney-fornetee, or me?
But let a lord once own the happy lines,
How the wit brightens! how the style refines! Pope.
WOFULLY. adv. [from woful.]
1. Sorrowfully; mournfully.
2. Wretchedly; in a sense of contempt.
He who would pass such a judgment upon his condition, as shall be confirmed at that great tribunal, from which there lies no appeal, will find himself wofully deceived, if he judges of his spiritual estate by any of these measures. South.
WOLD. n. f. Wold, whether singly or jointly, in the names of places, signifies a plain open country; from the Saxon wold, a plain and a place without wood. Gibson's Camden.
Wold and wold with the Saxons signified a ruler or government; from whence herwald is a famous governor; athelwald a noble governor; herwald, and by invention walden, a general of an army. Gibson's Camden.
WOLF. [from wo, Saxon; wolf, Dutch.]
1. A kind of wild dog that devours sheep.
Advance our waving colours on the walls,
Refr'd in Orleans from the English wolves. Shakespeare.
No, rather I abjure all roofs, and chuse
To be a comrade with the wolf and owl, Necessity's sharp pinch. Shakespeare's King Lear.
If wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern time,
Thou should'st have said, go, porter, turn the key,
All cruels else subscribe'd. Shakespeare's King Lear.
2. An eating ulcer.
How dangerous it is in sensible things to use metaphorical expressions; and what absurd conceits the vulgar will swallow in the literals, an example we have in our profession, who having called an eating ulcer by the name of wolf, common apprehension conceives a reality therein. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
WOLFDOG. n. f. [from wolf and dog.]
1. A dog of a very large breed kept to guard sheep.
The lunklefs prey, how treach'rous tumblers gain,
And dauntless wolves shake the lion's mane. Tickell.
2. A dog bred between a dog and wolf.
WOLFISH. adj. [from wolf.] Resembling a wolf in qualities or form.
Thy desires
Are wolfish, bloody, fair'd, and ravenous. Shakespeare.
I have another daughter,
Who, I am sure, is kind and comfortable;
When she shall hear this of thee, with her nails
Shall flea thy wolfish visage. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Nothing more common than those wolfish back-friends in all our pretensions. Le'Esrange.

nounce women in the plural, women, Skinner.]
1. The female of the human race.
That man who hath a tongue is no man,
If with his tongue he cannot win a woman. Shakespeare.
Thou dotard, thou art woman-tir'd, unrooted
By thy dame Parlet here. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
Women are soft, mild, pitiful and flexible;
Thou stern, obdurate, flinty, rough, remorseless. Shakespeare.
And Abimelech took men-servants and women servants. Gen.
O woman, lovely woman, nature form'd thee
To temper man: we had been brutes without thee. Gray.
Census a woman once and once a man;
But ending in the sex she first began. Dryden's Æn.
Women are made as they themselves would choose,
Too proud to ask, too humble to refuse. Garth.
Women in their nature are much more gay and joyous than men; whether it be that their blood is more refined, their fibres more delicate, and their animal spirits more light; vicacity is the gift of women, gravity that of men. Addison.
2. A female attendant on a person of rank.
I could not personally deliver to her
What you commanded me; but by her woman
I sent your message. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Against the sex to write a satire;
And brand me for a woman-bater. Swift.
WOMANHOOD. n. f. [from woman.] The character and collective qualities of a woman. Obsolete.
WOMANHEAD. n. f. [from woman.] Ne in her speech, ne in her haviour,
Was lightness seen, or loofer vanity,
But gracious womanhood and gravity. Fairy Queen.
There dwells sweet love and constant chastity,
Unspotted faith, and comely womanhood,
Regard of honour, and mild modesty. Spenser.
'Tis present death I beg; and one thing more,
That womanhood denies my tongue to tell:
O keep me from their worse than killing lust. Shakespeare.
When my grave is broke up again,
Some second guest to entertain;
For graves have learn'd that womanhead
To be more than one a bed. Donne.
WOMANISH. adj. [from woman.] Suitable to a woman.
Neither doubt you, because I wear a woman's apparel, I will be the more womanish; since I assure you there is nothing
I desire more than fully to prove myself a man. Sidney.
Zelmane making a womanish habit to be the armour of her boldness, giving up her life to the lips of Philoela, humbly besought her to keep her speech a while within the paradise of her mind. Sidney.

1. Consisting of wool; clothed with wool.
When the work of generation was Between these woolly breeders,
The skillful shepherd peel'd me certain wands. Shakspere.
Some few, by temperance taught, approaching slow,
To distant fate by easy journeys go:
Gently they lay 'em down, as evening sheep
On their own woolly fleeces softly sleep. Dryden.

2. Resembling wool.
What signifies
My fleece of woolly hair, that now uncurls? Shakspere.
Nothing profits more Than frequent snows: O may'st thou often see Thy furrows whiten'd by the woolly rain, Nutritious! J. Philips.

WORD. n. f. [pony, Saxon; word, Dutch.]
1. A single part of speech.
If you speak three words, it will three times report you the three words. Bacon.

It is benign, nor far from the nature of aliment, into which, upon defect of working, it is oft times converted. Brown.
Most purges heat a little; and all of them work best, that is, cause the blood to do, as do fermenting liquors, in warm weather, or in a warm room. Grew's Cephel.

9. To act as an object.
Let it be pain of body, or distress of mind, there's matter yet left for philosophy and constancy to work upon. L'Estr.
Natural philosophy has sensible objects to work upon; but then it often puzzles the reader with the intricacy of its notions. Addison.
The predictions Bickerstaff published, relating to his death, too much affected and worked on his imagination. Swift.

10. To make way.
Body shall up to spirit work. Milton.
Who would trust chance, since all men have the seeds
Of good and ill, which should work upward first? Dryden.

11. To be tossed or agitated.
Vex'd by wintry storms, Benacus raves,
Confus'd with working sands and rolling waves. Addison.

To WORK. v. a.
1. To make by degrees.
Sidelong he works his way.
Through winds, and waves, and storms he works his way,
Impatient for the battle: one day more
Will set the victor thundering at our gates. Addison.

2. To labour; to manufacture.
He could have told them of two or three gold mines, and a silver mine, and given the reason why they forbore to work them at that time, and when they left off from working them. Raleigh's Apology.
The chaos, by the Divine Power, was wrought from one form into another, 'till it settled into an habitable earth. Burn.
This mint is to work off part of the metals found in the neighbouring mountains. Addison.

To shape the parts, and raise the vital flame. Blackmore.
The industry of the people works up all their native commodities to the last degree of manufacture. Swift.

3. To bring by action into any state.
So the pure limpid stream, when foul with stains
Of rushing torrents and descending rains,
Works itself clear, and, as it runs, refines,
'Till by degrees the floating mirror shines. Addison's Cato.

4. To influence by successive impulses.
If you would work any man, know his nature and fashions, and so lead him. Bacon.
To hasten his destruction, come yourself,
And work your royal father to his ruin. A. Philips.

5. To produce; to effect.
Fly the dreadful war,
That in thyself thy lesser parts do move,
Outrageous anger, and woe-working jar. Fairy Queen.
Love worketh no ill to his neighbour. Rom. xiii. 10.
Our light affliction for a moment worketh for us a far more eternal weight of glory. 2 Cor. iv. 18.
We might work any effect, not holpen by the co-operation of spirits, but only by the unity of nature. Bacon.
Moisture, although it doth not pass through bodies without communication of some substance, as heat and cold do, yet it worketh effects by qualifying of the heat and cold. Bacon.
Such power, being above all that the understanding of man can conceive, may well work such wonders. Drummond.
God.

WOR

God, only wife, to punish pride of wit,
Among mens wits hath this confusion wrought;
As the proud tow'r, whose points the clouds did hit,
By tongues confusion was to ruin brought. Davies.

Of the tree,
Which, tasted, works knowledge of good and evil,
Thou may'st not: in the day thou eat'st, thou dy'st. Milton.

6. To manage.
Mere personal valour could not supply want of knowledge in building and working ships. Arbutnot.

7. To put to labour; to exert.
Now, Marcus, thy virtue's on the proof;
Put forth thy utmost strength, work every nerve,
And call up all thy father in thy foul. Addison's Cato.

8. To embroider with a needle.
Not only every society, but every single person has enough to do to work out his own salvation. Decay of Piety.

9. To WORK out. To effect by toil.
The mind takes the hint from the poet, and works out the rest by the strength of her own faculties. Addison.

10. To WORK out. To erase; to efface.
Tears of joy for your returning spilt,
Work out and expiate our former guilt. Dryden.

11. To WORK up. To raise.
That which is wanting to work up the pity to a greater height, was not afforded me by the story. Dryden.

The sun, that rolls his chariot o'er their heads,
Works up more fire and colour in their cheeks. Addison's Cato.

We should inure ourselves to such thoughts, 'till they have worked up our souls into filial awe and love of him. Atterbury.

WORK, n. f. [from work, Saxon; werk, Dutch.]
1. Toil; labour; employment.
Bread, correction, and work for a servant. Ecclesiast. xxxiii.

In the bottom of some mines in Germany there grow vegetables, which the work-folks say have magical virtue. Bac.

The ground, unbid, gives more than we can ask;
But work is pleasure, when we chuse our task. Dryden.

2. A state of labour.
All the world is perpetually at work, only that our poor mortal lives should pass the happier for that little time we possess them, or else end the better when we lose them: upon this occasion riches came to be coveted, honours esteemed, friendship pursued, and virtues admired. Temple.

3. Bumbling attempt.
It is pleasant to see what work our adversaries make with this innocent canon: sometimes 'tis a mere forgery of hereticks, and sometimes the bishops that met there were not so wise as they should have been. Stillingfleet.

4. Flowers or embroidery of the needle.
Round her work she did empale,
With a fair border wrought of sundry flowers,
Inwoven with an ivy-winding trail. Spenser.

That handkerchief, you gave me: I must take out the work: a likely piece of work, that you should find it in your chamber, and know not who left it there. This is some minx's token, and I must take out the work: There, give it your hobbyhorse: whereforever you had it, I'll take out no work on't. Shakespeare's Otello.

5. Any fabric or compages of art.
Nor was the work impair'd by storms alone,
But felt th' approaches of too warm a sun. Pope.

6. Action; feat; deed.
The instrumentality of riches to works of charity, have rendered it necessary in every Christian commonwealth by laws to secure propriety. Hammond.

As to the composition or dissolution of mixt bodies, which is the chief work of elements, and requires an intire application of the agents, water hath the principality and excels over earth. Digby.

Nothing lovelier can be found in woman,
Than good works in her husband to promote. Milton.

While as the works of bloody Mars employ'd,
The wanton youth inglorious peace enjoy'd. Pope.

7. Any thing made.
Where is that holy fire, which verse is said to have? Is that enchanting force decay'd?
Verse, that draws nature's works from nature's law,
There, her best work, to her work cannot draw. Donne.

O fairest of creation! last and best
Of all God's works! creature, in whom excels
Whatever can to fight or thought be form'd;
Holy, divine, good, amiable, or sweet,
How art thou lost! Milton's Paradise Lost.

8. Management; treatment.
Let him alone; I'll go another way to work with him. Shak.

9. To set on WORK. To employ; to engage.
It setteth those wits on work in better things, which would be else employed in worse. Hooker.

WORKER, n. f. [from work.] One that works.
Ye fair nymphs, which oftentimes have loved
The cruel worker of your kindly smarts,
Prepare yourselves, and open wide your hearts. Spenser.

WOR

His father was a worker in brass. Kings vii. 14.

You spoke me fair; but even then betrayed me: depart from me, you professors of holiness, but workers of iniquity. South's Sermons.

WORKFELLOW, n. f. [from work and fellow.] One engaged in the same work with another. Rem.

Timotheus, my workfellow, and Lucius, salute you. Rem.

WORKHOUSE, n. f. [from work and house.] Shakespeare.

1. A place in which any manufacture is carried on.
The quick forge and workinghouse of thought. Shak. H.V.

Protopogen had his workhouse in a garden out of town, where he was daily finishing those pieces he begun. Dryden.

2. A place where idlers and vagabonds are condemned to labour.
Hast thou suffered at any time by vagabonds and pilferers?
Esteem and promote those useful charities which remove such pests into prisons and workhouses. Atterbury.

WORKINGDAY, n. f. [from work and day.] Day on which labour is permitted; not the sabbath.

How full of briars is this workingday world? Shakespeare.

Will you have me, lady?
—No, my lord, unless I might have another for working- days; your grace is too costly to wear every day. Shakespeare.

WORKMAN, n. f. [from work and man.] An artificer; a maker of any thing.

When workmen strive to do better than well,
They do confound their skill in covetousness. Shakespeare.

If prudence works, who is a more cunning workman? Wisd.

There was no other cause preceding than his own will, no other matter than his own power, no other work- man than his own word, and no other consideration than his own infinite goodness. Raleigh.

They have inscribed the pedestal, to shew their value for the workman. Addison on Italy.

WORKMANLY, adj. [from workman.] Skillful; well performed; workmanlike.

WORKMANLY, adv. Skillfully; in a manner becoming a workman.

In having but fortie foot workmanly dight,
Take fassion en ough for a lord and a knight. Tupper.

We will fetch thee straight
Daphne roaming through a thorny wood,
Scratching her legs, that one shall swear she bleeds,
And at that sight shall sad Apollo weep,
So workmanly the blood and tears are drawn. Shakespeare.

WORKMANSHIP, n. f. [from workman.]
1. Manufacture; something made by any one.
Nor any skill'd in workmanship embold'd,
Nor any skill'd in loops of fing'ring fine,
Might in their diverse cunning ever dare
With this so curious network to compare. Spenser.

By how much Adam exceeded all men in perfection, by being the immediate workmanship of God, by so much did that chosen garden exceed all parts of the world. Raleigh.

He moulded him to his own idea, delighting in the choice of the materials; and afterwards, as great architects use to do, in the workmanship of his regal hand. Watson.

What more reasonable than to think, that if we be God's workmanship, he shall set this mark of himself upon all reasonable creatures? Tillotson.

2. The skill of a worker; the degree of skill discovered in any manufacture.

The Tritonian goddess having heard
Her blazed fame, which all the world had fill'd,
Came down to prove the truth, and due reward
For her praise-worthy workmanship to yield. Spenser.

3. The art of working.
If there were no metals, 'tis a mystery to me how Tubal-cain could ever have taught the workmanship and use of them. Woodward's Natural History.

WORKMASTER, n. f. [from work and master.] The performer of any work.

What time this world's great workmaster did cast
To make all things, such as we now behold,
It seems that he before his eyes had plac'd
A goodly pattern, to whose perfect mould
He fashion'd them so comely. Spenser.

Every carpenter and workmaster that laboureth. Ecclesiast. xxxviii.

Delire, which tends to know
The works of God, thereby to glorify
The great workmaster, leads to no excess. Milt. Parad. Lost.

WORKWOMAN, n. f. [from work and woman.]
1. A woman skilled in needle-work.
The most fine-finger'd workwoman on ground,
Aracine, by his means was vanquish'd. Spenser.

2. A woman that works for hire.

WORKYDAY, n. f. [Corrupted from workingday.] The day not the sabbath.

Tell her but a workyday fortune. Shakespeare.

The other days, and thou
Make up one man; whose face thou art,
The workydays are the back part;
The burden of the week lies there. Herbert.

WOR

Holydays, if haply they were gone, Gay.

Like workydays, I with would soon be done;
WORLD, n. f. [from world, Saxon; wereld, Dutch.]
1. World is the great collective idea of all bodis whatever. Loc.

2. System of beings.
Begotten before all worlds. Nicene Creed.

God hath in these last days spoken unto us by his son, by whom he made the worlds. Hebr. i. 2.

Know how this world
Of heav'n and earth conspicuous first began. Milton.

3. The earth; the terraqueous globe.
He the world
Built on circumfluous waters. Milton's Paradise Lost.

4. Present state of existence.
I'm in this earthly world, where to do harm
Is often laudable; to do good sometime Accounted dangerous folly. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

I was not come into the world then. L'Estrange.

He wittingly brought evil into the world. More.

Christian fortitude consists in suffering for the love of God, whatever hardships can befall in the world. Dryden.

5. A secular life.
Happy is he that from the world retires,
And carries with her what the world admires.
Thrice happy she, whose young thoughts fixt above,
While she is lovely, does to heav'n make love;
I need not urge your promise, ere you find
An entrance here, to leave the world behind? Waller.

By the world, we sometimes understand the things of this world; the variety of pleasures and interests which steal away our affections from God. Sometimes we are to understand the men of the world, with whose solicitations we are so apt to comply. Rogers's Sermons.

6. Publick life.
Hence banished, is banish'd from the world;
And world exil'd is death. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

7. Business of life; trouble of life.
Here I'll set up my everlasting rest,
And shake the yoke of man's suspicious stars
From this world-wearied flesh. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

8. Great multitude.
You a world of curses undergo,
Being the agents, or base second means. Shakespeare.

Nor doth this wood lack worlds of company;
For you in my respect are all the world. Shakespeare.

I leave to speak of a world of other attempts furnished by kings. Raleigh's Apology.

What a world of contradictions would follow upon the contrary opinion, and what a world of confusions upon the contrary practice. Bp. Sanderson.

Just to romances are, for what else
Is in them all, but love and battles?
O' th' first of these we have no great matter
To treat of, but a world o' th' latter. Hudibras.

It brought into this world a world of woe.
There were a world of paintings, and among the rest the picture of a lion. Milton.

Marriage draws a world of business on our hands, subjects us to law-suits, and loads us with domestic cares. Dryden.

From thy corporeal poison freed,
Soon hast thou reach'd the goal with mended pace;
A world of woes dispatch'd in little space. Dryden.

Why will you fight against so sweet a passion,
And feel your heart to such a world of charms? Addison.

9. Mankind; an hyperbolical expression for many.
This hath bred high terms of separation between such and the rest of the world, whereby the one sort are named the brethren, the godly; the other worldlings, time-servers, pleasers of men more than of God. Hooker.

'Tis the duke's pleasure,
Whose disposition, all the world well knows,
Will not be rubb'd nor stopp'd.
Why dost thou shew me thus to th' world?
Bear me to prison. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

He was willing to declare to all the world, that, as he had been brought up in that religion established in the church of England, so he could maintain the same by unanswerable reasons. Clarendon.

10. Course of life.
Persons of conscience will be afraid to begin the world unjustly. Clarissa.

11. Universal empire.
Rome was to sway the world. Milton.

This through the east just vengeance hurl'd,
And lost poor Antony the world. Prior.

12. The manners of men.
Children should not know any wickedness. Old folks have discretion, and know the world. Shakespeare.

What start at this! when sixty years have spread
Their grey experience o'er thy hoary head?
Is this the all observing age could gain?
Or hast thou known the world so long in vain? Dryden.

WOR

If knowledge of the world makes man perfidious,
May Juba ever live in ignorance. Addison's Cato.

The girl might pass, if we could get her
To know the world a little better;
To know the world! a modern phrase
For visits, ombre, balls and plays. Swift.

13. A collection of wonders; a wonder. Obsolete.
The balfa having recommended Barbaruffa, it was a world to see, how the court was changed upon him. Knolles.

14. Time. A sense originally Saxon; now only used in World without end.

15. In the world. In Possibility.
All the precautions in the world were taken for the marriage of his younger brother. Addison.

16. For all the world. Exactly. A ludicrous sense; now little used.
He had a pair of horns like a bull, his feet cloven, as many eyes upon his body as my grey mare hath dapples, and for all the world so placed. Sidney, b. ii.

WORLDLINESS, n. f. [from worldly.] Covetousness; addiction to gain.

WORLDLING, n. f. [from world.] A mortal set upon profit.
Basteminded wretches! are your thoughts so deeply bemired in the trade of ordinary worldlings, as for respect of gain to let so much time pass. Sidney.

The one sort are nam'd the brethren, the godly; the other worldlings, time-servers, and pleasers of men more than pleasers of God. Hooker.

God of the world and worldlings,
Great Mammon! greatest god below the sky. Fa. Queen.

For his weeping in the needle's stream;
Poor deer, quoth he, thou mak'st a testament
As worldlings do, giving thy sum of more
To that which had too much. Shakespeare's As You Like It.

That other on his friends his thoughts bestows:
The covetous worldling, in his anxious mind,
Thinks only on the wealth he left behind. Dryden.

If we consider the expectations of futurity, the worldling gives up the argument. Rogers.

WORLDLY, adj. [from world.]
1. Secular; relating to this life, in contradistinction to the life to come.
He is divinely bent to meditation;
And in no worldly suits would he be moved,
To draw him from his holy exercise. Shakespeare's Rich. III.

Hast thou not worldly pleasure at command? Shakespeare.

Tell me, ye toad-swol'n, flinty Pharaoh's, tell;
Can worldly pleasures equal pains of hell? N. Richards.

The fortitude of a christian consists in patience, not in enterprizes which the poets call heroic, and which are commonly the effects of interest, pride, and worldly honour. Dryden.

Compare the happiness of men and beasts no farther than it results from worldly advantages. Atterbury.

2. Bent upon this world; not attentive to a future state.
They'll practise how to live secure,
Worldly or dissolute, on that their lords
Shall leave them to enjoy. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.

3. Human; common; belonging to the world.
Many years it hath continued, standing by no other worldly mean, but that one only hand which erected it. Hooker.

Times and places are approved witnesses of worldly actions. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

WORLDLY, adv. [from world.] With relation to the present life.
It is a token of a worldly wife man, not to contend in vain against the nature of times wherein he liveth. Raleigh.

Subverting worldly strong and worldly wife,
By simply meek. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii.

'Tis his cannot be done, if my will be worldly, or voluptuously disposed. South's Sermons.

Since your mind is worldly bent,
Therefore of the two gifts in my dispose,
Think ere you speak, I grant you leave to choose. Dryden.

WORM, n. f. [from worm, Saxon; worm, Dutch; vermis, Lat.]
1. A small harmless serpent that lives in the earth.
Both the princes
Thy broken faith hath made a prey to worms. Shakespeare.

Help me into some house,
Or I shall faint;—a plague o' both your houses!
They have made worms meat of me. Shakespeare.

I though worms devour me, though I turn to mold,
Yet in my flesh I shall his face behold:
I from my marble monument shall rise
Again intire, and see him with these eyes. Sandys's Par.

At once came forth whatever creeps the ground,
Infect or worm. Milton.

2. A poisonous serpent.
The mortal worm. Shakespeare.

3. Animal bred in the body.
Physicians observe these worms engendered within the body of man. Harvey on Consumptions.

4. The animal that spins silk.
Thou owest the worm no silk, the sheep no wool. Shakespeare.

WOR

5. Grubs that gnaw wood and furniture.
Tis no awkward claim,
Pick'd from the worm-holes of long vanish'd days,
Nor from the dust of old oblivion rak'd. Shakefp. Hen. V.
6. Something tormenting.
The worm of conscience still begnaw thy soul. Shakefp.
The chains of darkness, and th' undying worm. Milton.
7. Any thing vermiculated, or turned round; any thing spiral.
The threads of ferews, when bigger than can be made in screw-plates, are called worms. The length of a worm begins at the one end of the spindle, and ends at the other; the breadth of the worm is contained between any two grooves on the spindle; the depth of the worm is cut into the diameter of the spindle, viz. the depth between the outside of the worm, and the bottom of the groove. Moxon.
- TO WORM. v. n. [from the noun.] To work slowly, secretly, and gradually.
When debates and fretting jealousy,
Did worm and work within you more and more,
Your colour faded. Herbert.
- TO WORM. v. a.
1. To drive by slow and secret means.
They find themselves worm'd out of all power, by a new spawn of independents, sprung from your own bowels. Swift.
2. To deprive a dog of something, nobody knows what, under his tongue, which is said to prevent him, nobody knows why, from running mad.
Every one that keepeth a dog, should have him worm'd. Mort.
- WORMEATEN. adj. [worm and eaten.]
1. Gnawed by worms.
For his verity in love, I do think him as concave as a covered goblet, or a wormeaten nut. Shakespeare.
2. Old; worthless.
His chamber all was hanged about with rolls,
And old records from ancient times deriv'd;
Some made in books, some in long parchment scrolls.
That were all wormeaten, and full of canker holes. Spenser.
Things among the Greeks, which antiquity had worn out of knowledge, were called ogygia, which we call wormeaten, or of defaced date. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
Thine's like wormeaten trunks cloath'd in seal's skin;
Or grave, that's dust without, and flint within. Donne.
- WORMWOOD. n. f. [from its virtue to kill worms in the body.]
Wormwood hath an indeterminate stalk, branching out into many small shoots, with spikes of naked flowers hanging downward; the leaves are hoary and bitter. Of this plant there are thirty-two species, one of which, the common wormwood, grows in the roads; but it is also planted in gardens for common use. Great variety of sea wormwoods are found in the salt marshes of England, and sold in the markets for the true Roman wormwood, though they differ greatly. Mill.
She was wean'd; I had then laid Wormwood to my dug. Shakefp. Romeo and Juliet.
Pituitous Cacoehymia must be corrected by bitters, as wormwood wine. Pleyer on the Humours.
- I ask whether one be not invincibly conscious to himself of a different perception, when he actually tastes wormwood, or only thinks on that favour. Locke.
- WORMY. adj. [from worm.] Full of worms.
Spirits that in crossways and floods have burial,
Already to their wormy beds are gone. Shakespeare.
Yet can I not persuade me thou art dead,
Or that thy corse corrupts in earth's dark womb,
Or that thy beauties lie in wormy bed. Milton.
- WORN. part. pass. of wear.
His is a maiden shield,
Guiltless of fight: mine batter'd, hew'd and bor'd,
Worn out of service, must forsake his lord. Dryden.
What I now offer, is the wretched remainder of a sickly age, worn out with study, and oppress'd by fortune. Dryden.
The greatest part of mankind are given up to labour, whose lives are worn out only in the provisions for living. Locke.
Your cold hypocrisy's a stale device,
A worn-out trick; would'st thou be thought in earnest, Cloath thy feign'd zeal in rage, in fire, in fury. Addison.
- WORNIL. n. f.
In the backs of cows in the summer, are maggots generated, which in Effex we call wornils, being first only a small knot in the skin. Derham's Physico-Theology.
- TO WORRY. v. a. [ponigen, Saxon: whence probably the word warray.]
1. To tear, or mangle, as a beast tears its prey.
If we with thrice such powers left at home,
Cannot defend our own doors from the dogs,
Let us be worried. Shakefp. Hen. V.
The fury of the tumults might fly so high as to worry and tear those in pieces, whom as yet they but play'd with in their paws. K. Charles.
Tis no new thing for the dogs that are to keep the wolves from worrying the sheep, to be deliver'd up to the enemy, for fear the sheep should worry the wolves. L'Estrange.

WOR

- This revives and imitates that inhuman barbarity of the old heathen persecutors, wrapping up christians in the skins of wild beasts, that so they might be worried and torn in pieces by dogs. South's Sermons.
2. To harass, or persecute brutally.
Then embraces his son-in-law; then again worries he his daughter with clipping her. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.
For want of words, or lack of breath,
Witness when I was worried with thy peals. Milton.
It has pleas'd Providence at length to give us righteousness instead of exaction, and hopes of religion to a church worried with reformation. South's Sermons.
  - All his care
Was to preserve me from the barbarous rage,
Which worried him only for being mine. Southern.
I shall not suffer him to worry any man's reputation, nor indeed fall on any person whatsoever. Addison.
  - Let them rail,
And then worry one another at their pleasure. Rowe.
Madam, contrive and invent,
And worry him out, 'till he gives his consent. Swift.
  - WORSE. adj. The comparative of bad: bad, worse, worst.
[ppr, Saxon.] More bad; more ill.
Why should he see your faces worse liking than the children of your sort? Daniel's 10.
Whether this or worse, love not the faithful side. Milton.
In happiness and misery, the question still remains, how men come often to prefer the worse to the better, and to chuse that, which, by their own confession, has made them miserable. Locke.
  - WORSE. adv. In a manner more bad.
The more one fickers, the worse at ease he is. Shakespeare.
  - THE WORSE. n. f. [from the adjective.]
1. The loss; not the advantage; not the better.
Was never man, who most conquests achiev'd,
But sometimes had the worse, and lost by war. Spenser.
Judah was put to the worse before Israel; and they fled to their tents. 2 Kings xiv. 12.
  2. Something less good.
A man, whatever are his professions, always thinks the worse of a woman, who forgives him for making an attempt on her virtue. Clarissa.
  - TO WORSE. v. a. [from the adjective.] To put to disadvantage. This word, though analogical enough, is not now used.
Perhaps more valid arms,
Weapons more violent, when next we meet,
May serve to better us, and worse our foes. Milton.
  - WORSER. adj. A barbarous word, formed by corrupting worse with the usual comparative termination.
Gods! take my breath from me;
Let not my worse spirit tempt me again
To die before you please. Shakespeare.
A dreadful quiet felt, and worse far
Than arms, a fullen interval of war. Dryden.
  - WORSHIP. n. f. [proscrype, Saxon.]
1. Dignity; eminence; excellence.
Thou madest him lower than the angels, to crown him with glory and worship. Pf. viii. 5.
Elfin born of noble state,
And muckle worship in his native land,
Well could he turney, and in lists debate. Pairy Queen.
My train are men of choice, and rarest parts,
That all particulars of duty know;
And in the most exact regard support
The worship of their names. Shakespeare's King Lear.
  2. A character of honour.
I belong to worship, and affect
In honour, honesty. Shakespeare's Hen. VIII.
Dinner is on table; my father desires your worship's company. Shakefp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
The old Romans freedom did bestow,
Our princes worship with a blow.
What lands and lordships for their owner know
My quondam barber, but his worship now. Dryden.
  3. A term of ironical respect.
Against your worship, when had S--k writ?
Or P--ge pour'd forth the torrent of his wit? Pope.
  4. Adoration; religious act of reverence.
They join their vocal worship to the quire
Of creatures wanting voice. Milton.
He wav'd a torch aloft, and, madly vain,
Sought godlike worship from a servile train. Dryden.
The worship of God is an eminent part of religion, and prayer is a chief part of religious worship: hence religion is described by seeking God. Tillotson.
There were several inroads into Germany, particularly a voyage of the Egyptians under Ofris up the Danube; from thence the Suevi had their worship of Isis. Arnobius.
  5. Honour; respect; civil deference.
The humble guest shall have worship in the presence of those who sit at meat with him. Luke xiv. 10.
Since

WOR

- Since God hath appointed government among men, it is plain that his intention was, that some kind of worship should be given from some to others; for where there is a power to punish and reward, there is a foundation of worship in those who are under that power; which worship lies in expressing a due regard to that power, by a care not to provoke it, and an endeavour to obtain the favour of it, which, among mankind, is called civil worship. Stillingfleet.
6. Idolatry of lovers.
Tis not your inky brows, your black silk hair,
Your bugle eyeballs, nor your cheek of cream
That can entame my spirits to your worship. Shakespeare.
  - TO WORSHIP. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To adore; to honour or venerate with religious rites.
Thou shalt worship no other God. Exod. xxxiv. 14.
Let no man beguile you of your reward, in a voluntary humility and worshiping of angels. Col. ii. 18.
Adore and worship God Supreme.
First worship God; he that forgets to pray,
Bids not himself good-morrow nor good-day. T. Randolph.
On the smooth rind the passenger shall see Thy name engrav'd, and worship Helen's tree. Dryden.
  2. To respect; to honour; to treat with civil reverence.
Our grave,
Like Turkish mute, shall have a tongueless mouth,
Not worshipp'd with a waxen epitaph. Shakefp. Henry V.
  - TO WORSHIP. v. n. To perform acts of adoration.
I and the lad will go yonder and worship. Gen. xxii. 5.
The people went to worship before the golden calf. 1 Kings.
  - WORSHIPFUL. adj. [worship and full.]
1. Claiming respect by any character or dignity.
This is worshipful society,
And fits the mounting spirit like myself. Shakespeare.
When old age comes upon him, it comes alone, bringing no other evil with it; but when it comes to wait upon a great and worshipful finner, who for many years has ate well and done ill, it is attended with a long train of rheums. South.
  2. A term of ironical respect.
Every man would think me an hypocrite indeed; and what excites your most worshipful thought to think so?
Shakespeare.
Suppose this worshipful idol be made, yet still it wants sense and motion. Stillingfleet.
  - WORSHIPFULLY. adv. [from worshipful.] Respectfully.
Hailings will lose his head, ere give content,
His master's son, as worshipfully he terms it,
Shall lose the royalty of England's throne. Shakespeare.
  - WORSHIPPER. n. f. [from worship.] Adorer; one that worships.
What art thou, thou idol ceremony?
What kind of god art thou that suffer'st more
Of mortal griefs, than do thy worshippers. Shakefp. Henry V.
Those places did not confine the immensity of God, nor give his worshippers a nearer approach to heaven by their height. South's Sermons.
  - If posterity takes its notions of us from our medals, they must fancy one of our kings paid a great devotion to Minerva, that another was a professed worshipper of Apollo. Addison.
  - WORST. adj. The superlative of bad, formed from worse: bad, worse, worst.] Most bad; most ill.
If thou hadst not been born the worst of men,
Thou hadst been knave and flatterer. Shakespeare.
The pain that any one actually feels is still of all other the worst; and it is with anguish they cry out Worst, n. f. The most calamitous or wicked state; the utmost height or degree of any thing ill.
Who is't can say, I'm at the worst?
I'm worse than e'er I was,
And worse I may be yet: the worst is not,
So long as we can say, this is the worst. Shakespeare.
That you may be armed against the worst in this unhappy state of affairs in our distressed country, I send you these considerations on the nature and immortality of the soul. Digby.
Happy the man, and happy he alone,
He, who can call to-day his own:
He who secure within can say,
To-morrow do thy worst, for I have liv'd to day. Dryden.
Sir Roger gets into the frontiers of his estate, before he beats about in search of a hare, on purpose to spare his own fields, where he is always sure of finding diversion when the worst comes to the worst. Addison's Spectator.
  - TO WORST. v. a. [from the adjective.] To defeat; to overthrow.
The cafe will be no worse than where two duellists enter the field, where the worsted party hath his sword given him gain without further hurt.
The bear was in a greater fright,
Beat down and worsted by the knight. Hudibras.
It is downright madness to contend where we are sure to be worsted. L'Estrange.
The victorious Philistines were worsted by the captivated

- ark, which foraged their country more than a conquering army. South's Sermons.
She could have brought the chariot again, when the faw her brother worsted in the duel. Dryde's Ded. to Dryden's Ded. to.
- WORSTED. n. f. [from Worsted, a town in Norfolk famous for the woolen manufacture.] Woolen yarn; wool spun.
A bafe, proud, shallow, beggarly three suited, hundred pound, filthy worsted-stocking knave. Shakespeare's King Lear.
There Ridpath, Roper cudgel'd might ye view;
The very worst'd still look'd black and blue. Pope.
- WORT. n. f. [ppr, Saxon; wort, Dutch.]
1. Originally a general name for an herb; whence it still continues in many, as liverwort, spleenwort.
2. A plant of the cabbage kind.
3. [ppr, Saxon.] New beer either unfermented, or in the act of fermentation.
If in the wort of beer, while it worketh, before it be tunned, the burrage be often changed with flesh, it will make a fovercign drink for melancholy. Bacon's Natural History.
- WORTH. or WORTH. v. n. [prosdan, Saxon.] To be. This word is only now retained in wo worth, or wurth; wo be.
Wo worth the man
That first did teach the curled steel to bite
In his own flesh, and make way to the living sp'rit. F. 2.
- WORTH. In the termination of the names of places comes from worth, a court or farm, or worth, a street or road. Gilson.
- WORTH. n. f. [prosd, Saxon.]
1. Price; value.

my simple and mean labours. Hooker.
What is worth in any thing,
But so much money as 'twill bring? Hudibras.
A common marcalite shall have the colour of gold exactly;
and yet upon trial yield nothing of worth but vitriol and sulphur. Woodward's Natural History.- 2. Excellence; virtue.
How can you him unworthy then decree;
In whose chief part your worth implanted be. Sidney.
Is there any man of worth and virtue, although not instructed in the school of Christ, that had not rather end the days of this transitory life as Cyrus, than to sink down with them of whom Elihu hath said, memento moriatur. Hooker.
Having from these suck'd all they had of worth,
And brought home that faith which you carried forth,
I throughly love. Donne.
Her virtue, and the conscience of her worth
That would be wood. Milton.
- A nymph of your own train
Gives us your character in such a strain,
As none but she, who in that court did dwell,
Could know such worth, or worth describe so well. Waller.
- 3. Importance; valuable quality.
Peradventure those things whereupon so much time was then well spent, have sithence that lost their dignity and worth. Hooker.
Take a man possessed with a strong desire of any thing, and the worth and excellency of that thing appears much greater than when that desire is quite extinguished. South's Ser.
- WORTH. adj.
1. Equal in price to, equal in value to.
Women will love her that she is a woman,
More worth than any man: men that she is
The rarest of all women. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
Your son and daughter found this trespass worth
The shame which here it suffers. Shakespeare.
You have not thought it worth your labour to enter a professed dissent against a philosophy, which the greatest part of the virtuosi of Europe have deserted, as a mere maze of words. Glanville's Sceptick.
As if 'tis nothing worth that lies conceal'd;
And science is not science till reveal'd? Dryden.
At Geneva are merchants reckoned worth twenty hundred thousand crowns. Addison's Italy.
It is worth while to consider how admirably he has turned the course of his narration, and made his husbandman concerned even in what relates to the battle. Addison.
- 2. Deserving of.
The cattle appeared to be a place worth the keeping, and capable to be made secure against a good army. Clarendon.
Here we may reign secure, and, in my choice,
To reign is worth ambition, though in hell. Milton.
Haste hither Eve, and worth thy sight behold,
Eastward among those trees, what glorious shape
Comes this way moving. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Whatsoever
Is worthy of their love is worth their anger. Denham.
This is life indeed; life worth preserving;
Such life as Juba never felt till now. Addison's Cato.
I have long had it in my thoughts to trouble you with a letter; but was discouraged for want of something that I could think worth sending fifteen hundred miles. Berkley to Pope.

Many things are worth enquiry to one man, which are not so to another. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

3. Equal in possessions to.

Dang'rous rocks,
Which touching but my gentle vessel's side,
Would scatter all the spices on the stream,
Enrobe the roaring waters with my silks;
And in a word, but even now worth this,
And now worth nothing. Shakspeare Merchant of Venice.
Although worth nothing, he shall be proffered in marriage the best endowed, and most beautiful virgin of their island.
Sandys's Journey.

WORTHILY. adv. [from worthy.]

The divine original of our souls hath little influence upon us to engage us to walk worthily of our extraction, and to do nothing that is base. Ray.

2. Deservedly.
They are betray'd
While they pervert pure nature's healthful rules
To loathsome sickness, worthily since they God's image did not reverence in themselves. Milton.
You worthily succeed, not only to the honours of your ancestors, but also to their virtues. Dryden.

3. Christian men having, besides the common light of all men, so great help of heavenly direction from above, together with the lamps of so bright examples as the church of God doth yield, it cannot but worthily seem reproachful for us to leave both the one and the other. Hooker.

The king is present; if 't be known to him
That I gain say my deed, how may he wound,
And worthily, my falsehood. Shakspeare Henry VIII.
A Christian cannot lawfully hate any one; and yet I affirm that some may very worthily deserve to be hated; and of all, the deceiver deserves it most. South's Sermons.

WORTHINESS. n. f. [from worthy.]
1. Desert.
The prayers which our Saviour made were for his own worthiness accepted, ours God accepteth not, but with this condition, if they be joined with a belief in Christ. Hooker.

2. Excellence; dignity; virtue.
Determining never to marry but him, whom she thought worthy of her; and that was one in whom all worthinesses were harboured. Sidney.
He that is at all times good, must hold his virtue to you, whose worthiness would fit it up where it wanted, rather than lack it where there is such abundance. Shakspeare.

Who is sure he hath a soul, unless
It see and judge, and follow worthiness,
And by deeds praise it? he who doth not this,
May lodge an inmate soul, but 'tis not his. Donne.
What set my thoughts on work was the worthiness and curiosity of the subject in itself. Holder.

3. State of being worthy; quality of deserving.
She is not worthy to be loved, that hath not some feeling of her own worthiness. Sidney.

WORTHLESS, adj. [from worth.]

And worthless Valentine shall be forgot. Shakspeare.
On Laura's lap you lay,
Chiding the worthless crowd away. Rescramon.

2. Having no value.
My anxious pains we all the day,
In search of what we like, employ:
Scorning at night the worthless prey,
We find the labour gave the joy. Prior.
Am I then doom'd to fall
By a boy's hand? and for a worthless woman? Adison.

WORTHLESSNESS. n. f. [from worthless.] Want of excellence;
want of dignity; want of value.
But that mine own worthlessness spoils the conceit, I could think our company parallel to the seven wise men of Greece.
More's Divine Dialogues.
A notable account is given us by the apostle of this windy insignificant charity of the will, and of the worthlessness of it, not enlivened by deeds. South's Sermons.

WORTHY. adj. [from worth.]
1. Deserving; such as merits; with of before the thing deserved.
She determined never to marry any but him, whom she thought worthy of her, and that was one in whom all worthnesses were harboured. Sidney.
Further, I will not flatter you,
That all I see in you is worthy love,
Than this; that nothing do I see in you That should merit hate. Shakspeare's King John.
Thou art worthy of the sway,
To whom the heav'ns in thy nativity
Adjudg'd an olive branch and laurel crown. Shakspeare.

WOU

2. Valuable; noble; illustrious; having excellence or dignity.
If the best things have the perfectest and best operations, it will follow, that seeing man is the worthiest creature on earth, and every society of men more worthy than any man, and of society that is the most excellent which we call the church. Hooker.

He now on Pompey's basis lies along,
No worthier than the dust? Shakspeare's Julius Caesar.
A war upon the Turks is more worthy than upon any other Gentiles in point of religion and honour; though hope of success might invite some other choice. Bacon.

Think of her worth, and think that God did mean,
This worthy mind should worthy things embrace:
Blot not her beauties with thy thoughts unclean,
Nor her dishonour with thy passion base.
Happier thou may'st be, worthier canst not be. Donne.

3. Having worth; having virtue.
The doctor is well money'd, and his friends
Potent at court; he, none but he, shall have her;
Though twenty thousand worthier come to crave her. Shak.
The matter I handle is the most important within the whole extent of human nature, for a worthy person to employ himself about. Ligby on the Soul.

We see, though order'd for the best,
Permitted laurels grace the lawless brow,
Th' unworthy rais'd, the worthy cast below. Dryden.

4. Not good. A term of ironical celebration.
My worthy wife our arms mislaid,
And from beneath my head my sword convey'd;
The door unlatch'd; and with repeated calls
Invites her former lord within my walls. Dryden.

5. Suitable for any quality good or bad; equal in value; equal in dignity.
Flowers worthy of paradise.
Thou, Drances, art below a death from me:
Let that vile soul in that vile body rest,
The lodging is well worthy of the guest. Dryden.
My suit'ings for you make your heart my due;
Be worthy me, as I am worthy you. Dryden.

6. Suitable to any thing bad.
The merciless Macdonald,
Worthy to be a rebel; for to that
The multiplying villainies of nature
Do swarm upon him. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

7. Deserving of ill.
What has he done to Rome that's worthy death. Shakspeare.
If the wicked man be worthy to be beaten, the judge shall cause him to be beaten. Deut. xxv. 2.

WORTHY. n. f. [from the adjective.] A man laudable for any eminent quality, particularly for valour.
Such as are conflagrated unto knowledge come short of themselves if they go not beyond others, and must not fit down under the degree of worthies. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

What do these worthies
But rob and spoil, burn, slaughter, and enslave Peaceable nations. Milton's Paradise Regained.
No worthies form'd by any muse but thine
Could purchase robes, to make themselves so fine. Waller.
For this day's p'lim, and for thy former acts,
Thou Arthur hast acquir'd a future fame,
And of three Christian worthies art the first. Dryden.
The next worthy came in with a retinue of historians. Tatler.

To WORTHY. v. a. [from the adjective.] To render worthy;
to aggrandise; to exalt. Not used.

He conjunct, tripp'd me behind;
And put upon him such a deal of man,
That worthied him; got praises of the king,
For him attempting, who was self-subb'd. Shakspeare.

To WOT. v. n. [p'ran, Saxon; whence wotet, to know; of which the preterite was wot, knew; which by degrees was mistaken for the present tense.] To know; to be aware. Obsolete.

The salve of reformation they mightily call for, but where, and what the sores are which need it, as they wot full little, so they think not greatly material to search. Hooker.

Well I wot, compar'd to all the rest
Of each degree, that beggar's life is best. Hubbard.
More water glideth by the mill
Than wots the miller of. Shakspeare.

Wot you, what I found?
Forsooth, an inventory, thus importing. Shakspeare.

WOTE. The preterite and participle passive of wote.
Adam, waiting her return, had wote
Of choicest flowers, a garland. Milton.

WOVEN. The participle passive of wove.
WOULD. The preterite of will.
1. It is generally used as an auxiliary verb with an infinitive, to which it gives the force of the subjunctive mood.
If God's providence did not for order it, cheats would daily be committed, which would justle private men out of their rights, and unhinge states. Ray.

I WOULD

WOU

2. I WOULD do it. My resolution is that it should be done by me.

Thou WOULDEST do it. Such must be the consequence to thee.
Thou WOULD or it would. This must be the consequence to him or it.

3. The plural as the singular.
He by the rules of his own mind, could construe no other end of mens doings but self-seeking, suddenly feared what they could do, and as suddenly suspected what they would do, and as suddenly hated them, as having both might and mind to do so. Sidney.

4. Was or am resolved; wish or wished to.
She would give her a lesson for walking so late, that should make her keep within doors for one fortnight. Sidney.
Jealous Philoclea, that was even jealous of herself; for Zelmane would needs have her glove. Sidney.
You would be satisfied?—
Would? nay, and will. Shakspeare's Othello.
They know not what they are, nor what they would be, any further than that they would not be what they are. L'Estr.
It will be needless to enumerate all the simple ideas belonging to each sense: nor indeed is it possible if we would; there being a great many more of them belonging to most of the senses than we have names for. Locke.
By pleasure and pain I would be understood to signify, whatsoever delights or molests us, whether from the thoughts of our minds, or any thing operating on our bodies. Locke.

5. It is a familiar term for wish to do, or to have.
What wouldst thou with us? Shakspeare's King Lear.
Mr. Slender, what would you with me?—
—I would little or nothing with you. Shakspeare.

6. Should wish.
Celia! if you apprehend
The muse of your incensed friend;
Nor would that he record your blame,
And make it live; repeat the fame;
Again deceive him, and again,
And then he swears he'll not complain. Waller.

7. It is used in old authors for should.
The excess of diet would be avoided. Bacon.
As for percolation, which belongeth to separation, trial would be made by clarifying by adhesion, with milk put into new beer and stirred with it. Bacon's Natural History.

8. It has the signification of I wish, or I pray; this, I believe, is improper; and formed by a gradual corruption of the phrase, would God; which originally imported, that God would,
would God will, might God decree; from this phrase ill understood came, would to God; thence, I would to God: And thence I would, or elliptically, would come to signify, I wish:
and so it is used even in good authors, but ought not to be imitated.

I would my father look'd but with my eyes. Shakspeare.
I would this musick would come. Shakspeare.
I, this found I better know:
Wife men will do it without a law; I would there might be a law to restrain fools. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
Lift! I would I could hear mo. Ben. Johnson.

This is yet the outward, fairest side
Of our design: within rests more of fear
Than my most worthy lords, I would there were. Daniel.
Would thou hadst hearken'd to my words, and stay'd
With me, as I besought thee, when that strange
Desire of wand'ring, this unhappy morn,
Possess'd thee. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Would God we might prevent the need of such unkindly expedients, and by a thankful sense of what we have, provide to conferve it. Decay of Piety.

I scarce am pleas'd, I tamely mount the throne,
Would Aurengzebe had all their souls in one. Dryden.
And would to heav'n the storm you felt, would bring On Carthaginian coasts your wand'ring King. Dryden.

WOULDING. n. f. [from would.] Motion of desire; disposition to any thing; propensity; inclination; incipient purpose.
It will be every man's interest to join good performances to spiritual purposes, to subdue the exorbitancies of the flesh, as well as to continue the wouldings of the spirit. Hammond.

WOUND. n. f. [p'uno, Saxon; wounds, Dutch.] A hurt given by violence.
I am faint; my gashes cry for help.—
—So well thy words become thee as thy wounds,
They smack of honour both. Shakspeare's Macbeth.
Now shew the wound mine eyes have made in thee;
Scratch thee but with a pin, and there remains
Some fear of it. Shakspeare.
He flopping, open'd my left side, and took
From thence a rib: wide was the wound,
But suddenly fill'd up and heal'd. Milton.
The aliment of such as have fresh wounds should be mild without stimulating or saline substances. Arbutnot on Aliments.
They feel the smart and see the fear of their former wounds; and know that they must be made a sacrifice to the least attempt towards a change. Swift.

WRA

To WOUND. v. a. [from the noun] To hurt by violence.
Th' untented woundings of a father's curse
Pierce ev'ry fence about thee. Shakspeare's King Lear.

WO'XEN. The participle of to wax. Obsolete. Spenser.

WRACK. n. f. [wrack, Dutch; p'æcce, Saxon, a wretch; the poets use wrack or wreck indifferently as rhyme requires, the later writers of prose commonly wreck. See WRECK.]

1. Destruction of a ship by winds or rocks.
Now, with full sails into the port I move,
And safely can unlade my brest of love;
Quiet and calm: why should I then go back,
To tempt the second hazard of a wrack. Dryden.

2. Ruin; destruction. This is the true Saxon meaning.
With use of evil, growing more and more evil, they took delight in slaughter, and pleased themselves in making others
wrack the effect of their power. Sidney.
A world devote to universal wrack. Milton.

To WRACK. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To destroy in the water; to wreck. [See WRECK.]

And fortify'd her virtue with disdain. Cowley.
Pharaoh's and Joseph's dreams are oftentimes wracked beyond their symbolization. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To WRA'NGLE. v. n. [from wrangelsseur, Dutch. Minshaw. wrong, Skinner.] To dispute p'evilly; to quarrel perversely;
to altercate; to squabble.
Yes, for a score of kingdoms you should wrangle,
And I would call it fair play. Shakspeare's Tempest.

Some unhatch'd practice
Hath puddled his clear spirit; and in such cases,
Men's natures wrangle with inferiour things,
Though great ones are their object. Shakspeare's Othello.
How wrangling a spectacle is it to see those who were by Christ designed for fishers of men, picking up shells on the shore, and unmanly wrangling about them too. Decay of P.
In incomplex ideas we impose on ourselves, and wrangle
with others. Locke.
Amongst unthinking men, who examine not scrupulously ideas, but confound them with words, there must be endless dispute and wrangling. Locke.
His great application to the law had not infected his temper with any thing litigious; he did not know what it was to wrangle on indifferent points. Addison's Freeholder.

WRATH. n. f. [from wrath, Saxon; wrede, Danish; wreed, cruel, Dutch.] Anger; fury; rage.
Thou dost the prayers of the righteous feed
Present before the majesty divine,
And his avenging wrath to clemency incline. Fairy Queen.
With one fool's head I came to wrath,
But I go away with two:
Sweet, adieu! I'll keep my oath,
Patiently to bear my wrath. Shak. Merch. of Venice.
I fear,—left there be debates, envyings, wraths, strifes. Cor.
He hop'd not to escape, but thun
The present, fearing guilty what his wrath
Might suddenly inflict. Milton.
WRATHFUL. adj. [from wrath and full.] Angry; furious; raging.
He cry'd, as raging seas are wont to roar,
When wintry storm his wrathful wreck doth threaten.
Fly from wrath:
Sad be the fights, and bitter fruits of war,
And thousand furies wait on wrathful swords. Fa. Queen.

W R E

How now, your wrathful weapons drawn. Shakespeare.
The true evangelical zeal should abound more in the mild and good natured affections, than the vehement and wrathful passions. Sprat's Sermons.
WRATHFULLY. adv. [from wrathful.] Furiously; passionately.
Gentle friends,
Let's kill him boldly, but not wrathfully. Shakespeare.
WRATHLESS. adj. [from wrath.] Free from anger.
Before his feet, so sheep and lions lay,
Fearless and wrathless, while they heard him play. Waller.
To WREAK. v. a. Old preterite and part. pass. of wroke. [from wrekan, Saxon; wrechen, Dutch; recken, German.]
1. To revenge.
In an ill hour thy foes thee bitter sent,
Another's wrongs to wreak upon thy self. Fairy Queen.
Him all that while occasion did provoke
Against Pyrocles, and new matter fram'd
Upon the old, him stirring to be wroke
Of his late wrongs. Fairy Queen.
Pale death our valiant leader hath oppress'd,
Come wreak his loss, whom bootless ye complain. Fairfax.
2. To execute any violent design. This is the sense in which it is now used.
On me let death wreak all his rage. Milton.
He left the dame,
Resolv'd to spare her life, and save her shame,
But that detested object to remove,
To wreak his vengeance, and to cure her love. Dryden.
Think how you drove him hence, a wand'ring exile,
To distant climes, then think what certain vengeance
His rage may wreak on your unhappy orphan.
Her husband scourg'd away,
To wreak his hunger on the destin'd prey. Pope.
3. It is corruptly written for reck, to heed; to care.
My master is of churlish disposition,
And little wreaks to find the way to heav'n
By doing deeds of hospitality. Shak. As you like it.
WREAK. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Revenge; vengeance.
Fortune, mine avowed foe,
Her wrathful wreaks themselves do now allay. Fa. Queen.
Join with the Goths, and with revengeful war
Take wreak on Rome for this ingratitude, And vengeance on the traitor Saturnine. Shak. Tit. And.
2. Passion; furious fit.
What and if
His sorrows have so overwhelm'd his wits,
Shall we be thus afflicted in his wreaks,
His fits, his frenzy, and his bitterness? Shak. Tit. And.
WREAKFUL. adj. [from wreak.] Revengeful; angry.
Call the creatures,
Whose naked natures live in all the spite
Of wreakful heaven. Shakespeare.
She in Olympus' top
Must visit Vulcan for new arms, to serve her wreakful son. Chapman's Iliad.
WREAKLESS. adj. [I know not whether this word be miswritten for reckless, careless; or comes from wreak, revenge, and means unrevenging.]
So flies the wreakless shepherd from the wolf;
So first the harmless flock doth yield his fleece,
And next his throat unto the butcher's knife. Shak. H. VI.
WREATH. n. f. [from wreath, Saxon.]
1. Any thing curled or twisted.
The wreath of three was made a wreath of five: to these three first titles of the two houses, were added the authorities parliamentary and papal. Bacon's Henry VII.
Clouds began
To darken all the hill, and smoke to roll
In dusky wreaths reluctant flames. Milton's Par. Lost.
He of his tortuous train
Curl'd many a wanton wreath. Milton.
Let altars smook,
And richest gums, and spice, and incense roll
Their fragrant wreaths to heav'n. Smith's Phaed. and Hf.
2. A garland; a chaplet.
Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths,
Our bruised arms hung up for monuments. Shak. R. III.
Dropp'd from his head, a wreath lay on the ground. Resurrection.
The boughs of Lotos, form'd into a wreath,
This monument, thy maiden beauty's due,
High on a plane-tree shall be hung to view. Dryden.
When for thy head the garland I prepare,
A second wreath shall bind Aminta's hair;
And when my choicest songs thy worth proclaim,
Alternate verse shall bless Aminta's name. Prior.
To prince Henry the laurels of his rival are transferred, with the additional wreath of having conquered that rival. Shak. care illustrated.

To WREATH. v. a. preterite wreathed; part. pass. wreathed, wreathen. [from the noun.]
1. To curl; to twist; to convolve.
Longaville
Did never sonnet for her sake compile,
Nor never laid his wreathed arms athwart
His loving bosom, to keep down his heart. Shakespeare.
About his neck
A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,
Who, with her head, nimble in threats approach'd
The opening of his mouth; but suddenly,
Seeing Orlando, it unlink'd itself,
And with indentèd glides did slip away. Shak. As you like it.
The beard of an oat is wreathed at the bottom, and one smooth entire straw at the top: they take only the part that is wreath'd, and cut off the other. Bacon.
2. It is here used for twist.
Impatient of the wound,
He rolls and wreaths his shining body round;
Then headlong shoots beneath the dashing tide. Gay.
3. To interweave; to entwine one in another.
Two chains of pure gold of wreathen work shalt thou make them, and fasten the wreathen chains to the oaches. Ex. xxviii.
As snakes breed in dunghills not singly, but in knots; so in such base noisome hearts you shall ever see pride and ingratitude indivisibly wreath'd and twisted together. South.
Here, where the labourer's hands have form'd a bow'r
Of wreathing trees, in fusing waste an hour. Dryden.
4. To encircle as a garland.
In the flow'r that wreath the sparkling bowl,
Fell address his, and pois'nous serpents rowl. Prior.
5. To encircle as with a garland.
For thee she feeds her hair,
And with thy winding ivy wreathes her lance.
The soldier, from successful camps returning,
With laurel wreath'd, and rich with hostile spoil, Severs the bull to Mars. Prior.
WREATHY. adj. [from wreath.] Spiral; curled; twisted.
That which is preferred at St. Dennis, near Paris, hath wreathy spires, and cochleary turnings about, which agreeth with the description of an unicorn's horn in Ælian. Brown.
WRECK. n. f. [from wreack, Saxon, a miserable person; wraeke, Dutch, a ship broken.]
1. Destruction by being driven on rocks or shallows at sea; destruction by sea.
Fair be ye sure; but hard and obstinate,
As is a rock amidst the raging floods;
Gainst which a ship, of succour desolate,
Doth suffer wreck both of herself and goods. Spenser.
Like those that see their wreck
Ev'n on the rocks of death; and yet they strain,
That death may not them idly find t' attend
To their uncertain task, but work to meet their end. Daniel.
Think not that flying fame reports my fate;
I present, I appear, and my own wreck relate. Dryden.
2. Dissolution by violence.
Not only Paradise,
In this commotion, but the starry cope
Had gone to wreck. Milton's Paradise Lost.
3. Ruin; destruction.
Whether he was
Combin'd with Norway, or did line the rebel
With hidden help and vantage; or that with both
He labour'd in his country's wreck, I know not. Shakespeare.
4. It is misprinted here for wreak.
He cry'd as raging seas are wont to roar,
When wintry storm his wrathful wreck doth threaten. Spenser.
To WRECK. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To destroy by dashing on rocks or sands.
Have there been any more such tempests, wherein the hath wretchedly been wrecked? Spenser on Ireland.
A pilot's thumb,
If wreck'd as homeward he did come. Shak. Macbeth.
The coral found growing upon wrecked ships and lost anchors, that are daily dragged up out of the sea, demonstrates that coral continues to be formed to this day. Woodward.
2. To ruin.
Weak and envy'd, if they should conspire,
They wreck themselves, and he hath his desire. Daniel.
3. In the following passages it is ignorantly used for wreak, in its different senses of revenge and execute.
Eighty odd years of sorrow have I seen,
And each hour's joy wreck'd with a week of teen. Shakespeare.
I faint! I die! the goddess cry'd:
O cruel, could'st thou find none other
To wreck thy spleen on? Parricide!
Like Nero, thou hast slain thy mother. Prior.
To WRECK. v. n. To suffer wreck.
With manlier objects we must try
His contuacy, with such as have more shew
Of worth, of honour, glory, and popular praise,
Rocks whereon greatest men have often wreck'd. Milton.

W R E

WREN. n. f. [from wrenna, Saxon.] A small bird.
The poor wren,
The most diminutive of birds, will fight,
Her young ones in her nest, against the owl. Shakespeare. Macb.
All ages have conceived that the wren is the least of birds, yet the discoveries of America have shew'd us one far less,
the hum-bird not much exceeding a beetle. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
To WRENCH. v. a. [from wringan, Saxon; wrenchen, Dutch.]
1. To pull by violence; to wrench; to force.
Wrench his sword from him. Shakespeare. Othello.
Oh form!
How often do'st thou with thy case, thy habit,
Wrench awe from fools, and tie the wiser souls
To thy false seeming! Shak. Measure for Measure.
Give me that mattock and the wrenching iron. Shakespeare.
Caesar's army, wanting something, demanded a million or discharge, though with no intention it should be granted; but thought by that means to wrench him to their other desires. Bacon.
Sing the Parthian, when transfix'd he lies,
Wrenching the Roman jav'lin from his thighs. Dryden.
Achilles wrench'd it out, and sent again
The hostile gift. Dryden.
Struggling to get loose, I broke the strings, and wrenched out the pegs that fastened my arm to the ground. Gull. Travels.
2. To sprain; to distort.
O most small fault!
How ugly didst thou in Cordelia show?
Which, like an engine, wrenches my frame of nature
From the fix'd place; drew from my heart all love,
And added to the gall. Shakespeare. King Lear.
You wrenched your foot against a stone, and were forced to stay. Swift.
WRENCH. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A violent pull or twist.
2. A sprain.
Some small part of the foot being injured by a wrench, the whole leg thereby loses its strength. Locke.
3. WRENCHES, in Chaucer, signifies means, sleights, subtilties; which is, I believe, the sense here.
He resolv'd to make his profit of this business of Britain, as a quarrel for war; and that of Naples as a wrench and mean for peace. Bacon's Henry VII.
To WREST. v. a. [from wrestan, Saxon.]
1. To twist by violence; to extort by writhing or force.
To wring this sentence, to wrest thereby out of men's hands the knowledge of God's doctrine, is without all reason. Ascham.
To what wretched state reserv'd,
Better end here unborn! Why is life giv'n,
To be thus wrested from us? Milton's Paradise Lost.
Where you charged in person, you were a conqueror: the rebels afterwards recovered strength, and wrested that victory from others that they had lost to you. Dryden.
Our country's cause,
That drew our swords, now wrests 'em from our hand,
And bids us not delight in Roman blood,
Unprofitably shed. Addison's Cato.
O prince, I blush to think what I have said;
But fate has wrested the confession from me. Addison.
2. To distort; to writhe; to force.
So far to extend their speeches, is to wrest them against their meaning.
My father's purposes have been mistook,
And some about him have too lavishly Wrested his meaning and authority. Shakespeare. Henry IV.
Wrest once the law to your authority;
To do a great right, do a little wrong. Shakespeare.
WREST. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Distortion; violence.
Whereas it is concluded, out of those so weak premises, that the retaining of divers things in the church of England, which other reformed churches have cast out, must needs argue that we do not well, unless we can shew that they have done ill: what needed this wrest, to draw out from us an accusation of foreign churches? Hooker.
2. It is used in Spenser and Shakespeare for an active or moving power: I suppose, from the force of a tilter acting with his lance in his rest.
Adown he kelt it with so puissant wrest,
That back again it did aloft rebound,
And gave against his mother earth a groneful sound. F. 2.
Antenor is such a wrest in their affairs,
That their negotiations all must slack'n, Wanting his manage. Shakespeare. Troilus and Cressida.
WRESTER. n. f. [from wrest.] He who wrests.
To WRESTLE. v. n. [from wrestle.]
1. To contend who shall throw the other down.
You have lost the sight of good wrestling. Shakespeare.
If ever he goes alone again, I'll never wrestle for prize more. Shakespeare. As you like it.
Another,

W R E

Another, by a fall in wrestling, started the end of the clasp from the sternon. Wise man's Surgery.
To play or wrestle well, it should be used with those that do it better. Temple.

None in the leap spring with so strong a bound,
Or firmer in the wrestling press the ground. Pope.
2. To struggle; to contend.
I persuaded them, if they lov'd Benedick,
To wish him wrestle with affection,
And never to let Beatrice know of it. Shakespeare.
He knew not how to wrestle with desperate contingencies, and so abhorred to be entangled in such. Clarendon.

WRE'STLER. n. f. [from wrestle.]
1. One who wrestles; one who professes the athletic art.
Was not Charles, the duke's wrestler, here? Shakespeare.
When the young wrestlers at their sport grew warm,
Old Milo wept, to see his naked arm. Denham.
'Tis not from whom, but where we live;
The place does oft those graces give:
Great Julius, on the mountains bred,
A flock perhaps, or herd, had led;
He that the world subdu'd, had been
But the best wrestler on the green. Waller.

2. One who contends in wrestling.
So earnest with thy God, can no new care,
No sense of danger, interrupt thy prayer?
The sacred wrestler, till a blessing giv'n,
Quits not his hold, but halting conquers heav'n. Waller.
Two wrestlers help to pull each other down. Dryden.

WRETCH. n. f. [mecca, Saxon.]
1. A miserable mortal.
When I loved, I was a wretch. Accidence.
She weeps, and says her Henry is depos'd;
He smiles, and says his Edward is install'd;
That the poor wretch, for grief can speak no more. Shak.
The butcher takes away the calf,
And binds the wretch, and beats it when it strives. Shakespeare.
Illustrious wretch! repine not, nor reply:
View not what heav'n ordains, with reason's eye;
For bright the object is, the distance is too high. Prior.

2. A worthless sorry creature.
Bale-minded wretches, are your thoughts so deeply bemired in the trade of ordinary worldlings, as for respect of gain some paultry wool may yield you, to let so much time pass without knowing perfectly her estate? Sidney.

He now
Has these poor men in question: never saw I
Wretches so quake; they kneel, they kiss the earth, Forfear themselves as often as they speak. Shakespeare.
Title of honour, worth and virtue's right,
Should not be given to a wretch so vile. Daniel's Civil War.
When they are gone, a company of starved hungry wretches shall take their places. L'Estrange.

3. It is used by way of flight, or ironical pity, or contempt.
When soon away the wisp do go;
Poor wretch was never frightened so:
He thought his wings were much too slow,
O'erjoy'd they so were parted. Dryden's Nymphid.
Then, if the spider find him fast beset,
She issues forth, and runs along her loom:
She joys to touch the captive in her net,
And drags the little wretch in triumph home. Dryden.

4. It is sometimes a word of tenderness, as we now say poor thing.
Chastened but thus, and thus his lesson taught,
The happy wretch the put into her breast. Sidney.

WRETCHED. adj. [from wretch.]
1. Miserable; unhappy.
These we should judge to be most miserable, but that a wretcher fort there are, on whom, whereas nature hath bestowed ripe capacity, their evil disposition seriously goeth about therewith to apprehend God, as being not God. Hooker.

O cruel death! to those you are more kind,
Than to the wretched mortals left behind. Waller.
Why do'st thou drive me
To range all o'er a waste and barren place,
To find a friend? The wretched have no friends. Dryden.

2. Calamitous; afflictive.
3. Sorry; pitiful; paltry; worthless.
When God was served with legal sacrifices, such was the miserable and wretched condition of some mens minds, that the best of every thing they had, being culled out for themselves, if there were in their flocks any poor, starved, or diseased thing not worth the keepings, they thought it good enough for the altar of God. Hooker.

Affected noise is the most wretched thing.
That to contempt can empty scriblers bring. Roscommon.
Forgive the many failings of those who, with their wretched art, cannot arrive to those heights that you possess. Dryden.

4. Despicable; hatefully contemptible.
An adventure worthy to be remembered for the unused examples therein, as well of true natural goodness as of wretched ungratefulness. Sidney.

WRE'TCHEDLY. adv. [from wretched.]
1. Miserably; unhappily.
From these two wars, so wretchedly entered into, the duke's ruin took its date. Clarendon.

2. Meanly; despicably.
When such little shuffling arts come once to be ripped up, and laid open, how poorly and wretchedly must that man stick,
who finds himself guilty and baffled too? Sidney.

WRE'TCHEDNESS. n. f. [from wretched.]
1. Misery; unhappiness; afflicted state.
My misery cannot be greater than it is: fear not the danger of my blind steps, I cannot fall worse than I am, and do not obstinately continue to infect thee with my wretchedness. Sidney.

He gan inquire
What hard mishap him brought to such distress,
And made that caitiff's thrall the thrall of wretchedness. F. & C.
Clarion did at last decline
To lowest wretchedness; and is there then Such rancor in the hearts of mighty men? Spenser.

When they are weary of wars, and brought down to extreme wretchedness, then they creep a little, and sue for grace,
'till they have recovered their strength again. Spenser.
I love not to see wretchedness o'ercharg'd,
And duty in his service perishing. Shakespeare.

We have with the feeling lost the very memory of such wretchedness as our forefathers endured by those wars, of all others the most cruel. Raleigh.

2. Pitifulness; despicableness.
WRE'TCHLESS. n. f. [This is, by I know not whose corruption, written for reckless.] Careless; mindless; heedless.

For any man to put off his present repentance, on contemplation of a possibility that his latter repentance may serve the turn, is the most wretchless presumption, and hath no promise of mercy annexed to it. Hemmond.

If persons of so circumspect a piety have been thus overtaken, what security can there be for our wretchless oisiance?
Government of the Tongue.

To WRIGGLE. v. n. [spugan, Saxon; ruggelen, Dutch.] To move to and fro with short motions.
If sheep or thy lamb fall a wriggling with tail,
Go by and by search it, whilst help may prevail. Tusser.

The busy importunities of these extentional phantoms I look upon as contemptuously, as upon the quick wrigglings up and down of pismires. More.

The excellency of sawing is to keep kerf exactly in the line marked to be fawn, without wriggling on either side.
Moxon's Mech. Exer.

To bed went the bridegroom and the bride:
Was never such an ill-pair'd couple ty'd;
Reckless he to's'd, and tumbled to and fro,
And roll'd and wriggled farther off for woe. Dryden.

How wildly will ambition steer!
A vermin wriggling in th' usurper's ear. Dryden.
And both he and his successors would often wriggle in their seats as long as the cushion lasted. Swift.

To WRIGGLE. v. a. To put in a quick reciprocating motion;
to introduce by shifting motion.
Ralpho was mounted now, and gotten O'erthwart his beast with active vaulting,
Wriggling his body to recover
His seat, and cast his right leg over. Hudibras.

A slim thin-gutted fox made a hard shift to wriggle his body into a hen-roof. L'Estrange.

WRIGGLETAIL. n. f. For wrigglingtail. See WRIGGLE.
My ragged ronts all thiver and shake;
They went in the wind, wagg their wriggletails,
Peack as a peacocks, but nought it avails. Spenser.

WRIGHT. n. f. [pūhtā, pūhtā, Saxon.] A workman; an artificer; a maker; a manufacturer.
It is impossible duly to consider these things, without being rapt into admiration of the infinite wisdom of the Divine Architect, and contemplating the arrogant pretences of the world and animal wrights, and much more the productions of chance. Cheyne.

The verb To write has the same found with wright, a workman, right or equity, and rite or ceremony; but spelled very differently. Watts's Logic.

To WRING. v. a. preter. and part. pass. wringed and wrung.
[spungan, Saxon.]
1. To twist; to turn round with violence.
The priest shall wring off his head, and burn it on the altar. Lev. i. 15.

2. To force out of any body by contortion.
He thrust the fleece together, and wringed the dew out of it, a bowl full of water. Jude. vi. 37.
The dregs all the wicked shall wring out and drink. Pf. lxxxv.
The figure of a sturdy woman, done by Michael Angelo, washing and winding of linen cloths; in which act the wringing out the water that made the fountain. Watts.

W R I

Apply mild detergents on pledgets of lint over it, with a compress wring out. Wise man.

3. To squeeze; to press.
In sleep I heard him say, sweet Desdemona,
Let us be wary, let us hide our loves!
And then, sir, would he gripe and wring my hand. Shakespeare.

4. To writhe.
The filly owner of the goods
Weeps over them, and wrings his hapless hands. Shakespeare.

5. To pinch.
The king began to find where his shoe did wring him, and that it was his depressing the house of York that did rankle and fester the affections of his people. Bacon's Henry VII.
If he had not been too much grieved, and wrung by an uneasy and freight fortune, he would have been an excellent man of business. Clarendon.

6. To force by violence; to extort.
I had rather coin my heart,
And drop my blood for drachmas, than to wring
From the hard hands of peasants their vile trash
By any indirection. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

Who can be bound by any solemn vow
To wring the widow from her custom'd right,
And have no other reason for his wrong,
But that he was bound by a solemn oath? Shakespeare's Henry VI.

That which I must speak,
Must either punish me, not being believ'd,
Or wring redress from you. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

Threatening cruel death, constrain'd the bride
To wring from me, and tell to them my secret. Milton.

7. To harass; to distress; to torture.
He dives into the king's soul, and there scatters
Doubts, dangers, wringing of the conscience,
Fear and despair, and all these for his marriage. Shakespeare.

Pleasure enchants, impetuous rage transports,
And grief dejects and wrings the tortur'd soul. Roscommon.
Did'st thou taste but half the griefs
That wring my soul, thou couldst not talk thus coldly. Add.

8. To distort; to turn to a wrong purpose.
To wring this sentence, to wrest thereby out of men's hands the knowledge of God's doctrine, is without all reason. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

Lord, how dare these men thus wring the scriptures? Whitgift.
To persecute with extortion.
The merchant-adventurers have been often wronged and wringed to the quick; but were never quick and lively in thanks to those by whose endeavours they were freed. Haywo.

To WRING. v. n. To writhe with anguish.
'Tis all men's office to speak patience
To those that wring under the load of sorrow;
But no man's virtue nor sufficiency,
To be so moral, when he shall endure
The like himself. Shakespeare's Much Ado about Nothing.

WRINGER. n. f. [from wring.] One who squeezes the water out of cloaths.
One Mrs. Quickly is in the manner of his nurse, his laundress, his washer, and his wringer. Shakespeare.

WRINKLE. n. f. [pūncle, Saxon; wrinkel, Dutch.]
1. Corruption or furrow of the skin or the face.
Give me that glass, and therein will I read:
No deeper wrinkles yet? Hath sorrow struck
So many blows upon this face of mine,
And made no deeper wounds? Shakespeare's Richard II.

She hath continued a virgin without any visible token, or least wrinkle of old age. Hawel's Vocal Forest.
To see a beggar's brat in riches flow,
Adds not a wrinkle to my even brow.

Though you and all your senseless tribes,
Could art, or time, or nature bribe,
To make you look like beauty's queen,
And hold for ever at fifteen;
No bloom of youth can ever blind
The cracks and wrinkles of your mind:
All men of sense will pass your door,
And crowd to Stella's at fourscore. Dryden.

2. Any roughness.
Our British heav'n was all serene;
No threatening cloud was nigh,
Not the least wrinkle to deform the sky. Dryden.

To WRINKLE. v. a. [pūncian, Saxon.]
1. To corrugate; to contract into furrows.
It is still fortune's use
To let the wrinkled man outlive his wealth,
To view with hollow eye and wrinkled brow
An age of poverty. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

Scorn makes us wrinkle up the nose, and stretch the nostrils also, at the same time drawing up the upper lip. Bacon.

Here steams ascend,
That in mixt fumes the wrinkled nose offend.
Here stood ill-nature, like an ancient maid,
Her wrinkled form in black and white array'd. Pope.

W R I

2. To make rough or uneven.
A keen north-wind, blowing dry,
Wrinkled the face of deluge, as decay'd. Milton.

WRIST. n. f. [pūyt, Saxon.] The joint by which the hand is joined to the arm.
He took me by the wrist, and held me hard. Shakespeare.
The brawn of the arm must appear full, shadowed on one side; then show the wrist-bone thereof. Peasbarn.

The axillary artery, below the cubit, divideth unto two parts; the one running along the radius, and passing by the wrist, or place of the pulse, is at the fingers subdivided unto three branches. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

WRISTBAND. n. f. [wrist and band.] The fastening of the shirt at the hand.
WRIT. n. f. [from write.]

1. Any thing written; scripture. This sense is now chiefly used in speaking of the Bible.
The church, as a witness, preacheth his mere revealed truth, by reading publicly the sacred Scripture; so that a second kind of preaching is the reading of holy writ. Hooker.

Divine Eliza, sacred empress,
Live she for ever, and her royal places
Be fill'd with praises of divinely wits,
That her eternize with their heavenly writs. Spenser.

Bagdad rises out of the ruins of the old city of Babylon, so much spoken of in holy writ. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.
Others famous after known,
Although in holy writ not nam'd. Paradise Regain'd.

He cannot keep his fingers from meddling with holy writ.
More's Divine Dialogues.

Sacred writ our reason does exceed.
His story, filled with so many surprising incidents, bears so close an analogy with what is delivered in holy writ, that it is capable of pleasing the most delicate reader, without giving offence to the most scrupulous. Addison's Spectator.

Of ancient writ unlocks the learned store,
Consults the dead, and lives past ages o'er. Pope.

2. A judicial process.
Hold up your head: hold up your hand,
Would it were not my lot to shew ye
This cruel writ, wherein you stand Indicted by the name of Cloe. Prior.

3. A legal instrument.
The king is fled to London,
To call a present court of parliament:
Let us pursue him, ere the writs go forth. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

I folded the writ up in form of th' other,
Subscrib'd it, gave the impression, plac'd it safely,
The chanceler never known. Shakespeare.
For every writ of entry, whereupon a common recovery is to be suffered, the queen's fine is to be rated upon the writ original, if the lands comprised therein be held. Ayliffe.

WRIT. The preterite of write.
When Sappho writ,
By their applause the critics show'd their wit. Prior.

WRITATIVE. A word of Pope's coining: not to be imitated.
Increase of years makes men more talkative, but less writative;
to that degree, that I now write no letters but of plain how d'ye's. Pope to Swift.

To WRITE. v. a. preterite wrote or wrote; part. pass. written, writ, or wrote. [pūtan, apūtan, Saxon; ad rita, Islandick;
wreta, a letter, Gothick.]

1. To express by means of letters.
I'll write you down,
The which shall point you forth, at every fitting,
What you must say. Shakespeare's

Men's evil manners live in-brass, their virtues we write in water. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
When a man hath taken a wife, and she find no favour in his eyes, then let him write her a bill of divorcement. Deut.

Write ye this song for you, and teach it Israel. Deut. xxxi.
David wrote a letter to Joab, and sent it by Uriah. 2 Sa. xi.
The time, the place, the manner how to meet,
Were all in punctual order plainly writ. Dryden.

2. To engrave; to impress.
Cain was so fully convinced that every one had a right to destroy such a criminal, that he cries out, every one that findeth me shall slay me; so plain was it writ in the hearts of all mankind. Locke.

3. To produce as an author.
When more indulgent to the writer's ease,
You are so good, to be so hard to please;
No such convulsive pangs it will require
To write—the pretty things that you admire. Granville.

4. To tell by letter.
I chose to write the thing I durst not speak
To her I lov'd. Prior.

To WRITE. v. n.
1. To perform the act of writing.
I have seen her rise from her bed, take forth paper, fold it, and write upon't. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

WRI

- Bassanio gave his ring away
Unto the judge that begg'd it; and his clerk,
That took some pains in writing, he begg'd mine. Shakespeare.
2. To play the author.
Hearts, tongues, figures, scribes, bards, poets, cannot Think, speak, cast, write, sing, number
His love to Antony. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.
There is not a more melancholy object in the learned world than a man who has written himself down. Addison.
3. To tell in books.
I past the melancholy flood,
With that grim ferryman which poets wrote of. Shakespeare. R. III.
4. To send letters.
He wrote for all the Jews, concerning their freedom. 1 Esdr.
5. To call one's self; to be entitled; to use the title of.
About it, and wrote happy when thou'lt done. Shakespeare.
Let it not your wonder move,
Lest your laughter that I love;
Though I now wrote fifty years,
I have had, and have my peers. Ben. Johnson.
He writes himself divina providentia, whereas other bishops only use divina permissione. Ayliffe.
6. To compose; to form compositions:
Chaste moral writing we may learn from hence,
Neglect of which no wit can recompense;
The fountain which from Helicon proceeds,
That sacred stream, should never water weeds. Waller.
They can write up to the dignity and character of their authors. Felton on the Classics.
- WRITER. n. f. [from write.]
1. One who practises the art of writing.
2. An author.
All three were ruined by justice and sentence, as delinquents;
and all three famous writers. Bacon.
Peaceable times are the best to live in, though not so proper to furnish materials for a writer. Addison's Freeholder.
Writers are often more influenced by a desire of fame, than a regard to the publick good. Addison's Freeholder.
Would a writer know how to behave himself with relation to posterity, let him consider in old books what he finds that he is glad to know, and what omissions he most laments. Swift.
- TO WRITHE. v. a. [from write, Saxon.]
1. To distort; to deform with distortion.
It cannot be this weak and writth'd shrimp;
Should strike such terror in his enemies. Shakespeare. Henry VI.
Hatefullest writth'd their jaws
With foot and cinders. Milton.
Her mouth she writth'd her forehead taught to frown,
Her eyes to sparkle fires to love unknown;
Her fallow cheeks her envious mind did show,
And ev'ry feature spoke aloud the curtness of a shrew. Dryden.
2. To twist with violence.
Then Satan first knew pain,
And writth'd him to and fro convolv'd. Milton's Parad. Lost.
Amid' the plaited scales it took its course,
And in the spiral marrow spent its force;
The monster hiss'd aloud, and rag'd in vain,
And writth'd his body to and fro with pain;
He bit the dart. Addison.
3. To wrest; to force by violence.
The reason which he yieldeth, sheweth the least part of his meaning to be that whereunto his words are writth'd. Hook.
4. To twist.
The king of heav'n
Bar'd his red arm, and launching from the sky
His writth'n bolt, not shaking empty smoke,
Down to the deep abyss the flaming felon strook. Dryden.
- TO WRITHE. v. n. To be convolved with agony or torture.
Let each be broken on the racks;
Then, with what life remains, impaled, and left
To writhe at leisure round the bloody stake. Addison.
- TO WRITHE. v. a. [from writhe.] To wrinkle; to corrugate.
Her writth'd skin, as rough as maple rind,
So scabby was, that would have loathed all womankind. Spenser.
- WRITING. n. f. [from writ.]
1. A legal instrument.
2. A compofure; a book.
They thought no other writings in the world should be studied, inasmuch as one of their great prophets exhorting them to cast away all respects unto human writings, to his motion they condescended. Hooker.
Such arguments had an invincible force with those pagan philosophers, who became Christians, as we find in most of their writings. Addison.
3. A written paper of any kind.
In at his windows throw
Writings, all tending to the great opinion
That Rome holds of his name. Shakespeare. Julius Caesar.
- WRITINGMASTER. n. f. One who teaches to write.
The facility of which I spoke consists not in bold strokes, if it makes not a great effect at a distance: that fort of freedom belongs rather to a writingmaster than a painter. Dryden.

WRO

- WRITTEN. The participle passive of write.
Their doctrine and their story written left,
They die. Milton.

translator to shew himself, but the greatest wrong which can be done to the reputation of the dead. Dryden.
Cowley preferred a garden and a friend, to those whom in our own wrong we call the great. Dryden.
Expecting more in my own wrong,
Protracting life, I've liv'd a day too long. Dryden.
2. Error; not right.
Be not blindly guided by the throng,
The multitude is always in the wrong. Reformers.
One spoke much of right and wrong. Milton.
Proceed: quoth Dick, fir, I aver
You have already gone too far;
When people once are in the wrong,
Each line they add is much too long:
Who fastest walks, but walks astray,
Is only farthest from his way. Prior.
In the judgment of right and wrong, every man has a self. Watts's Logic.
- WRONG. adj. [from the noun.]
1. Not morally right; not agreeable to propriety or truth.

YAW

Y, At the beginning of words, is a consonant; at the end, and when it follows a consonant, is a vowel, and has the sound of i. It is used at the end of words, and whenever two i's would come together; and in words derived from the Greek, to express the v. Y was much used by the Saxons, whence y is found for i in the old English writers.

YACHT. n. f. A small ship for carrying passengers.

YARD. n. f. [zeap, Saxon.]

1. Inclosed ground adjoining to an house.
One of the lions leaped down into a neighbour's yard, where, nothing regarding the crowing of the cocks, he eat them up.
Xanthus one day sent Æsop into the yard, and bade him look well about him.
His wanton kids with budding horns prepar'd,
Fight harmless battles in his homely yard.
A peer, a counsellor, and a judge, are not to be measured by the common yard, but by the pole of special grace. Bacon.
The arms, spread cross in a straight line, and measured from one end of the long finger on one hand, to that of the other; made a measure equal to the stature, and is named a fathom. Half of that, viz. from the end of the long finger of either arm, so spread, to the middle of the breast is, with us, called a yard.
An aqueduct of a Gothic structure, that conveys water from mount St. Francis to Spoleto, from the foundation of the lowest arch to the top, is two hundred and thirty yards. Addison.
2. The supports of the sails.
A breeze from shore began to blow;
The sailors ship their oars, and cease to row;
Then hoist their yards a-trip, and all their sails
Let fall to court the wind.
All the revolutions in nature can give it nothing more than different degrees of dimensions. What affinity has thinking with such attributes? no more than there is between a syllogism and a yardwand.
3. The supports of the sails.
A breeze from shore began to blow;
The sailors ship their oars, and cease to row;
Then hoist their yards a-trip, and all their sails
Let fall to court the wind.

YARDWAND. n. f. [yard and wand.] A measure of a yard.

All the revolutions in nature can give it nothing more than different degrees of dimensions. What affinity has thinking with such attributes? no more than there is between a syllogism and a yardwand.

YARE. adj. [zeap, Saxon.] Ready; dextrous; eager.
Yare, yare, good Iros, quick;—methinks I hear Antony call.
I do desire to learn, Sir; and I hope, if you have occasion to use me for your turn, you shall find me yare.

YARELY. adv. [from yare.] Dextrously; skilfully.
The filken tackles,
Swell with the touches of those flower-soft hands
That yarely frame the office.

YARN. n. f. [zeap, Saxon.] Spun wool; woollen thread.
You would be another Penelope; yet they say, all the yarn she spun in Ulysses's absence, did but fill Ithaca full of moths.
The web of our life is of a mingled yarn, good and ill together; our virtues would be proud, if our faults whipt them not; and our crimes would despair, if they were not cherish'd by our virtues.
Yarn is a commodity very proper to this country, which of all others ought to be most encouraged.
It may be useful for the reeling of yarn.
The fates but only spin the coarser clue,
The finest of the wool is left for you.
Spare me but one small portion of the twine,
And let the sisters cut below your line:
The rest among the rubbids may they sweep,
Or add it to the yarn of some old miser's heap.

TO YARR. v. n. [from the found, harr, Lat.] To growl, or snarl like a dog.

YARROW. n. f. A plant which grows wild on the dry banks, and is used in medicine.

YAWL. n. f. A little vessel belonging to a ship, for convenience of passing to and from it.

TO YAWN. v. n. [zeon, Saxon.]

1. To gape; to oscitate; to have the mouth opened involuntarily by fumes, as in sleepiness.
The sad-ey'd justice, with his surly hum,
Delivering o'er to executors pale
The lazy, yawning drone.
In yawning, the inner parchment of the ear is extended.
When a man yawneth, he cannot hear so well.
At length shook off himself, and ask'd the dame;
And asking yawn'd, for what intent she came?
To whom the yawning pilot fast asleep,
Me didst thou bid, to trust the treacherous deep?
2. To open wide.
The gashes,
That bloodily did yawn upon his face.
'Tis now the very witching time of night,
When churchyards yawn.
Now will I dam up this thy yawning mouth,
For swallowing up the treasure of the realm.
He shall cast up the wealth by him devour'd,
Like vomit, from his yawning entrails pour'd.
Hell at last
Yawning receiv'd them whole, and on them clos'd.
The sword pierc'd his tender sides;
Down fell the beauteous youth; the yawning wound
Gush'd out a purple stream.
High she rear'd her arm, and with her sceptre struck
The yawning cliff: from its disparted height
Adown the mount the gushing torrent ran.
3. To express desire by yawning.
The chiefest thing at which lay-reformers yawn, is, that the clergy may, through conformity in condition, be poorer as the apostles were. In which one circumstance, if they imagine to great perfection, they must think that church which hath such store of mendicant friars, a church in that respect most happy.

YAWN. n. f. [from the verb.] Oscitation.
Thee, Paridell, the mark'd thee, there
Stretch'd on the rack of a too easy chair;
And heard thy everlasting yawn confess
The pains and penalties of idleness.

2. Gape; hiatus.
Hence to the borders of the marsh they go,
That mingles with the baleful streams below;
And sometimes with a mighty yawn, 'tis said,
Opens a dismal passage to the dead,
Who, pale with fear, the reading earth survey,
And startle at the sudden flash of day.

YAWNING. adj. [from yawn.] Sleepy; slumbering.
Ere to black Hecate's summons
The shard-born beetle, with his drowsy hums,
Hath rung night's yawning peal, there shall be done
A deed of dreadful note.

Y'CLAD. part. for clad. Cloathed.
Her sight did ravish, but her grace in speech,
Her words yelad with wisdom's majesty,
Make me from wond'ring fall to weeping joys.

Y'CLEP'D. [The participle passive of clepe, to call; clepan, Saxon; with the increasing particle y, which was used in the old English in the preterites and participles, from the Saxon ge.] Called; termed; named.
But come, thou goddess, fair and free,
In heav'n yelap'd Euphrosine,
And by men, heart-easing mirth.

YDRA'D. The old pret. of to dread.

YE. The nominative plural of thou.
Ye are they which justify yourselves.
Ye, or gea, Saxon; ja, Danish, German, and Dutch.] Yes. A particle of affirmation.
I am weary; yea, my memory is tir'd.
A rascally, yea, forsooth, knave, to bear a gentleman in hand, and then stand upon security.

From these Philippine are brought costly spices, yea, and gold too?
Abb't's Description of the World.
Yea, hath God said, ye shall not eat of every tree in the garden.
Let your conversation be yea, yea; nay, nay.
All the promises of God are yea, and amen; that is, are verified, which is the importance of yea, and confirmed, which is meant by amen, into an immutability.
They durst abide
Jehovah thund'ring out of Sion, thron'd
Between the cherubim; yea, often plac'd
Within his sanctuary itself their shrines.
Why do disputes in wrangling spend the day?
Whilst one says only yea, and t'other nay.
Notwithstanding this great proximity of man to himself; yea, and notwithstanding the observations made in all ages, we still remain ignorant of many things concerning ourselves.
TO YEAD, or YEDE. v. n. preterite yode. [This word seems to have been corruptly formed from geob, the Saxon preterite of gan.] To go; to march. Obsolete.
They wander at will, and stay at pleasure,
And to their folds yede at their own leisure.
Then had the knight this lady yede aloof,
And to an hill herself withdraw aside,
From whence the might behold that battle's proof,
And oke be safe from danger far desir'd.
Yet for the yode therat half aghast,
And Kiddy the door sparred after her fast.
That same mighty man of God,
That bloud red billows like a wall'd front,
On either side disparted with his rod,
'Till that his army dry-foot through them yode.
TO YEARN. v. n. [canian, Saxon.] To bing young. Used of sheep.
The skillful shepherd pecl'd me certain wands;
He struck them up before the fulsome ewes,
Who, then conceiving, did in yearning time
Fole party-colour'd lambs.
So many days my ewes have been with young;
So many weeks, ere the poor fools will yea.
This I scarcely drag along,
Who yearning on the rocks has leit her young.
Ewes year the polled lamb with the least danger.
YEANLING. n. f. [from yeau.] The young of sheep.
All the yearlings which were streak'd and pied,
Should fall as Jacob's hire.
YEAR. n. f. [zeap, Saxon.]
If one by the word year mean twelve months of thirty days each, i. e. three hundred and sixty days; another intend a solar year of three hundred sixty-five days; and a third mean a lunar year, or twelve lunar months, i. e. three hundred fifty-four days, there will be a great variation and error in their account of things, unless they are well apprized of each other's meaning.
See the minutes, how they run:
How many makes the hour full compleat,
How many hours bring about the day,
How many days will finish up the year,
How many years a mortal man may live.
With the year
Seasons return, but not to me returns
Day, or the sweet approach of morn.
Oviparous creatures have eggs enough at first conceived in them, to serve them for many years laying, allowing such a proportion for every year, as will serve for one or two incubations.
He accepted a curacy of thirty pounds a year.
It is often used plurally, without a plural termination.
I fight not once in forty year.
In the plural old age.
Some mumble-news,
That smiles his cheek in years, and knows the trick
To make my lady laugh when she's dispos'd,
Told our intents.
There died also Cecile, mother to King Edward IV. being of extreme years, and who had lived to see three princes of her body crown'd, and four murder'd.
He look'd in years, yet in his years were teen,
A youthful vigour, and autumnal green.
YE'ARLING. adj. [from year.] Being a year old.
A yearling bullock to thy name shall smoke;
Untam'd, unconscious of the galling yoke.
YE'ARLY. adj. [from year.] Annual; happening every year; lasting a year.
The yearly course that brings this day about,
Shall never see it but a holiday.
Why the changing oak should shed
The yearly honour of his stately head;
Whilst the distinguishing yew is ever teen,
Unchang'd his branch, and permanent his green.
YE'ARLY. adv. Annually; once a year.
He that outlives this day, and sees old age,

Will yearly on the vigil feast his neighbours,
And say, tomorrow is Saint Crispian.
For numerous blessings yearly shower'd,
And property with plenty crown'd;
For freedom still maintain'd alive;
For these, and more, accept our pious praise.
TO YEARN. v. n. [earnan, Saxon.] To feel great internal uneasiness. In Spenser it is sometimes earn.
He despis'd to tread in due degree,
But chaff'd, and foam'd, with courage fierce and stern,
And to be eas'd of that base burden still did yea.
Make the libbard stern
Leave roaring, when in rage he for revenge did yea.
Though peeping close into the thick,
Might see the moving of some quick;
But were it fairy, fiend, or snake,
My courage earn'd it to wake,
And manfully therat shot.
Falt'ring, he is dead,
And we must yea therefore.
Joseph made haste; for his bowels did yea upon his brother: and he fought where to weep, and he enter'd into his chamber.
When the fair Leucothoe he spy'd,
To check his floods, impatient Phœbus yea'd,
Though all the world was in his course concern'd,
Yet for all the yearning pain
Y' have suffer'd for their loves, in vain,
I fear they'll prove so nice and coy,
To have, and t' hold, and to enjoy.
Where our heart does but relent, his melts; where our eye pines, his bowels yea.
At beholding the miseries of others, they find such yearnings in their bowels, and such sensible commotions rais'd in their breasts, as they can by no means satisfy.
Your mother's heart yearns towards you.
Unmov'd the mind of Ithacus remain'd;
But Anticles, unable to controul,
Spoke loud the language of his yearning soul.
TO YEARN. v. a. To grieve; to vex.
She laments for it, that it would Yern your heart to see it.
YEST. n. f. [zeap, Saxon.]
1. The foam, spume, or flower of beer in fermentation; barm.
Yeast and outward means do fail,
And have no power to work on ale.
When drays bound high, they never cross behind,
Where bubbling yeast is blown by gusts of wind.
2. The spume on a troubled sea.
Now the ship boing the moon with her main-mast, and anon swallow'd with yeast and froth, as you'd thrust a cork into a hoghead.
YE'ET. adj. [from yeet.] Frothy; spummy.
Though you untie the winds, and let them fight
Against the churches; though the yeet waves
Confound and swallow navigation up.
YELK. n. f. [from zealepe, yellow, Saxon.] The yellow part of the egg. It is commonly pronounced, and often written yolk.
The yolk of the egg conduceth little to the generation of the bird, but only to the nourishment of the same: for if a chicken be opened, when it is new hatched, you shall find much of the yolk remaining.
That a chicken is formed out of the yolk of an egg, with some ancient philosophers the people still opinion.
All the feather'd kind,
From th' included yolk, not ambient white arose.
TO YELL. v. n. To cry out with horror and agony.
Nor the night raven, that still deadly yells;
Nor grisly vultures make us once affear'd.
Each new morn,
New widows howl, new orphans cry; new sorrows
Strike heav'n on the face, that it refoonds,
As if it felt with Scotland, and yell'd out
Like syllables of doleour.
Now worse than e'er he was before,
Poor Puck doth yell, poor Puck doth roar,
That wak'd queen Mab, who doubted fore
Some treason had been wrought her.
Yelling monsters, that with ceaseless cry
Surround me.
Night-struck fancy dreams the yelling ghost.
YELL. n. f. [from the verb.] A cry of horror.
With like tim'rous accent and dire yell,
As when, by night and negligence, the fire
Is spread in populous cities.
Hence are heard the groans of ghosts, the pains
Of founding lathes, and of dragging chains.
The Trojan stood astonish'd at their cries,
And ask'd his guide from whence those yells arise.

Others in frantick mood
Run howling through the streets; their hideous yells
Rend the dark welkin. Philips.
YELLOW. adj. [yalepe, Saxon; gheleuve, Dutch; giallo, Italian.] Being of a bright glaring colour, as gold.
Only they that come to see a fellow
In a long motley coat, guarded with yellow,
Will be deceiv'd. Shaksp. Henry VIII. Prologue.
He brought the green car and the yellow sheaf. Milton.
After a lively orange, followed an intense bright and copious yellow, which was also the best of all the yellows. Newton.
Negligent of food,
Scarce seen, he wades among the yellow broom. Thomson.
YELLOWBOY. n. f. A gold coin. A very low word.
John did not starve the cause; there wanted not yellowboys to see council. Arbutnot's John Bull.
YELLOWHAMMER. n. f. A bird.
YELLOWISH. adj. [from yellow.] Approaching to yellow.
Although amber be commonly of a yellowish colour, yet there is found of it also black, white, brown, green, blue, and purple. Woodward's Natural History.
YELLOWISHNESS. n. f. [from yellowish.] The quality of approaching to yellow.
Bruised madder, being drenched with the like alkalize solution, exchanged its yellowishness for a redness. Boyle.
YELLOWNESS. n. f. [from yellow.]
1. The quality of being yellow.
Apples, covered in lime and ashes, were well matured, as appeared in the yellowness and sweetness. Bacon's Natural Hist.
Yellowness of the skin and eyes, and a saffron-coloured urine, are signs of an inflammatory disposition of the liver. Arbutnot.
2. It is used in Shakespeare for jealousy.
Ford I will possess with yellowness. Shakespeare.
YELLOWS. n. f. A disease in horses. It owes its original to obstructions in the gall-pipe, which are caused by slimy or gritty matter; or to the stoppage of the roots of those little ducts opening into that pipe, by the like matter; or to a compres-sion of them by a fulness and plenitude of the blood-vessels that lie near them. When the gall-pipe, or the roots rather of the common ducts of that pipe, are any wise stopped up, that matter which should be turned into gall is taken up by the vein, and carried back again into the mass of blood, and tinctures it yellow; so that the eyes, inside of the lips, flaver, and all the parts of the horse, that are capable of shewing the colour, appear yellow. Forrier's Dict.
His horse sped with spavins, and raled with the yellows.
Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.
TO YELP. v. n. [gelban, Saxon.] To bark as a beagle-hound after his prey.
A little herd of England's timorous deer,
Maz'd with a yelping kennel of French curs. Shak. H. VI.
YEOMAN. n. f. [Of this word the original is much doubted;
the true etymology seems to be that of Junius, who derives it from genan, Frisick, a villager.]
1. A man of a small estate in land; a farmer; a gentleman farmer.
Gentlemen should use their children as the honest farmers and substantial yeomen do theirs. Locke.
He that has a spaniel by his side is a yeoman of about one hundred pounds a year, an honest man: he is just qualified to kill an hare. Addison.
2. It seems to have been anciently a kind of ceremonious title given to soldiers: whence we have still yeomen of the guard.
Tall yeomen seemed they, and of great might,
And were entranced ready still for fight. Fairy Queen.
You, good yeomen,
Whose limbs were made in England, flew us here
The mettle of your pasture. Shaksp. Henry V.
He instituted, for the security of his person, a band of fifty archers, under a captain, to attend him, by the name of yeomen of his guard. Bacon's Henry VII.
Th' appointment for th' ensuing night he heard;
And therefore in the cavern had prepar'd
Two brawny yeomen of his trusty guard. Dryden.
At Windsor St. John whispers me i' th' ear;
The waiters stand in ranks, the yeomen cry
Make way for the dean, as if a duke pass'd by. Swift.
3. It was probably a freeholder not advanced to the rank of a gentleman.
His grandfather was Lionel duke of Clarence,
Third son to the third Edward king of England:
Sprung creticles yeomen from so deep a root? Shak. H. VI.
4. It seems to have had likewise the notion of a gentleman servant.
A jolly yeoman, marshal of the hall,
Whose name was appetite, he did bestow
Both guests and meats. Spenser.
YEOMANRY. n. f. [from yeoman.] The collective body of yeomen.
This did amortize a great part of the lands of the kingdom unto the hold and occupation of the yeomanry, or middle people, of a condition between gentlemen and cottagers. Bacon.

YET

TO YERK. v. a. [Of unknown etymology.] To throw out or move with a spring.
A leaping horse is said to yerk, or strike out his hind legs, when he flings and kicks with his whole hind quarters, stretching out the two hinder legs near together, and even, to their full extent. Farris's Dict.
Their wounded steeds
Fret fetlock deep in gore, and with wild rage
Yerk out their armed heels at their dead masters. Shaksp.
YERK. n. f. [from the verb.] A quick motion.
TO YERN. v. a. See YEARN.
I am not covetous of gold;
It yerns me not, if men my garments wear. Shak. H. V.
YES. adv. [gyre, Saxon.] A term of affirmation; the affirmative particle opposed to no.
This were a fit speech for a general in the head of an army, when going to battle: yes, and it is no less fit speech in the head of a council, upon a deliberation of entrance into a war. Bacon.
Yes, you despise the man to books confin'd,
Who from his study rails at human kind,
Though what he learns he speaks. Pope.
YE'STER. adj. [ghister, Dutch; hesternus, Latin.] Being next before the present day. It is not often used but in composition with another word, as day or night.
Love might as well be sow'd upon our sands,
As in a breast so barren:
To love an enemy, the only ene
Remaining too, whom yester fun beheld Must ring her charms. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
YE'STERDAY. n. f. [gistanbæz, Saxon.] The day last past;
the day next before to-day.
To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow,
Creeps in this petty pace from day to day,
To the last syllable of recorded time;
And all our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusty death. Shaksp. Macbeth.
We are but of yesterday, and know nothing, because our days upon earth are a shadow. Job viii. 9.
You are both fluid, chang'd since yesterday;
Next day repairs but ill last day's decay;
Nor are, although the river keep the name,
Yesterday's waters and to-day's the same. Doune.
If yesterday could be recall'd again,
E'en now would I conclude my happy reign. Dryden.
Yesterday was set apart as a day of publick thanksgiving for the late extraordinary successes. Addison.
Mrs. Simper sends complaint in your yesterday's Spectator.
Addison's Spectator.
Naked from the womb
We yesterday came forth; and in the tomb
Naked again we must to-morrow lie:
Born to lament, to labour, and to die. Prior.
YE'STERDAY. adv. On the day last past.
Martius gave us yesterday a representation of the empire of the Turks, with no small vigour of words. Bacon.
YE'STERNIGHT. n. f. The night before this night.
YE'STERNIGHT. adv. On the night last past.
Eleven hours I've spent to write it over;
For yesternight by Carethy was it sent me. Shaksp. R. III.
The distribution of this conference was made by Eupolis
yesternight. Bacon.
YET. conjunct. [gýt, zet, zeta, Saxon.] Nevertheless; notwithstanding; however.
They had a king was more than him before;
But yet a king, where they were sought the more. Daniel.
Though such men have lived never so much upon the reserve; yet if they be observed to have a particular fondness for persons noted for any sin, it is ten to one but there was a communication in the sin, before there was so in affection. South.
The heathens would never suffer their gods to be reviled, which yet were no gods; and shall it be allowed to any man to make a mock of him that made heaven and earth? Tillot.
He is somewhat arrogant at his first entrance, and is too inquisitive through the whole tragedy; yet these imperfections being balanced by great virtues, they hinder not our compassion for his miseries. Dryden's Dufresny.
Let virtuosos in five years be writ,
Yet not one thought accuse thy toil of wit. Dryden.
YET. adv.
1. Beside; over and above.
This furnishes us with yet one more reason, why our Saviour lays such a particular stress on acts of mercy. Auterbury.
2. Still; the state still remaining the same.
They attest facts they had heard while they were yet heathens; and had they not found reason to believe them, they would still have continued heathens, and made no mention of them in their writings. Addison.
3. Once again.
Yet, yet a moment, one dim ray of light,
Indulge, dread chaos and eternal night. Pope's Dunciad.

YIE

At this time; so soon; hitherto: with a negative before it.
Thales being asked when a man should marry, said, young men not yet; old men, not at all. Bacon.
5. At least; at all. Noting uncertainty or indetermination.
A man that would form a comparison betwixt Quintilian's declamations, if yet they be Quintilian's, and the orations of Tully, would be in danger of forfeiting his discretion. Baker.
6. It notes increase or extension of the sense of the words to which it is joined.
Shake not his hour-glass, when his hasty sand
Is ebbing to the last:
A little longer, yet a little longer,
And nature drops him down without your sin,
Like mellow fruit without a winter storm. Dryden.
Yet a few days, and those which now appear
In youth and beauty like the blooming year,
In life's swift scene shall change. Dryden.
7. Still; in a new degree.
He that takes from a thief, that which the thief took from an honest man, and keeps it to himself, is the wicked thief of the two, by how much the rapine is made yet blacker by the pretence of piety and justice. L'Estrange.
8. Even; after all. A kind of emphatical addition to a negative.
If any man neglect his duty, his fault must not be ascribed to the rule appointed, neither yet to the whole church. Whig.
Men may not too rashly believe the confessions of witches, nor yet the evidence against them; for the witches themselves are imaginative, and people are credulous, and ready to im-pute accidents and natural operations to witchcraft. Bacon.
Nor yet amidst this joy and brightest morn
Was absent, after all his mischief done,
The prince of darkness. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.
9. Hitherto.
Hope beginning here, with a trembling expectation of things far removed, and as yet but only heard of, endeth with real and actual fruition of that which no tongue can express. Hook.
YEVEN. for given.
Wants not a fourth grace to make the dance even?
Let that room to my lady be yeven;
She shall be a grace,
To fill the fourth place,
And reign with the rest in heaven. Spenser.
YEW. n. f. [y, Saxon; yew, Welsh.] This is often written eyeb; but the former orthography is at once nearer to the sound and the derivation. See FUCHS. A tree of tough wood.
It hath amentaceous flowers, which consist of many apices, for the most part shaped like a mushroom, and are barren; but the embryos, which are produced at remote distances on the same tree, do afterward become hollow bell-shaped berries, which are full of juice, and include seeds somewhat like acorns, having, as it were, a little cup to each. Miller.
The hooter yew, the broad-leav'd yeanore,
The barren plantane, and the walnut found;
The myrrhe, that her foul sin doth still deplore,
Alder the owner of all waterish ground. Fairfax.
Slips of yew,
Sliver'd in the moon's eclipse. Shaksp. Macbeth.
They would bind me here
Unto the body of a dismal yew. Shaksp. Titus Andronicus.
He drew,
And almost join'd the horns of the tough yew. Dryden.
The distinguish'd yew is ever seen,
Unchang'd his branch, and permanent his green. Prior.
YEWEN. adj. [from yew] Made of the wood of yew.
His stiff arms to stretch with yewen bow,
And manly legs still passing to and fro. Hubbard's Tale.
YEWRE. adv. [yeppe, Saxon.] Together.
TO YIELD. v. a. [gelban, Saxon, to pay.]
1. To produce; to give in return for cultivation or labour.
When thou tillest the ground, it shall not henceforth yield unto thee her strength. Gen. iv. 12.
Strabo tells us the mines at Carthage yielded the Romans, per diem, to the value of twenty-five thousand drachms, eight hundred and seven pounds five shillings and ten pence. Arbutnot.
2. To produce in general.
He makes milch kine yield blood. Shaksp. Job xxiv. 5.
The wilderness yieldeth food for them.
All the substances of an animal, fed even with acceftent substances, yield by fire nothing but alkaline salts. Arbutnot.
3. To afford; to exhibit.
Philodea would needs have her glove, and not without so mighty a lout as that face could yield. Sidney.
The mind of man desireth evermore to know the truth, according to the most infallible certainty which the nature of things can yield. Hooker.
If you take the idea of white, which one parcel of snow yielded yesterday to your sight, and another idea of white from another parcel of snow you see to-day, and put them together in your mind, they run into one, and the idea of whiteness is not at all increased. Locke.

YOK

4. To give as claimed of right.
I the praise
Yield thee, so well thou hast this day purvey'd. Milton.
5. To allow; to permit.
I yield it just, said Adam, and submit. Milton.
Life is but air;
That yields a passage to the whistling sword,
And closes when 'tis gone. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
6. To emit; to expire.
Often did I strive
To yield the ghost; but still the envious flood
Kept in my soul, and would not let it forth
To find the empty, vast and wand'ring air. Shak. Rich. III.
He gathered up his feet into the bed, and yielded up the ghost. Gen. xlix. 33.
7. To resign; to give up.
He not yielding over to old age his country delights, especially of hawking, was at that time, following a merlin, brought to see this injury offered unto us. Sidney.
Thus I have yielded up into your hand
The circle of my glory. Shaksp. King John.
She to realities yield all her shows.
Tis the pride of man which is the spring of this evil, and an unwillingness to yield up their own opinions. Watts.
8. To surrender.
The enemies sometimes offered unto the soldiers, upon the walls, great rewards, if they would yield up the city, and sometimes threatened them as fast. Knolles.
They laugh, as if to them I had quitted all,
At random yielded up to their misrule. Milton.
TO YIELD. v. n.
1. To give up the conquest; to submit.
He yields not in his fall;
But fighting dies, and dying kills withal. Daniel.
All is not lost: immortal hate,
And courage never to submit or yield. Milton.
If the inspiring and expiring organ of any animal be stopp'd, it suddenly yields to nature, and dies. Watson's Angler.
There he saw the fainting Grecians yield,
And here the trembling Trojans quit the field,
Pursu'd by fierce Achilles. Dryden.
2. To comply with any person.
Considering this present age so full of tongue, and weak of brain, behold we yield to the stream thereof. Hooker.
I see a yielding in the looks of France:
Mark, how they whisper. Shaksp. King John.
This supernatural soliciting, if ill,
Why hath it given me earnest of success?
If good, why do I yield to that suggestion,
Whose horrid image doth upfix my hair? Shaksp. K. Lear.
With her much fair speech she caused him to yield. Provo.
The Jews have agreed to desire thee that thou wouldst bring down Paul; but do not thou yield unto them. Acts xxiii. 21.
3. To comply with things.
There could be no secure peace, except the Lacedemonians yielded to those things, which being granted, it would be no longer in their power to hurt the Athenians. Bacon.
If much converse
These satiate, to short absence I could yield. Milton.
4. To concede; to admit; to allow; not to deny.
If we yield that there is a God, and that this God is almighty and just, it cannot be avoided but that, after this life ended, he administers justice unto men. Hakewill.
5. To give place as inferior in excellence or any other quality.
The fight of Achilles and Cygnus, and the fray betwixt the Lapithæ and Centaurs, yield to no other part of this poet. Dry.
Tell me in what more happy fields
The thistle springs, to which the lily yields? Pope.
YIELDER. n. f. [from yield.] One who yields.
Briars and thorns at their apparel snatch
Some sleeves, some hats; from yielders all things catch. Shak.
Some guard these traitors to the block of death,
Treason's true bed, and yield up of breath. Shak. Hen. IV.
YOKE. n. f. [geoc, Sax. jock, Dutch; jugum, Lat. joug, Fr.]
1. The bandage placed on the neck of draught oxen.
Bring a red heifer, wherein is no blemish, and upon which never came yoke. Numb. xix. 2.
A yearling bullock to thy name shall smoke,
Untam'd, unconscious of the galling yoke. Pope.
2. A mark of servitude; slavery.
Our country links beneath the yoke;
It weeps, it bleeds. Shaksp. Macbeth.
In bands of iron fetter'd you shall be;
An easier yoke than what you put on me. Dryd. Aurengz.
3. A chain; a link; a bond.
This yoke of marriage from us both remove,
Where two are bound to draw, though neither love. Dryd.
4. A couple; two; a pair.
Those that accuse him in his intent towards our wives, are a yoke of his discarded men. Shaksp. Dryden's En.
His lands a hundred yoke of oxen till'd. Dryden's En.
A yoke

YOR

- A yoke of mules outgoes a yoke of oxen; when set to work at the same time; for mules are swifter. Broome.
- To Yoke. v. a. [from the noun.]
- To bind by a yoke to a carriage.
This States promised to do, if he alone would yoke together two brazen-hoofed bulls, and, plowing the ground, sow dragons teeth. L'Estrange.
Four milk-white bulls, the Thracian use of old, Were yoked to draw his car of burnish'd gold. Dryden.
  - To join or couple with another.
My name
Be yoked with his that did betray the best. Shakespeare.
Cassius, you are yoked with a lamb,
That carries anger as the flint bears fire. Shak. Jul. Caesar.
Seek not in Latian bands to yoke
Our fair Lavinia. Dryden's Æn.
  - To enslave; to subdue.
These are the arms
With which he yoketh your rebellious necks, Razeth your cities. Shakespeare.
  - To restrain; to confine.
Men marry not; but chuse rather a libertine single life, than to be yoked in marriage. Bacon.
The words and promises, that yoke
The conqueror, are quickly broke. Hudibras.
Xerxes, the liberty of Greece to yoke,
Over Hellepont bridg'd his way. Milton.
Yo'KE-ELM. n. f. A tree. Answorth.
Yo'KEFELLOW. n. f. [yoke and fellow, or mate.]
Yo'KEMATE. n. f. [yoke and fellow, or mate.]
  - Companion in labour.
Yokefellows in arms,
Let us to France. Shak.peare's Henry V.
  - Mate; fellow.
You cannot think me fit
To be th' yokefellow of your wit,
Nor take one of so mean deserts
To be the partner of your parts. Hudibras.
Before Toulon thy yoke-mate lies,
Where all the live-long night he sighs. Stepney.
Those who have most distinguished themselves by railing at the sex, very often chuse one of the most worthless for a companion and yokefellow. Addison's Spectator.
  - YOLD, for yielded. Obsolete. Spenser.
  - YOLK. n. f. [See YELK.] The yellow part of an egg.
Nature hath provided a large yolk in every egg, a great part whereof remaineth after the chicken is hatched; and, by a channel made on purpose, serves instead of milk to nourish the chick for a considerable time. Ray on the Creation.
  - YON. adv. [yeon, Saxon.] Being at a distance within YOND. adv. view.
  - YONDER. adv. view.
Madam, yond young fellow swears he will speak with you. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
Good mother, do not marry me to yon fool. Shakespeare.
Would you not laugh to meet a great counsellor of state in a flat cap, his gloves under his girdle, and yond haberdasher in a velvet gown furred with fables? Ben. Johnson's Discoveries.
Tigranes, being encamped upon a hill with four hundred thousand men, discovered the army of the Romans, being not above fourteen thousand, marching towards him: he made himself merry with it, and said, yonder men are too many for an ambassage, and too few for a fight. Bacon's Natural History.
For proof look up,
And read thy lot in yon celestial sign. Milton's Parad. Lost.
Yon flow'ry arbors, yonder allies green. Milton.
Let other swains attend the rural care,
But nigh yon mountain let me tune my lays. Pope.
  - YON. adv. At a distance within view. It is used when YOND. adv. we direct the eye from another thing to the object.
  - The fringed curtains of thine eyes advance,
And say what thou see'st yond. Shakespeare's Tempest.
First, and chieftest, with thee bring Him that you foars on golden wing,
Guiding the fiery-wheeled throne,
The cherub, contemplation. Milton.
Yonder are two apple-women scolding. Arbutnot and Pope.
  - YOND. adj. [I know not whence derived.] Mad; furious:
perhaps transported with rage; under alienation of mind, in which sense it concurs with the rest.
Then like a lion, which hath long time fought
His robbed whelps, and at the last them found
Amongst the shepherd swains, then waxeth wood and yond;
So fierce he laid about him. Fairy Queen.
Nor those three brethren, Lombards, fierce and yond. Fairy.
  - YORE, or of Yore. adv. [yeogara, Saxon.]
1. Long.
Witness the burning altars, which he swore,
And, guilty, heavens of his bold perjury;
Which though he hath polluted oft and yore,
Yet I to them for judgment just do fly. Fairy Queen.

YOU

- Of old time; long ago.
Thee bright-eyed Vesta long of yore
To solitary Saturn bore. Milton.
There liv'd, as authors tell, in days of yore,
A widow somewhat old, and very poor. Dryden.
In times of yore an ancient baron liv'd;
Great gifts bestow'd, and great respect receiv'd.
The dev'l was piqu'd such faintship to behold;
And long'd to tempt him, like good Job of old;
But Satan now is wiser than of yore,
And tempts by making rich, not making poor. Pope.
- You. pron. [cop, iuh, Saxon: the accusative of ge, ye.]
- The oblique case of ye.
Ye have heard of the dispensation of the grace of God,
which is given me to you ward. Eph. iii. 2.
I thought to show you
How easy 'twas to die, by my example,
And hanfel fate before you. Dryden's Cleomenes.
- It is used in the nominative; and though first introduced by corruption, is now established.
You nimble lightnings, dart your blinding flames
Into her scornful eyes. Shakespeare's King Lear.
- It is the ceremonial word for the second person singular, and is always used, except in solemn language.
Madam, the fates withstand, and you
Are destin'd Hymen's willing victim too. Pope.
- It is used indefinitely, as the French on.
We pass'd by what was one of those rivers of burning matter: this looks, at a distance, like a new-plowed land; but as you come near it, you see nothing but a long heap of heavy disjointed clouds. Addison on Italy.
- YOUNG. adj. [young, yeong, Saxon; jong, Dutch.]
- Being in the first part of life; not old.
Guests should be interlarded, after the Persian custom, by ages young and old. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
He woos both high and low, both rich and poor,
Both young and old. Shakespeare.
There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st,
But in his motion like an angel sings,
Still quiring to the young-cy'd cherubims. Shakespeare.
I firmly am resolv'd
Not to bestow my youngst daughter,
Before I have a husband for the elder. Shakespeare.
Thou old and true Menenius,
Thy tears are saltier than a younger man's,
And venomous to thine eyes. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
He ordain'd a lady for his prize,
Generally praiseful, fair and young, and skill'd in house-wiferies. Chapman.
- In timorous deer he hanfels his young paws,
And leaves the rugged bear for firmer claws. Cowley.
Nor need'st by thy daughter to be told,
Though new thy spry blood with age be cold,
Thou hast been young. Dryden.
When we say a man is young, we mean that his age is yet but a small part of that which usually men attain to: and when we denominate him old, we mean that his duration is run out almost to the end of that which men do not usually exceed.
It will be but an ill example to prove, that dominion, by God's ordination, belonged to the eldest son; because Jacob the youngest here had it.
From earth they rear him struggling now with death,
And Nestor's youngest stops the vents of breath. Pope.
- Ignorant; weak.
Come, elder brother, thou art too young in this. Shakespeare.
- It is sometimes applied to vegetable life.
There be trees that bear best when they begin to be old, as almonds; the cause is, for that all trees that bear must have an oily fruit; and young trees have a more watry juice, and less concocted. Bacon.
- YOUNG. n. f. The offspring of animals collectively.
The hedge-sparrow fed the cuckoo so long,
That it had its head bit off by its young. Shakespeare's King Lear.
So many days my ewes have been with young;
So many weeks ere the poor fools will year. Shakespeare.
The eggs disclos'd their callow young.
The reason why birds are oviparous, and lay eggs, but do not bring forth their young alive, is because there might be more plenty. Milton.
Not to her young; for their unequal line
Was heroes make, half human, half divine;
Their earthly mold obnoxious was to fate,
Th' immortal part assum'd immortal state. Dryden.
Those insects, for whose young nature hath not made provision of sufficient sustenance, do themselves gather and lay up in store for them. Ray on the Creation.
- YOUNGISH. adj. [from young.] Somewhat young.
She let her second room to a very genteel youngish man. Tat.
- YOUNGLING. n. f. [from young; yeongling, Saxon.] Any creature in the first part of life. More

YOU

- More dear unto their God, than younglings to their dam. Fairy Queen.
- Youngling, thou canst not love so dear as I.—
—Grey beard, thy love doth freeze. Shakespeare.
When we perceive that bats have teats, it is not unreasonable to infer, they suckle their younglings with milk. Broton.
Encourag'd thus she brought her younglings nigh. Dryden.
The stately beast the two Tyrreide bred,
Snatch'd from his dam, and the tame youngling fed. Dryden.
- YOUNGLY. adv. [from young.]
- Early in life.
Say we read lectures to you,
How youngly he began to serve his country,
How long continu'd, and what stock he sprang of. Shakespeare.
  - Ignorantly; weakly.
YOUNGLY. adv. [from young.] A young person. In con-
YOUNGER. adv. tempt.
How like a younger or a prodigal
The scarfed bark parts from her native bay,
Hugg'd and embraced by the trumpet wind. Shakespeare.
What, will you make a younger of me? shall I not take mine ease in mine inn, but I shall so have my pocket pick'd.
Shakespeare's Henry IV.
  - See how the morning opes her golden gates,
And takes her farewell of the glorious sun:
How well resembles it the prime of youth,
Trim'd like a younger prancing to his love. Shakespeare.
Fame tells, by age fame reverend grown,
That Phœbus gave his chariot to his son;
And whilst the younger from the path declines,
Admiring the strange beauty of the signs,
Proud of his charge, he drove the fiery horse,
And would outdo his father in his course. Creech.
The younger, who at nine and three,
Drinks with his sisters milk and tea,
From breakfast reads till twelve o'clock,
Burnet and Heylin, Hobbes and Locke. Prior.
  - YOUNGTH. n. f. [from young.] Youth. Obsolete.
The mournful muse in mirth now lift ne mask,
As she was wont in youngth and summer days. Spenser.
  - YOUN. pronoun. [cooper, Saxon.]
  - Belonging to you. It is used properly when we speak of more than one, and ceremoniously and customarily when to only one.
Either your unparagoned mistress is dead, or she's outprized
by a trifle. Shakespeare.
  - YOUR is used in an indeterminate sense.
Every true man's apparel fits your thief: if it be too little for your thief, your true man thinks it big enough. If it be too big for your thief, your thief thinks it little enough; so every true man's apparel fits your thief. Shakespeare.
There is a great affinity between coins and poetry, and your medallist and critic are much nearer related than the world imagine. Addison on ancient Medals.
A disagreement between these seldom happens, but among your antiquaries and schoolmen. Fenton on the Clafficks.
  - YOURS is used when the substantive goes before or is understood; as this is your book, this book is yours.
Pray for this man and for his issue,
Whose heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave,
And beggar'd yours for ever. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
That done, our day of marriage shall be yours,
One feast, one house, one mutual happiness. Shakespeare.
This kiss, if it durst speak,
Would stretch thy spirits up into the air:
Conceive and fare thee well.—
—Yours in the ranks of death.—Shakespeare's King Lear.
He is forsworn, if e'er those eyes of yours
Behold another day break in the east. Shakespeare.
While the sword this monarchy secures,
'Tis manag'd by an abler hand than yours. Dryden.
My wealth, my city and myself are yours. Dryden.
It is my employment to revive the old of past ages to the present, as it is yours to transmit the young of the present to the future. Pope.
  - YOURSSELF. n. f. [your and self.] You, even you; ye, not others.
If it stand as you yourself still do,
Within the eye of honour; be assur'd,
My purse, my person, my extremest means,
Lie all unlock'd to your occasions. Shakespeare.
O heav'ns!
If you do love old men, if your sweet sway
Allow obedience, if yourselves are old,
Make it your cause. Shakespeare's King Lear.

YUX

- YOUTH. n. f. [yeoguth, Saxon.]
- The part of life succeeding to childhood and adolescence; the time from fourteen to twenty eight.
But could youth last, and love still breed,
Had joys no date, and age no need;
Then these delights my mind might move,
To live with thee, and be thy love. Shakespeare.
See how the morning opes her golden gates,
And takes her farewell of the glorious sun;
How well resembles it the prime of youth,
Trim'd like a younger, prancing to his love. Shakespeare.
His starry helm unbuckled show'd him prime
In manhood, where youth ended. Milton.
The solidity, quantity, and strength of the aliment is to be proportioned to the labour or quantity of muscular motion, which in youth is greater than any other age. Arbutnot.
  - A young man.
Siward's son,
And many unrough youths even now,
Protest their firm of manhood. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
If this were seen,
The happiest youth viewing his progress through,
What perils past, what croffes to ensue,
Would shut the book and sit him down and die. Shakespeare.
About him exercis'd heroid games
Th' unarmed youth of heav'n. Milton.
O'er the lofty gate his art emboss'd
Androgeos' death, and off'rings to his ghost;
Sev'n youths from Athens yearly sent, to meet
The fate appointed by revengful Crete. Dryden.
The pious chief
A hundred youths from all his train elects,
And to the Latian court their course directs. Dryden.
  - Young men. Collectively.
As it is fit to read the best authors to youth first, so let them be of the openest and clearest; as Livy before Sallust, Sidney before Donne. Ben. Johnson.
The graces put not more exactly on
Th' attire of Venus, when the ball she won,
Than that young beauty by thy care is dress'd,
When all your youth prefers her to the rest. Waller.
  - YOUTHFUL. adj. [youth and full.]
  - Young.
Our army is dispers'd already:
Like youthful steers unyok'd they took their course,
East, west, north, south. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
There, in a heap of slain, among the rest,
Two youthful knights they found beneath a load oppress'd
Of slaughter'd foes. Dryden.
  - Suitable to the first part of life.
Here be all the pleasures
That fancy can beget on youthful thoughts,
When the fresh blood grows lively, and returns
Brisk as the April buds in primrose season. Milton.
In his years were seen,
A youthful vigour and autumnal green. Dryden.
The nymph surveys him, and beholds the grace
Of charming features, and a youthful face. Pope.
  - Vigorous as in youth.
How is a good Christian animated by a steadfast belief of an everlasting enjoyment of perfect felicity, such as, after millions of millions of ages is still youthful and flourishing, and inviting as at the first? no wrinkles in the face, no grey hairs on the head of eternity. Bentley.
  - YOUTHFULLY. adv. [from youthful.] In a youthful manner.
YOUTHLY. adj. [from youth.] Young; early in life. Obsolete.
True be thy words, and worthy of thy praise,
That warlike seats dost highest glorify,
Therein have I spent all my youthly days,
And many battles fought and many frays. Fairy Queen.
  - YOUTHY. adj. [from youth.] Young; youthful. A bad word.
The scribler had not genius to turn my age, as indeed I am an old maid, into raillery, for affecting a youthier turn than is consistent with my time of day. Spektor.
  - YRIGHT. part. [y and right, from pitch.] Fixed.
That same wicked wight
His dwelling has low in an hollow cave,
Far underneath a craggy cliff yright,
Dark, doleful, dreary, like a greedy grave. Spenser.
  - YUCK. n. f. [yuck, Dutch.] Ich.
  - YULE. n. f. [geol, yeol, yehul, Saxon.] The time of Christmas.
  - YUX. n. f. [yeox, Saxon.] The hiccough.

ZE A

Z, is found in the Saxon alphabets, set down by Grammarians, but is read in no word originally Teutonic: its sound is uniformly that of an hard S.

ZA'FFAR. } n. f.
ZA'FFIR. }

Powder the calx of cobalt, very fine, and mix it with three times its weight of powdered flints, this being wetted with common water, the whole concretes into a solid mass called zaffre, which from its hardness has been mistaken for a native mineral.

Cobalt being sublimed, the flowers are of a blue colour; these, German mineralists call zaffir.

The artificers in glass tinge their glass blue with that dark mineral zaphara.

ZA'NY. n. f. [Probably of zanai.] The contraction of Giovanni or fanna, a scoff, according to Skinner. One employed to raise laughter by his gestures, actions and speeches; a merry Andrew; a buffoon.

Some carrytale, some pleafeman, some slight zany,
Some mumblenews, some trencher knight, some Dick,
Told our intents before.

Then write that I may follow, and so be Thy echo, thy debtor, thy foil, thy zany,
I shall be thought, if mine like thine I shape,
All the world's lion, though I be thy ape.

Oh, great restorer of the good old stage,
Preacher at once, and zany of thy age.

ZA'NICH. n. f. Zarnich is a solid substance in which orpiment is frequently found; and it approaches to the nature of orpiment, but without its lustre and foliated texture. The common kinds of zarnich are green and yellow; and to this we owe the distinction of orpiment into these colours, though there is no such substance as green orpiment. Zarnich contains a large quantity of arsenic in it.

ZEAL. n. f. [zēlos, zelos, Latin.] Passionate ardour for any person or cause.

This present age, wherein zeal hath drowned charity and skill; meekness will not now suffer any man to marvel, whatsoever he shall hear reproved by whomsoever.

If I had had time to have made new liveries, I would have bestowed the thousand pound I borrowed of you: but it is no matter, this poor show doth better; this doth infer the zeal I had to see him.

O Cromwell, Cromwell!
Had I but serv'd my God with half the zeal
I serv'd my king, he would not in mine age
Have left me naked to mine enemies.

Among the seraphims
Abdiel, than whom none with more zeal ador'd
The Deity, and divine commands obey'd,
Stood up, and in a flame of zeal severe,
The current of his fury thus oppos'd.

Zeal, the blind conductor of the will.
She with such a zeal the cause embrac'd,
As women, where they will, are all in haste;
The father, mother, and the kin beside,
Were overborne by the fury of the tide.

The princes applaud with a furious joy,
And the king seiz'd a flambeau with zeal to destroy.
Seriousness and zeal in religion is natural to the English.

Good men often blemish the reputation of their piety by over-acting some things in their religion; by an indiscreet zeal about things wherein religion is not concerned.

True zeal seems not to be any one single affection of the soul; but rather a strong mixture of many holy affections; rather a gracious constitution of the whole mind, than any one particular grace, swaying a devout heart, and filling it with all pious intentions; all not only uncounterfeit, but most fervent.

When the sins of a nation have provoked God to forsake it, he suffers those to concur in the most pernicious counsels for enslaving conscience, who pretend to the greatest zeal for the liberty of it.

This rebellion has discovered to his majesty, who have espoused his interests with zeal or indifference.

A scorn of flattery and a zeal for truth.

ZEALOT. n. f. [zeloteur, French; ζηλωτης.] One passionately ardent in any cause. Generally used in dispraise.

The fury of zealots, intestine bitterness and division were the greatest occasion of the last fatal destruction of Jerusalem.

Are not those men too often the greatest zealots who are most notoriously ignorant? true zeal should always begin with true knowledge, and thence proceed to an unwearied passion, for what it once knows to be worthy of such passion.

No wonder that so many of these deluded zealots have been engaged in a cause which they at first abhorred, and have with-ed or acted for the success of an enterprise, that might have ended in the extirpation of the protestant religion.

ZEALOUS. adj. [from zeal.] Ardently passionate in any cause. Our hearts are right with God, and our intentions pious, if we act our temporal affairs with a desire no greater than our necessity, and in actions of religion we be zealous, active, and operative, so far as prudence will permit.

This day, at height of noon, came to my sphere,
A spirit, zealous, as he seem'd to know

More of the Almighty's works.

We should be not only devout towards God, but zealous towards men; endeavouring by all prudent means to recover them out of those snares of the devil, whereby they are taken captive.

It is not at all good to be zealous against any person, but only against their crimes. It is better to be zealous for things than for persons: but then it should be only for good things; a rule that does certainly exclude all manner of zeal for ill things, all manner of zeal for little things.

Being instructed only in the general, and zealous in the main design; and as finite beings, not admitted into the secrets of government, the last resorts of providence, or capable of discovering the final purposes of God, they must be sometimes ignorant of the means conducing to those ends in which alone they can oppose each other.

ZEALOUSLY. adv. [from zealous.] With passionate ardour. Thy care is fixt, and zealously attends,
To fill thy odorous lamp with deeds of light,
And hope that reaps not flame.

To enter into a party as into an order of friars, with so resigned an obedience to superiors, is very unsuitable with the civil and religious liberties we so zealously assert.

ZEALOUSNESS. n. f. [from zealous.] The quality of being zealous.

ZE'CHIN. n. f. [So named from zecha, a place in Venice where the mint is settled for coinage.] A gold coin worth about nine shillings sterling.

ZEDO'ARY. n. f. [zed-aire, French.] A spicy plant, somewhat like ginger in its leaves, but of a sweet scent.

ZED. n. f. The name of the letter z.

Thou whoreforn zed, thou unnecessary letter.

ZE'NITH. n. f. [Arabick.] The point over head opposite to the nadir.

Fond men! if we believe that men do live
Under the zenith of both frozen poles,
Though none come thence, advertisement to give,
Why bear we not the like faith of our souls?

These seasons are designed by the motions of the sun, when that approaches nearest our zenith, or vertical point, we call it summer.

ZE'PHYR. } n. f. [zephyrus, Latin.] The west wind; and poetically any calm soft wind.
ZE'PHYRUS. }

They are as gentle
As zephyrs blowing below the violet.

Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
Zephyr, you shall see a youth with a merry countenance, holding in his hand a swan with wings displayed, as about
to sing.

Forth rush the levent and the ponent winds,
Eurus and Zephyr.

Mild as when Zephyrus on Flora breathes.
Their every musick wakes,

Whence blending all the sweeten'd zephyr springs.

ZEST. n. f.
1. The peel of an orange squeezed into wine.
2. A relish; a taste added.

To ZEST. v. a. To heighten by an additional relish.

ZET'TICK. adj. [from ζητω.] Proceeding by enquiry.

ZET'EMA. n. f. [from ζηωμαι.] A figure in Grammar, when a verb agreeing with divers nouns, or an adjective with divers substantives, is referred to one expressly, and to the other by supplement, as lust overcame shame, boldness fear, and madness reason.

ZOC'LE. n. f. [In architecture.] A small sort of stand or pedestal, being a low square piece or member, serving to support a busto, statue, or the like, that needs to be raised; also a low square member serving to support a column, instead of a pedestal, base, or plinth.

ZODIACK. n. f. [zodiaque, French; ζωδιακος, ix των ζωνων, the living creatures, the figures of which are painted on it in globes.] The track of the sun through the twelve signs; a great circle of the sphere, containing the twelve signs.

The golden sun salutes the morn,
And having gilt the ocean with his beams,
Gallops the zodiack in his glitt'ring coach.

Years he number'd scarce thirteen,
When fates turn'd cruel;
Yet three fill'd zodiacks had he been

The stage's jewel.

By his side,
As in a glitt'ring zodiack hung the sword,
Satan's dire dread; and in his hand the spear.

It exceeds even their absurdity to suppose the zodiack and planets to be efficient of, and antecedent to themselves, or to exert any influences before they were in being.

Here in a shrine that cast a dazzling light,
Sat fixt in thought the mighty Stagyrite;
His sacred head a radiant zodiack crown'd,
And various animals his sides furround.

ZONE. n. f. [ζωνη, zona, Latin.]
1. A girdle.

The middle part
Girt like a flarry zone his waist, and round
Skirted his loins, and thighs, with downy gold
And colours dipp'd in heav'n.

An embroider'd zone furrounds her waist.
Thy statues, Venus, though by Phidias' hands
Design'd immortal, yet no longer stands;
The magick of thy shining zone is past,
But Salisbury's garter shall for ever last.

Scarce could the goddess from her nymph be known,
But by the crescent and the golden zone.

2. A division of the earth.

The whole surface of the earth is divided into five zones: the first is contained between the two tropicks, and is called the torrid zone. There are two temperate zones, and two frigid zones. The northern temperate zone is terminated by the tropick of Cancer and the arctic polar circle: the southern temperate zone is contained between the tropick of Capricorn and the polar circle: the frigid zones are circumscribed by the polar circles, and the poles are in their centers.

True love is still the same: the torrid zones,
And those more frigid ones,
It must not know:

For love grown cold or hot,
Is lust or friendship, not
The thing we show;

For that's a flame would die,
Held down or up too high:
Then think I love more than I can express,
And would love more, could I but love thee less.

As five zones th' ethereal regions bind,
Five correspondent are to earth assign'd:
The sun, with rays directly darting down,
Fires all beneath, and fries the middle zone.

3. Circuit; circumference.
Scarce the fun
Hath finish'd half his journey, and scarce begins
His other half in the great zone of heav'n.

ZOO'GRAPHER. n. f. [ζωον and γραφω.] One who describes the nature, properties, and forms of animals.

One kind of locust stands not prone, or a little inclining upward; but a large erectness, elevating the two fore legs, and sustaining itself in the middle of the other four, by zoo-graphers called the prophet and praying locust.

ZOO'GRAPHY. n. f. [of ζωον and γραφω.] A description of the forms, natures, and properties of animals.

If we contemplate the end of the effect, its principal final cause being the glory of its maker, this leads us into divinity; and for its subordinate, as it is designed for alimental sustenance to living creatures, and medicinal uses to man, we are thereby conducted into zoography.

ZOO'LOGY. n. f. [of ζωον and λογω.] A treatise concerning living creatures.

ZOO'PHYTE. n. f. [ζωοφυτον, of ζωον and φυτον.] Certain vegetables or substances which partake of the nature both of vegetables and animals.

ZOO'PHORICK Column. n. f. [In architecture.] A statuary column, or a column which bears or supports the figure of an animal.

ZOO'PHORUS. n. f. [ζωοφορος.] A part between the architraves and cornice, so called on account of the ornaments carved on it, among which were the figures of animals.

ZOO'TOMIST. n. f. [of ζωοτομία.] A dissector of the bodies of brute beasts.

ZOO'TOMY. n. f. [ζωτομία, of ζωον and τεμνω.] Dissection of the bodies of beasts.
